—Robert Berry's well at Corunna was drugged with paris green, and next morning Mr. Berry's entire family were taken ill shortly after partaking of the water. A number of others who use the water from the Berry well were also taken sick. Officers followed a clew, which led to the residence of a neighbor with whom they had been at swords' points for some time, and they were arrested and taken to jail.

—At the session of the Grand Lodge of Odd Fellows, at Bay City, the Grand Master reported thirteen lodges instituted during the year and one reinstated. Two lodges at Grand Rapids were consolidated. Lodges Nos. 85 and 166 surrendered their charters during the year. The Grand Master rendered thirteen decisions on important questions during the year. Three lodges were burned out during the year. Three dispensations were granted. The Grand Lodge sustained two appeals against lodge decisions—one against Sprague Lodge, No. 13, which expelled Johnston Parsons for slander, and the other against Fairfield Lodge, No. 269, which expelled Robert Johnston. The committee appointed on endowment or insurance reported that the Grand Lodge had no authority to adopt any scheme of insurance or endowment, and that the Sovereign Grand Lodge steadily refused to permit it. The Committee on Appeals reported six cases of appeal, all adversely to lodges. Grand Secretary E. H. Whitney submitted his report: Number of members in December, 1884, 17,183; gained during the year, 2,202; lost during the year, 2,017. Membership in December, 1885, 17,423; number of working lodges, 357; amount paid during the year for the relief of the sick and burial of the dead, $19,182.86. The Grand Secretary reported the number of members in Rebecca degree lodges in December, 1885, as 2,799; additions during the year, 388; losses during the year, 126; net gain, 262; number of lodges, 83; number not reported, 29. The resolution to relieve the lodges which suffered because of the Patriarchal Circle was referred to the Committee on Legislation. A communication complaining of the "soft snap" of the Representatives of the Sovereign Grand Lodge, and asking a reduction of mileage and per diem, was referred to the Committee on Legislation. The Grand Treasurer's report showed a balance on hand of $10,145.

THE JOURNAL.

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

The lumber lords, copper kings, iron dukes, coal counts, and other nobility, spend hundreds of thousands of dollars to keep up the tariff so that they can make the people pour a steady stream of golden wealth into their coffers for the sole purpose of enabling them to give the wage-workers "plenty of work and good wages." How kind that all is, is'nt it? There is nothing in this wicked world so unutterably beautiful as the efforts of these men to collect millions of money of the people so that they can bless the wage-workers with "plenty of work and good wages!" Consumers of lumber are taxed $2 a thousand on lumber to enable the workmen who make the lumber to get "good wages." How those laborers do roll in wealth and luxury! Tom Barry will tell you all about how they live on the fat of the land, and how disinterested Gov. Alger, Senator Palmer, and the other lumbermen are all in this. They haven't been able to save more than $3,000,000 or $4,000,000 apiece out of it. What a blessed thing it is for the wage-workers to have a tariff on lumber!—Lansing Journal.

The latest dodge for swindling has come to our notice. A sanctimonious individual appears, as agent for a society organized for the purpose of placing high-priced family bibles in every home in the country, without money and without price. Upon these terms he leaves a seventeen dollar family bible; he wants his horse fed, and a meal for himself, insisting on paying a fair cash price for the same, as ordered by his bible-spreading society. He must also take a receipt of the money paid by him, and a receipt is given. That piece of paper was sold to a banker for a $100 promissory note, which it now is.—Albion Mirror.

Miss Cleveland is becoming quite famous for her bon mots. Her last and best was enjoyed by a number of callers at the white house the other day. A gentleman from the west remarked to her "You hail from Buffalo, I believe, Miss Cleveland." "Yes," was the reply "we hail from Buffalo and we reign here."

President Cleveland has sent to Congress a ringing message, denying the right of the senate to demand the unofficial papers and memoranda of reasons for removal of republican officials.

MISSING LINKS.

An old beggar at Stirling, Scotland, knew the entire Bible by heart.

It is alleged by friends of Dr. Mary Walker that she has declined twelve offers of marriage.

Gassendi memorized 6,000 Latin verses, and daily recited 600 verses from different languages.

A Corsican boy learned 40,000 words, and could repeat them backward and forward without a mistake.

Chili has control of the Straits of Magellan, and the country called Patagonia is wiped off the map.

Nine-tenths of the lawyers, three-fourths of the physicians, five-sixths of the poets and two-thirds of the literary men use tobacco in some form.

"Detached" dog collars are the latest feminine folly. The dogs wear them in the morning, and then they are "detached" and worn by the lady in the afternoon.

A recent earthquake in France affected only the chalk formation of the earth's surface, and was neither heard or felt by men at work in the coal mines beneath.

Longfellow paid within a small amount of the total cost of production of his first volume of poems, and James Russell Lowell paid all the expenses of his first work.

"Poor Carlotta's" insanity is pronounced incurable by an eminent specialist who has been for some time her custodian. One of her hallucinations is that Maximilian is still alive and that he will soon be emperor of the entire world.

Julia Smith, the Connecticut woman who got fame by refusing to pay taxes to a Government that would not let her vote, remarks to those who predicted unhappiness from her marriage five years ago, aged 85, that she is extremely happy.

The practice of writing political sentiments on walls, benches, and other available public spots is common in Paris. They used to be directed mainly against aristocrats, but now the burden of denunciation is "Down with the filthy."

The Vicksburg newsboy, it is said, serves along the street with a timid air, almost whispers his request that you should invest in the morning paper. He steps off slowly as though he has plenty of time in which to cover his territory.

The men predominate in Mississippi, Vermont, Ohio, Kentucky, Delaware, Florida, West Virginia and Indiana, where the females are about 95 per cent of the males, and in Illinois, Wisconsin, Arkansas, Missouri and Iowa the percentage of females is from 90 to 95.

Gimlet-pointed screws have been regarded as an invention of the present generation, but the Worcester (Mass.) Gazette has found half a dozen of them bearing every mark of age, and evidently manufactured before screws were made by machinery, in a piano made at London in 1755.

The Lancaster Examiner has discovered two Bibles dating back to the middle of the sixteenth century, but it is surpassed by the Harrisburg Call, which has found in the possession of Mr. Joseph Miller, of Fisherville, a copy of Luther's translation of the Scripture published in 1522.

Miss Sweet, late Pension Agent at Chicago, writes in censure of some idle gossip: "I am not married—I never was married—I never expect to be. I am engaged, but it is strictly a business engagement that interests me, and until my new enterprise is perfectly and successfully established I shall have no time to think of matrimonial projects."

Somebody remembers that Morse once predicted that talking through a hundred miles of wire would become common, and that ocean steamers on a voyage would keep up communication electrically with the shore. The first prediction having come true, the second is hopefully regarded, though regarded as wild when made.

There is a negro boy in Marietta who can catch bees, yellow-jackets and bumblebees the same as any one else would catch flies, and they do not sting him. He often catches a bee and puts it in his mouth and keeps it there for some time. When he spits it out it flies off. Live yellow jackets put under his clothes crawl around and out at other places without stinging him.

"The pressing necessity for the new universal language," writes a correspondent, "was practically felt the other day by three poor Arabs who wandered up and down Liverpool for days without being able to find any one to understand them. One of them could say the words 'Africa and 'ship,' but tried them on in vain at shipping offices and elsewhere, and finally when quite destitute fell to weeping bitterly at his failure to make himself understood by a shopkeeper. There was not even a De Quincey at hand to quote Homer and give them cakes of opium which should end their distress. In the end a gentleman accosted them in their own language, and their troubles were at an end; but they would never have had a beginning if Volapuck had burst on the astonished world a little earlier."

In the great bank frauds trial at Vienna there was a sensation on the reading of a note written by Jauner on the eve of his suicide, in which he said: "Kuffler, with satanic power, has induced me to commit actions which bring ruin and death on me, and which I committed involuntarily, being quite insane. God alone knows my innocence. I ask every one to pardon an unfortunate man who was led by this terrible seducer into fraud and misfortune." Kuffler attributes this letter to Jauner's excitement, and alleges that he had Jauner's fullest confidence to the very last. Jauner's widow states that her husband on the eve of the catastrophe spoke of Kuffler as his "Satan," and one of the messengers of the Escompte Bank says he overheard Jauner and Kuffler talk a week before the catastrophe of escaping to America or England.

INCIPIENT CONSUMPTION.

Coughs, colds, bronchitis, &c., are all the results of neglect or exposure, and must have prompt and active remedies to remove them. Croup and whooping cough cause great suffering because an effective remedy is not at hand. Why, then, leave yourself and children exposed to danger and death, when HAMILTON'S COUGH BALSAM will relieve all of these and prevent diseases, such as pneumonia, inflammation of lungs, and consumption. All lung difficulties are removed by this remedy. Price 25 and 50 cts. per bottle.

Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

Now is the time your horses and cattle need attention. To prevent disease and tone up the system you will find Parmelee's Condition Powders unexcelled. Full pound 35 cts. Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton. 92 tf3

Wild Cherry and Tar.

Every body knows the virtues of Wild Cherry and Tar as a relief and cure for many affections of the Throat and Lungs, combined with these two ingredients are a few simple herbine remedies in the composition of Dr. Crosby's Cough and Lung Syrup curing at last the "cough that always have in the house, for Colds, Coughs, Croup, and Bronchitis. Price 50 cents and $1.00. Samples free. Sold by G. W. Crouter. 5

Register on Saturday.

Village election next Monday.

W. H. Carr and family returned home to-day.

Don't fail to attend the Post campfire Monday evening.

We understand that the Boyne Stntesman is to be enlarged next week.

L. G. Evans of Eastport, the stage driver of past years, gave us a call this morning.

A very fine exhibition of "gentlemen's jewel cases" at the Smith & Cooper millinery store.

Prof. Allen was employed as stenographer in two cases at the circuit court this term, just past.

He who complains of the weather we have had for the past few days, deserves to be banished to Siberia.

Henry Barth, the boiler maker of Charlevoix, has gone to Torch Lake, to overhaul the boilers of Cameron Bros.

Lon. Brooks, who has headquarters at Traverse City, has charge of 250 miles of wire of the W. U. Telegraph Company.

N. N. Card, of Clarion, made the JOURNAL a call this morning, while on his way home for a brief vacation from his school in Norwood.

It is not the beginning of the school year, and yet 60 new students entered the Agricultural College last week. President Willets says the halls are full to the rafters.

Every painter, and every person contemplating building a house, should call at Bartholomew's hardware store, and see the designs and plans for outside color, on exhibition.

Arthur Wilson met with an accident on Tuesday evening while acting as tonsor for himself, by which the debate in the young people's meeting was postponed, he being one of the disputants.

The G. A. R. Post have appointed a "Sutler," for the occasion of their coming entertainment, who will have on sale a full line of "sutler's goods." The patronage of all is solicited for the benefit of the post.

The occasion of Lawyer Fogg's frequent visits to Charlevoix, on "pressing" business, is now perfectly manifest. He was "courting," and had a "plea" to make, and a "suit" to win. The lady was befogged—but only in name.

The supper at the Newman House Tuesday evening, for the benefit of the Boy's Band, was one of the most successful efforts of the kind ever attempted in Charlevoix, netting the boys over $28 in cash, with tickets at the nominal sum of 15 cents.

Miss Francis E. Willard has selected some gospel and temperance songs, familiar tunes, 200 copies of which will be sent to any church or Sunday school. Address the publisher, Miss Laura Fixon, Albert Lea, Minn., enclosing 20 cents for postage.

After first providing for herself a home—buying a lot and building a house—Miss Ada Ackery has at last consented to take a husband to share the burdens and joys of life. Mr. Monty ought to consider himself fortunate in securing a wife with such ideas of business and economy.

Maj. Barton and wife have about made up their minds this would be a good headquarters for them. The major has never failed to make a success of anything he has put upon the stage here. Nevada was his last success; and in this he was ably assisted by his wife, who took a leading part. —Traverse Herald.

Mr. N. J. Perry, formerly of Oakland county, has located in Charlevoix in the practice of dentistry, and expects to remain permanently. At present his office is in Weed's drug store, where he will be pleased to meet all in need of dental work. His experience and past success enables him to guarantee satisfaction to all.

The Historical Society.

The society met in the spacious parlors of Mr. and Mrs. A. R. Upright. President Green being absent, vice-president Iddings presided, and announced the program as follows:

Duet—"The Fisherman," by W. A. Smith and Dr. Carlstein.

Select reading, "Alaska and the Aleuts," Al. Washburn.

Intermission.

Piano selection gracefully rendered by Mrs. Ella Smith.

Paper, "Isabella of Spain," by Mrs. O. S. Washburn. Comprehensive and concise in construction and perfect in rendition.

Piano solo, Miss Maggie Green.

Select poem from Carleton, Mrs. O. D. Wood.

The society were fortunate in having present Mr. John Saveland, of Milwaukee, who made pleasing remarks upon "Alaska and Kalkaska."

The next meeting of the society is at the residence of E. Carpenter. Paper upon "Alexander the Great," by Rev. A. M. Parmenter.

Card of Thanks and Appreciation.

We desire to return thanks to all persons who participated in the boy's band benefit supper at the Newman House on Tuesday evening, and especially to the instigators of the project, Mrs. Robt. Miller, Mrs. Ella Smith, and Mrs. McLean, who through untiring perseverance perfected all arrangements, making the supper a decided success and the largest and most successful occurence of its kind ever held in Charlevoix. Much is owing to Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Newman for their hospitality and kindness in making the evening thoroughly enjoyable. We shall ever bear in mind our obligations to the citizens for this and other donations, and shall endeavor to profit and show our appreciation of all acts of kindness. Respectfully,

BOYS' BAND.

The Congregational Church.

SOME DAY.

BY MARY F. SCHUYLER.

Some day my cheek shall lose its bloom,
The flowers for me their rich perfume,
And 'mid the shades and gathering gloom
My feet shall stray;
Down, down the dim descent of years,
Through wearing cares and burning tears,
With heart half fainting from its fears,
I'll wend my way.

Some day my eyes shall dimmer grow,
My hair turn white as winter snow,
My voice grow timid, faint, and low,
My mind decay;
But still my lonely path I'll tread,
And mourn, perhaps, my cherished dead,
The hopes and joys forever fled
So far away.

But oh! some day when life slopes down
To the night shadows dim and brown,
I hope to see a starry crown
Waiting for me.
Then robed in calm content I'll lie,
With folded hands and tearless eye,
And yield my breath without a sigh,
Glad to be free.

THE MOROCCO PURSE.

BY C. LEON MEREDITH.

Twice a year, from beyond the Mississippi, I visit the metropolis of the West for the purchase of goods.

Knowing Chicago to be a great, wicked city, I have always been on my guard for sharpers, especially when carrying much money, but my watchfulness failed at one time to save me from a very unpleasant adventure, the experience, however, terminating most favorably.

The event took place two years ago.

Late one afternoon, while on my return from the wholesale house of Marshall Field & Co. to my hotel, I was detained for a minute at the corner of Clark and Madison streets by a clog of cars and vehicles.

As I stood watching for an opportunity to cross over, I noticed a tall, gaunt man gazing upon me intently. A fearful scowl was upon his face, and the bony fingers were clenched firmly into the palms of his white hands.

I was wondering what it could mean, when suddenly a change came.

The strange-looking man came quietly to my side, the hard look left his features, and a soft smile took its place. A well-filled morocco purse was suddenly slipped into my hand and the man said hurriedly:

"That's yours, Thompson. I forgive you; keep it."

Before I had time to open my lips in protest, before I could tell him that my name was not Thompson, the fellow had darted away, mingled with the crowd, and was lost to view.

I was perplexed.

My first thought was that a followed pickpocket had forced the purse into my hand to shield himself, and that I would soon be arrested as a confederate.

Glancing about me I discovered no one watching. All seemed to have individual affairs to attend to, and not a policeman was in sight.

Still holding the fat, soft purse exposed in my hand, the hotel was reached.

An hour spent in my room studying over the affair did no sort of good. The simple facts existed, that was all, and reflection in any direction brought no plausible, at least satisfactory, solution to the problem.

That the purse had been stolen there was no doubt. And why it had been given to me, or why the thief should wish to forgive Thompson and give the article to him, of course I could not determine.

After half an hour's deliberation, a resolution was formed to find the owner of the pocket-book. I would give it into the care of the hotel-keeper and advertise.

As I reached the staircase at the end of the long hall, a new idea came to me, and I hastened back to my room.

I decided to examine the contents of the purse before letting it go out of my possession, make a memorandum of what it contained, then I could tell if accurately described by any applicant, or if tampered with while out of my hands.

The purse contained only a few dollars in money, but, mercy! what a multitude of other articles!

There were bits of sample silks, a glove-hook, recipes for frosted cake, a little plain ring, a few small pearls, bits of ribbon, and several calling-cards.

The purse certainly belonged to a woman.

The cards were all alike, and bore in fine script the name of Lena Suthern.

The plan of finding the owner was changed again.

I would write to Lena Suthern, general delivery, Chicago, and await the result.

A letter was accordingly placed in the postoffice that evening. It was brief, a simple statement that I was in possession of a purse which contained cards bearing her name.

The day following when I came in for dinner the hotel clerk told me that a lady had been waiting for some time to see me in the parlor.

Entering the room but one person was to be seen.

A lady sat upon a sofa near the window—a young lady of remarkable beauty.

As the light of midday streamed through the half-curtained casement, it fell upon my ideal of a supremely lovely face.

So sweet and so bright was it that I stood and gazed upon her rudely before speaking.

She evidently noticed my staring and hesitancy, for she turned away for a moment and then arose.

"Are you the gentleman who wrote this line to me?" she asked, extending the letter of the evening before.

I bowed my answer.

"I will describe the purse," she said, quietly, and proceeded to do so very minutely.

I handed her the fat little morocco purse, and opening it with nimble fingers she said, sweetly:

"I shall be very glad to reward you, kind sir, and——"

"Nothing of the kind," I returned. "I have sufficient means for all of my wants, and it gives me great pleasure to place in your hands the article that came into my possession in a very strange manner."

She started a little, then composed herself, and without a question moved toward the door!

"You will accept my thanks?" she said, so softly and musically that I could hardly frame words for reply.

During the very brief minutes that she had been before me I had feasted upon her supreme loveliness, and I did not wish the spell broken so suddenly.

"Will you tell me one thing before you go?" I asked, holding up my hand as if to detain her. "Will you let me know in what manner the little purse left your possession? It was forced into my hand by a very strange personage, a middle-aged, wan-looking fellow, who called me Thompson, and saying he forgave me, dashed away. I thought him a pickpocket were my suspicions correct?"

"No! no!" she answered, a painful smile crossing her angelic face; "there was no crime in it, and the exercise of no reason. The Thompson is an imaginary man, and the one who would bestow the gift not in his right mind. Good-day."

She bowed as she passed out, and turned her bewitchingly beautiful eyes full upon my face.

I watched the tall, graceful figure as it swept through the hall, and then turned reflectively to my room.

"You are a gone case," I said to myself, while pacing up and down my apartment. "Thirty years of age and never but once before saw a face that touched the heart."

That other face was seen in my boyhood, and stole a boy's heart.

More than a decade of years before this event I had met at St. Paul a bright, cheery girl of sixteen, and we both lost our young hearts.

For two blissful months we walked, talked, fished, and gathered flowers together.

I wove garlands of the sweetest prairie beauties and placed them as a crown upon the queenly head of the brown-haired and blue-eyed Allie Floyd, and she told me so tenderly of her new-born love that I believed my bliss was to last forever.

But the dream was soon to be broken and a life shadow follow.

Suddenly I was called down the river to attend to a matter of business.

Promising Allie a quick return, I left the girl at the landing as the steamer swept out into the current and away.

My absence from St. Paul was prolonged into weeks. As I was on the wing nearly all of the time I did not hear from my little friend, and when I did go up the river again the Floyd family had left for their New England home.

The cause of the sudden departure was the illness of Allie.

After a month's loneliness I wrote a letter to the place which was remembered as the girl's home. To this no reply came.

Four more weeks passed, and I wrote the postmaster of Silverhold and received the prompt intelligence that, owing to the death of their daughter and the ill-health of the mother, Mr. and Mrs. Floyd had gone to Europe.

This intelligence struck me like a thunderbolt; it crushed my spirits, and nearly broke my young heart.

From that day until the one that I met Lena Suthern a female face had never been seen that attracted particular interest.

This woman I had just met brought back the bright, sweet face of my Allie, and revived my young, pure love.

I loved this Lena Suthern with all the earnestness of my yearning soul.

During the whole afternoon and night that followed I thought of nothing, dreamed of nothing, but the sweet one who had come to me with the bright angelic face of my boyish idol.

One thing I deeply regretted. I had neglected to ask the lady for her residence, street and number.

I would have made some excuse for calling upon her had I obtained the information.

Writing could not be resisted. The letter was addressed as before, but no answer came.

I had simply asked for an interview, claiming that certain suspicions I entertained respecting the man who gave me the purse needed verification or refutation, and I begged that I might see her but for a brief interview.

Thinking that, perhaps, for some reason the letter had not reached her, a second one was sent, but elicited no answer, and so, heavy-hearted I started westward.

Absence and business cares did not cure my yearnings, but, if possible, made my heart grow fonder.

I stood it as long as I could, and then wrote Lena Suthern, making a full confession of my love, and, that she might understand how such devotion could come at first meeting, the story of my ideal, Allie Floyd, was given her without reserve.

My pleadings for an interview were so earnest and pitiful that I believed an answer would come.

A week passed, and my heart was thrilled.

A letter came with a Chicago postmark, a letter as bulky as the one I had sent, and it was addressed in a lady's hand of superior touch and finish.

I could not trust myself to open it upon the street, or even at the store, and so hastened to my room and broke the seal with trembling hand, and doubtless a livid face.

I never shall forget that moment.

Had a dagger entered my breast I could not have been more painfully stricken.

From the white and delicately perfumed envelope I drew forth the long epistle I had written to Lena Suthern—nothing more.

My chagrin and mortification were beyond words for expression.

The margins of the different sheets were examined for a single word, but it had not been written there.

There were marks upon some of the pages that looked as if teardrops had fallen. Had I known that they were such I could have blessed her for returning it even thus.

The summer passed away, and the season came again for visiting Chicago.

Back into my old empty-hearted condition I had settled, feeling myself a victim of circumstances.

There was a desperate struggle going on in my whole nature to live and forget the face and form that had rekindled the light of my soul.

The bright, liquid eyes of my dead Allie seemed to shine out to me through those of Lena Suthern. It was really the first love awakened, for had I not known the first I should not have loved the last.

Fully determined was I to master my heart. No further effort would be made to meet Miss Suthern, and yet my stay in Chicago was prolonged beyond the usual period of a visit.

I invented delays, and was slow in making purchases. Not a female face passed me unobserved.

Really I was hoping, praying to meet by accident the lady, even if I could but once more get a glance at the inspiring face.

The meeting came, but at a moment least expected.

Late one evening, upon turning a corner abruptly, I found myself face to face with the woman I worshiped.

Our coming together was so sudden that both were startled, for the lady recognized me as quickly as I did her.

A brief hesitation, and she attempted to pass.

My hand was lifted.

"I must speak to you, just one word," I faltered.

"You must not. I cannot be detained," she said in a soft, musical voice. "What you would say I cannot listen to."

"Cannot you hear me for a single moment? You have refused to reply to written words of love, and certainly you can answer one little question, then I will detain you no longer. Is there no hope, not one ray?"

"Do not speak to me thus. You must not! I am a married woman."

I started as if a sword point had pierced me.

The thought that Lena Suthern belonged to any one else had never entered my selfish, worshiping head.

As the lady had spoken she turned and now, for the first time, I saw a man partly hidden by the pillar of the corner building. It was the same tall, gaunt form with the white face and staring eyes that had rushed up to me six months before and forced the purse into my hand.

"That man, Mrs. Suthern?" I asked in a hoarse whisper.

"My husband," she answered kindly, and taking the monomaniac gently by the arm she led him away.

It would be useless to attempt to describe my feelings as I stood watching the two figures as they passed on through the glimmer of the nearest gaslight.

I felt something of a relief at knowing the truth.

Lena Suthern had remained silent and resisted my love pleadings as a true woman should, and my stupidity in not thinking such a thing as her being married possible, became more and more apparent as I reflected.

She had acted wisely; I blindly driven on by the hunger of my heart for my angel Allie.

It was all over now, and I returned home a more retiring, stupid, and stolid, "old bachelor," as they called me, than I had ever been before.

I was more contented and happy, because the motive of silence was understood.

She had not remained passive through any disregard for my feelings, but because it was her duty to do so.

Whether her heart had been touched by my simple, earnest appeal, I knew not, but as matters had turned, it was to be hoped not.

"Never again will I seek her, never again write," was my resolve and my fixed purpose.

The winter passed, and one day a Chicago daily came to me from an unknown source.

In looking it over, a marked item was found, which read as follows:

"DROWNED.—A middle-aged man, supposed to be insane, leaped from the Clark street bridge last evening and lost his life by the act. The body has been identified as that of Edward Suthern."

The paper was thrown to the floor, and I paced up and down the room, making all sorts of resolves, none of which were kept.

"I would go to Chicago at once," a thing that was not done. "I would write immediately," a thing I did not do.

If it was the husband of Lena Suthern who had died—and who else but the lady could have sent the marked paper—perhaps she would write me. I could not say more to her than I had.

Picking up the paper again I noticed that it was an old one, bearing date of six months before.

Then I felt certain it had come from the widow.

Only a few weeks passed before my season of alternate hope and fear came to a close.

A letter came, bearing the same delicate address as the returned one of my own, and it read:

"Lena Suthern will see you now. Call at No. —— Wabash avenue. A FRIEND."

The next morning found me in Chicago, and after the very slow hours of the forenoon were away, I was ushered into a handsome parlor at the number on Wabash avenue designated in the note.

Lena was there, her beautiful face radiant with smiles, and she extended her hand to me as to an old friend.

"I can not express my gratitude to you for the privilege you have granted, a privilege that is the greatest on earth to me," I said, feelingly.

"You have an ideal, as it is the right of any person to have," she returned, thoughtfully.

"My life has been wrapped up in one ideal."

"You told me in your letter of your early love, and that that love had been constant—indeed, a part of your very life—and it was because you had never forgotten Allie Floyd, and because Allie Floyd has never forgotten you, that I wrote you to come to me."

"My Allie Floyd!" I echoed.

"Changed in name only."

I gazed upon the love-lighted face, and sprang to my feet. With a heart overflowing with rapture, I caught the soft hand extended to me and pressed it to my lips again and again; then I sought the crimson cheek, but she playfully warded me off, and led me to a seat.

Seating herself beside me, Lena told me the story of her life, which I give briefly:

Soon after reaching her New England home, her sister—one who had not accompanied the family in their Western trip—died, and, her mother being in poor health, they went to Europe, where they remained several years. Many letters had been written by the girl to her lover, but no replies came back to her. In later years she left her father's house as he did not fancy the "border boy," as he called him.

Her given name being Lena Albertine, the second one by preference was dubbed to Allie, but later the first name was used.

At the age of twenty-five, her parents being dead, Lena, empty-hearted, married a musical professor who was well-to-do and devoted to her.

Two years after the union insanity had been brought on by a fall which fractured the skull, and from that time until the fatal leap from the bridge he had been her constant care.

"My emotion at our first meeting cannot be described," she continued. "Your searching, earnest glances told that my face had impressed you again."

"Then you knew me when we met at the hotel?"

"Your letter gave the name."

"And why did you not let me know then that you were Allie Floyd?"

"I knew my own heart too well; and besides that, I knew your own impulsive nature. I dared not do it."

"Bless you!"

"The long letter of affection you sent, pleading for recognition and telling of your love for the lost Allie touched my heart to its depths, and I wept over it as it was read time and again, and the hardest task of my life was to return it without one hopeful, consoling word; but the cloud has passed, and I can confess my feelings now."

A year has passed since the sunlight came back into my soul, and now my little Allie Floyd is coming to me forever.—Chicago Ledger.

The Chicken Business.

It does beat the Dutch how closely great men are watched.

By some means the world has possessed itself of the knowledge that I own an incubator, and the result is that I am now having excellent opportunities for compiling a catalogue of persons desirous of becoming rich in the poultry business.

Scarcely a day passes that I do not receive a letter from somebody wanting a slice of my golden experience in the line of speculative knowledge, that begins with an old hen and generally ends in the poorhouse, if persisted in; and to save hard work and postage I have concluded to pad this column with a little information that if judiciously applied will stave off old age and keep wrinkles in the next county.

There is money in chicken-raising if you know how to go about it, but like everything else, a certain amount of "know how" is necessary to induce eminent success to come your way. The man who can't tell a chicken from a gosling had better remain behind the counter, or stay in a bank until he learns something.

My advice to the novice in poultry raising would be, to follow it simply for pleasure until you acquire a knowledge that will tell you to go ahead.

Anybody can hatch chickens with an incubator, but it takes a large amount of science and eternal vigilance to raise them. Patrick Henry never said anything more true than his memorable allusion to the price of a spring chicken and the cost of liberty being one and inseparable. Patrick no doubt kept a few hens himself.

But to the man who goes into the chicken business simply to find steady employment and lots of pleasure, I say, "Go it—you'll get there in both respects." When the motive is not mercenary the pursuit is an unbounded sea of bliss, with islands of pure delight scattered through it in great luxuriance.

I don't think I ever did anything outside of religious duty that gave me greater joy; though it must be admitted that I made a close carrom toward bankruptcy while doing it; and joy, although a nice thing to have around when you want to write poetry, is not equal to salt pork for keeping a man up when he has hard work to do.

If you want to be happy and get your pay as you go along, raise chickens—unless your neighbor's division fence is bad—but if you want to salt down something that can be used as collateral after awhile, don't do it.

I began by trying to raise chickens for sordid gain, that could be jingled in the pocket, and a more miserable man you couldn't have found with a constable's warrant. I then gave it a whirl simply for fun, and felt glorious right away. It makes all the difference in the world whether your incentive is moonshine or money.

When I heard the first chick chirp in my incubator, and realized clear down to my boots that I was indeed a mother, and had the documents right there to prove it, in spite of the cold, unfeeling fact that I was regarded by the world as a bald-headed man of much sadness, I felt as though I was worth a million dollars; but when, six months later, I had to pawn my overcoat in mid-winter to buy corn meal, I felt that I had been blessed with altogether too much profuseness in a maternal way to suit the size of my flour barrel.

I long at times to sit down and meditate on things that have made the world gnaw its beard for ages, but no man with a loaded incubator can take much time to muse, unless he puts cotton in his ears, or gets dreadful reckless about consequences.

An incubator is one of the most remorseless things outside of boarding school, and for keeping a man from loafing with the clouds it can discount both a failure of crops and an iron-clad chattel mortgage.

When you see a man with hollow eyes, haggard cheeks, unshaven face, and lifeless hair, shambling around in an aimless, homeless sort of way, looking as though he hadn't slept, washed, or combed himself for a month, but every cent you can raise that he owns an incubator, which has just begun to fire its possibilities at him with a desperation of energy that will kill him if he don't blow the light out.

That's what it means to monkey with a hen-roost on scientific principles, and as I love all mankind, I want everybody to know it. When somebody tells you that the easiest way on earth to get rich with quickness is to buy an incubator and plunge into the chicken business, pull down the corner of your eye and immediately give him a front view of your back.—Lige Brown in Chicago Ledger.

Protection for the Birds.

The startling decrease in the numbers of many of our birds, brought about of late years by the unceasing persecution waged for the sake of fashion, has aroused the Ornithologists' Union to a recognition of the necessity for instant and decided effort in behalf of our birds. The objects of the committee are as follows:

1. The gathering of all possible information bearing on the subjects of the destruction and protection of North American birds.

2. The diffusion of information among the people in respect to the extent of the slaughter of birds for millinery and other mercenary purposes; the wanton killing of birds in sport by men and boys; the robbing of birds' nests; the destruction of the eggs of rails, terns, gulls and other birds for food; and the marked recent decrease of many species resulting from this general destruction; the spreading of information, also, in respect to the utility of birds as a natural check upon the increase of insects injurious to vegetation, and with reference to their interest and value from an æsthetic point of view. This with the object of developing a public sentiment in favor of the rigid protection of our native birds, a sentiment that will naturally spring up strongly and widely as soon as attention is called to the subject.

The headquarters of the committee are at the American Museum of Natural History, Central Park, New York City, where the officers or any of the members may be addressed.

It cost Mr. Pratt $1,083,333.33 to found the Enoch Pratt Free Library in Baltimore.

What an Enterprising Drummer Did.

"I had a little experience the other night," said a drummer, "that took all of my nerve and gall to bear up under. Ever since I've been on the road I've made it a principle to meet all engagements. More than once have I skipped three or four towns in which I was sure of selling big bills of goods in order to keep my engagement to some girl or other. When I agree to be at a certain place at a given minute, you can bet your last dollar I'll be there. Well, the other day I landed in St. Louis, and suddenly discovered that in a moment of forgetfulness I had promised to take two girls to the theater that night. The girls were not acquainted, either. I hate a liar and a sneak, and the girls' brothers were customers of mine; and so, after thinking the whole thing over, I made up my mind I'd live up to my contract. So I bought my seats at two theaters, engaged my carriage, and prepared for the campaign. I sent word to the first one that I'd call for her rather early, and to the other that I might be a little late. I whirled No. 1 off, seated her, excused myself, for a minute before the rising of the curtain, slipped out, and in two seconds the horses were on a run for No. 2. I got her in her seat five minutes after the curtain rose. Stayed the act out, excused myself, went back to the other, apologized, and everything was all right. I spent the evening flitting from one to the other, and got my money's worth out of the hackman, as I made him hump. I made inquiries as to the hour the plays would be over, and found I had twenty-five minutes leeway. Then I made such good use of those twenty-five minutes that I got No. 1 home and was back after No. 2 just as the curtain went down. To do this cost me $12, and the next day I had to skip out of town because the hackman was after me with a bill for one of his horses which had died from overdriving; but not till after I had sold big bills of goods to the girls' brothers. Besides, I had the satisfaction of performing an unparalleled feat in the theater-going business. That's the kind of a hustler I am."—Chicago Herald.

Families can live better for less money at the Grand Union Hotel than at any other first-class hotel in the city.

A Shoeless and Stockingless People.

The 10,000,000 inhabitants of Mexico use almost entirely home-made boots, shoes, gaiters, slippers, and sandals so far as they wear any foot-covering at all.

Shoes in Mexico are a European introduction, and do not properly belong to the national costume. A large proportion of the population (probably a majority) do not wear shoes at all. The sandal, which is a sole of leather, rawhide, or woven maguey fiber, strapped to the bottom of the foot with strings of the same material, is the only foot covering used by this class of people, and as every man is his own shoemaker, and the climate requires no protection for instep or ankle, the national sandal is doubtless the most economical, comfortable, and healthy shoeing that can be worn in this country.

In proof of this the infantry regiments of the Mexican army, armed and equipped otherwise without regard to expense, still wear the leather sandal in preference to shoes, not solely for the sake of economy, but because it is considered generally healthier, keeps the feet in better condition, is more easily repaired or replaced, and makes easier marching.

The shoe-wearing population of the republic is chiefly of European origin or descent, and such of the Indian population as by education and association have learned to prefer European fashions and modes of living. This class has inherited from their Indian as well as their Spanish ancestors remarkably small, well-modeled feet and hands, upon which they pride themselves considerably; consequently a handsome and elegantly shaped shoe is more esteemed in Mexico than a sound and substantial one, and commands a readier sale. Hence the cheaper shoes made in the country, if not so strong and durable, are more carefully modeled and several sizes smaller than the average trade shoe made in the United States.—Boston Commercial Bulletin.

A Word to Workers.

If your avocations are mentally or physically laborious, if they subject you to exposure in inclement weather, if they confine you to the desk, and are of a nature to involve wear and tear of brain, and nervous strain, you may occasionally require some renovating tonic. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is the article for you, it stimulates the failing energies, invigorates the body and cheers the mind. It enables the system to throw off the debilitating effects of undue fatigue, gives renewed vigor to the organs of digestion, arouses the liver when inactive, which it very often is with people whose pursuits are sedentary, renews the jaded appetite, and encourages healthful repose. Its ingredients are safe, and its credentials, which consist in the hearty indorsement of persons of every class of society, are most convincing. Admirably is it adapted to the medical wants of workers.

Massachusetts Blue Laws.

There are some very queer laws on the Massachusetts statute book, the striking anomaly about which is that they have been continually re-enacted, but they are seldom, if ever, enforced. By those laws, for example, traveling, not only on Sunday, but on Saturday evening, is forbidden, save in cases of necessity or charity. Any innkeeper is liable to be fined who on Sunday entertains, or allows about his place, any persons other than travelers, strangers, or lodgers. It is forbidden, on that day, to keep open any shop, save for necessity or charity. Dancing on Sunday is punishable by a fine, the amount being $30 for each offense. It is, moreover, unlawful to be present at any unlicensed entertainment "other than sacred" on either Saturday or Sunday evenings. Now, Gen. Grant used to say that the best way to procure the repeal of objectionable laws was to enforce them. But this method of relief seems, by common consent, to have been avoided as impracticable in Boston; and so Mr. Josiah Quincy and some 600 other co-signatories in Boston have sent in a petition for the formal repeal of the laws.

THE powers of oratory of U. S. Senator Voorhees, of Indiana, are universally acknowledged. Where, even in Demosthenes, could there be words more eloquent than these? "I consider St. Jacobs Oil a splendid remedy. I suffered from rheumatism of the back. I used St. Jacobs Oil, which gave me instantaneous relief, and then cured me."

Unconscious Poets.

Silas Wegg was not the only man who dropped into poetry. Lincoln, in some of his messages, dropped into it quite unconsciously. He wrote: "Fondly do we hope, fervently do we pray, that this mighty scourge of war—may soon pass away." There is nothing very poetical about mathematics, yet Whewell, in his "Treatise on Mechanics," unwittingly rhymed when he wrote: "For no force, however great—Can stretch a chord, however fine—Into a horizontal line—That is exactly straight."

Florida, "The Land of Flowers," is a paradise for the invalid, and the "Fountain of Youth" was once thought to be hid in one of its forest glades. It is now the haven of many consumptives, who find benefit in her genial warmth and fragrant flowers. The consumptive invalid need not necessarily go so far from home and friends to get relief. For if not in the last stages of the disease, Dr. R. V. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" will restore to perfect health. For all chronic throat, bronchial and lung diseases it is a most reliable specific. By druggists.

The Great German Physician.

The remarkable phase in the practice of Dr Peter W. Schmidt (frequently called Dr. Pete) is, he never asked one to describe their disease but tells each one their trouble without asking a question. His success is phenomenal. His practice enormous. He is sought after by hundreds wherever he goes, because he cures when every other physician and remedy have failed. He has allowed his great medicines, Golden Seal Bitters and Lung Food for Consumption, to be offered to the suffering, and we assert without fear of successful contradiction that there is no disease they will not cure. Thousands of bottles have been sold. Thousands of broken-down and discouraged invalids saved. Send to Golden Seal Bitters Company, Holland City, Mich., for Facts for the Million! Free.

Around the County.

The County Seat.

East Jordan, March 1, 1886.

EDITOR JOURNAL,—Your publication of Mr. Loveday's letter encourages us to hope that you will also publish what I am about to write in answer to another of the Sentinel's ill-natured flings which appeared in the last issue of that sheet, whose editor seems to think that if he misrepresents and abuses East Jordan and its people he is talking upon the county seat question, and who says we must not resent his abuse, or, if we do, he'll cuff us all the more. Now, perhaps it may be as well for the Sentinel man to know that we are not dogs, or at least not that kind of dog commonly called cur, and that we have borne this kind of treatment without any attempt at retaliation about as long as we intend to. Of course we perfectly well understand that the Sentinel does not represent the better sentiment of Charlevoix upon this question, and we know there are a few friends there who seem to think we ought not to notice what it says, simply because it comes from the erratic pen of its chief editor. But that chief says that he is "considered a potent factor in the county seat fight." That if we cease to take his paper "he will make the picnic all the warmer for us." That he has enlisted for the war and proposes to make it as lively as he can. (He probably means the war on us.) That he is "entrenched behind a just cause," although he says not a word to show its justice. And last of all, he tries to kill us off with those big words: "fortissimo et accelerando." (The italics are his.) There is an old saying that "A man may as well be killed by a cannon shot as scared to death." Now these big words of the great editor do positively scare us mossbacks almost to death, and I therefore beg him, whatever other favor he may refuse us, to at least grant us the favor of such simple language as we simpletons can understand. He tells us, too, that "there are other localities in Charlevoix county besides South Arm township," and bids us bear it in mind. For this valuable information and sage advice we do thank him, and desire to make this small return in kind: There is, fortunately, as we think, another news paper in Charlevoix, "and don't you forget it."

What it is that has turned the Sentinel's old-time sweetness toward us into such bitter gall, you who live nearer to him than we do may understand; we do not. In past years the most friendly relations have existed between South Arm, East Jordan, and Charlevoix, and we have reason to believe that a very large proportion of the good people of Charlevoix still entertain toward us the best of feeling, notwithstanding the discrediting immendoes of the Sentinel. We hope this good feeling will continue with those with whom it has been constant, and be revived in those who from any cause have allowed it to cool. Surely it is for the best interests of all concerned that it should be so. No one, we think, will deny this. It follows, then, that the Sentinel should argue the county seat question with decency instead of treating us every now and again to a hotch-potch of scurrility; that the subject should be examined upon its merits, instead of subjecting the people of this village and region to base insinuations. This course it does not seem disposed to take; indeed, it appears to be in the condition of the lawyer who submitted his brief to eminent counsel for advice, who, after examination, wrote upon it: "No case, but abuse the opposite lawyer."

The people of this county thought at last spring, by a very large majority, to designate this village as the place in which the public business of the county should be transacted. In consequence of that the township of South Arm has had built at an expense of several thousand dollars, good offices and a good hall and jail, in which such business can be transacted; all of which is entirely free of cost to the county, and will continue to be. Perhaps it is because of this that Mr. Smith chooses to consider us in the position of the lawyer who had the best side of the case. But why he should consider himself the other fellow, and abuse us accordingly, is past our comprehension. We should like to know why, and doubtless a majority of the voters of the county would like to know. B.

East Jordan.

From the Enterprise.

Mrs. Estelle, of Charlevoix, is here, visiting her father, Samuel A. Sinclair.

Six loads of hay were seen at one time on the ice near Ellsworth bound for East Jordan.

Mrs. Chas. Swallow and son, of Charlevoix, was the guest of mine host Blair and wife over Sunday.

The new town hall of East Jordan, which has just been accepted by the township board, is pronounced a success in every particular, being neat, handsome and convenient. The cost was $4,300.—News.

Frank Durga, who was released on bail at the last term of court, and who was to have been tried at this term as accomplice in the murder of an Indian in August last, failed to appear. The other two, Graham and Moore, are here, but as yet nothing has been done.

The citizens of Charlevoix are to be congratulated on their new flouring mill. It is capable of turning out 100 barrels of flour per day. Now, as we have a mill in the county that will turn out as good flour as any in the state, we deem it the duty of every merchant in the county to buy their flour of this mill. By so doing our home industries are made prosperous, and at the same time our county is brought into more prominent notice as a progressive one.

Burgess.

Mose Cooper hauled to Oyster Bay, during the month of February, 5,000 ties and posts.

E. H. Burgess is about to put a force of men to work getting out ties and posts, and is putting up a boarding house in the swamp.

According to report, Messrs. Whitford and Cram have their mill pretty well stocked with logs.

A young lady, who formerly lived in Hayes, but who has lived in Charlevoix for the past two years, passed through here on her wedding trip on Monday. We did not learn the name of the happy man, but join with the multitude of friends in wishing them many years of happy wedded life.

The family of John Newstead is under bereavement, death having taken the infant son.

Mrs. Frank Kane, who has been in feeble health for some time past, is slowly recovering, under the skillful treatment of Dr. Lewis.

The Rev. J. Crane preached at Maple Grove school house last Sabbath, and preaches there again in four weeks.

Some of our prominent farmers were busy hauling their grain to the North Star mill at Charlevoix, last week.

Barnard.

Robert Matchett started for Canada Saturday, to visit his father.

Miss Maggie Bennett closed a successful term of school here last Saturday.

Cure for Piles.

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he has some affection of the kidneys or neighboring organs. At times, symptoms of indigestion are present, flatulency, uneasiness of the stomach, etc. A moisture, like perspiration, producing a very disagreeable itching, after getting warm, is a common attendant. Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Bosanko's Pile Remedy, which acts directly upon the parts affected, absorbing the Tumors, allaying the intense itching, and effecting a permanent cure. Price 50 cents. Sold by Geo. W. Crouter. 152

ANCIENT HISTORY IN MASSACHUSETTS.

We passed Muttock Hill, where once the famous mansion of Oliver, the Tory judge, stood in all its glory of Gothic arch and English timber, with the rose-trees sent from Devonshire to Madame Oliver coluring its porticoes. The Olivers were a famous family at that time. The judge was known to be a stanch and loyal servant of the English king, and he entertained right royally in the old mansion on Muttock Hill. There was a banqueting hall said to be, well worth the name. An old family servant who lived far into this century used to tell of its shining floor and oaken seats, and the glitter of its waxen lights. The chairs were of English oak, with crowns carved upon them; the table, a splendid piece of the same wood, with feet like claws grasping a ball. So noted were Madam Oliver's gatherings that the leading ladies in the land thought it no hardship to come thirty-miles to attend one. Innumerable are the stories told of the guests at those rollicksome banquets. Of one beauty from Boston it is said that for two nights previous to a ball at the Olivers', she slept with her hands tied above her head to whiten them, and another colonial belle sat upright in an arm-chair instead of taking her beauty-sleep, that her coiffure might not be disturbed, the hair-dresser having been compelled to do his work overnight. Thither, riding on a pillion or in a chariot, came frequently charming Miss Dolly Nash, for whose favor so many suitors sighed vainly, and who dispensed her smiles judiciously, and made the honor of a dance almost like a royal gift. Miss Dolly was a wit as well as a beauty, and had been at the English court six months, so that her "ton" was considered perfect. She wore the newest fashions of 1760, and though she might have been far prettier but for paint and powder, the sparkle of her eyes and the light of her smile were said to be so entrancing that two English officers fought a duel over the question as to which one had received the softest glance of the evening.

At Oliver House charming Mistress Nash was always led out by the host, and as the floor of the ball-room was noted for its waxen polish (three maids having charge of it), we can fancy that the old judge, a trifle gouty, and not very keen in his vision, had to be very careful how he stepped, for to blunder, with Miss Dolly's dainty hand in his, would have been unpardonable indeed. We can fancy the scene very readily: the hoops and towering coiffures of the fine dames of Massachusetts, the wigs and satin ruffles of the sterner sex, the wax lights, the darkly shining floor, and the figure of the judge leading forth lovely, imperious Dolly, while every eye was turned upon them; even the musicians, who scraped away at the upper end of the room, were not insensible to so much feminine charm, and down upon the scene comes the shout of a horseman who had ridden from Boston, and was galloping up Muttock Hill, swinging his hat and shouting loudly, "Long life to the royal heir of Great Britain!" for that day a ship had brought the news of the birth of George the Fourth.

As we went down the hill we seemed to have a vision of that glowing period, and then to see the lights of Oliver House go out, the fair faces and splendid figures vanish, the laughter, the sighs, the love-making, and the witticisms of that gallant day die away forever.

When the revolution broke out, Judge Oliver did not hesitate to avow his Tory principles, which so enraged the people of Middleborough that they determined to set fire to his stately dwelling. Some one—whom it is not known—conveyed the news secretly to the judge, who was in Boston, and he rode out under cover of the night, and entering his own home like a thief, stole into the great banqueting hall and the library, and carried away with him whatever of papers and money and jewels he could secrete about his person. He was only just in time.

Early the next morning a mob came up the hill, headed by a patriotic young carpenter, and the fine mansion was ransacked and burned to the ground, the judge and his immediate family escaping to England. While there it was said that although he frequently entertained American guests, he never referred in any way to his life among the colonists.—Lucy C. Lillie, in Harper's Magazine for November.

The Conversation Stopped There.

A couple of gentlemen stood on Vine street talking about one thing or another when a beggar made a plea for alms, showing that his right hand was gone as an inducement to contribute. One of the gentlemen gave the fellow a dime, but the other refused to ante up.

"How did you lose your hand?" the beggar was asked.

"I was coupling cars, and got my hand so badly mashed that I had to have it cut off, sir."

"Oh, no, you didn't do anything of the kind," said the gentleman who had declined to give the beggar any money.

"How do you know; was you there?" impudently retorted the tramp.

"Yes, I was there," replied the gentleman. "Your hand was blown off while you were trying to steal a watch from my pocket, and I am the very one that did it. The only mistake I made was in shooting at your hand instead of your heart."

The beggar did not stop to parley, but sneaked off with celerity.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Whereas default has been made in the payment of the money secured by a mortgage dated the 12th day of November, in the year A. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-one, executed by Mary A. Thomas to John Frenz, which mortgage was recorded in the office of the register of deeds, of the county of Charlevoix, in the state of Michigan, in liber 6 of mortgages at page 194, on the 26th day of November, in the year A. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-one, at two o'clock in the afternoon of said day. And whereas the said mortgage has been duly assigned by the said John Frenz to Daniel Head, by instrument of assignment bearing date the 16th day of May, in the year A. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-two, and recorded in the office of the register of deeds of said county of Charlevoix, on the 12th day of July in the year A. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-three, at two o'clock in the afternoon of said day, in liber 9 of mortgages, at page 161, and the same is now owned by the said Daniel Head. And whereas the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice, is the sum of Thirteen Hundred and seventy two dollars and seven cents ($1,372.70), principal and interest, and a further sum of thirty dollars ($30). Provided by law as an attorney fee in the foreclosure of said mortgage which is the whole amount claimed to be due and unpaid on said mortgage, and no suit or proceeding at law or in chancery having been instituted to recover the debt now remaining secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described at public auction to the highest bidder, at the front door of the Town Hall, in the township of South Arm, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, which is the place of holding the circuit court for said county, on Wednesday, the 19th day of May, 1886, at twelve o'clock meridian, which premises are described in the said mortgage as follows, to wit: Lot three (3), and the south one-half (½) of the south-west one-quarter (¼) of section seventeen (17), in township thirty-three (33) north, range seven (7) west, in the county of Charlevoix and state of Michigan, and containing in all one hundred and forty-five and twenty-five one-hundredths acres of land according to the United States survey thereof, excepting, however, the north one-half (½) of the southwest one-quarter (¼) of the southwest one-quarter (¼) of said section seventeen (17), and also excepting lots number two (2), three (3), four (4), five (5), six (6), seven (7), eight (8), and fifteen (15), in Scheffer's addition to the village of Ironton, according to the recorded plat thereof, which have been released from said mortgage by the assignee thereof.

Dated February 11th, A. D. 1886.

IV.

The scenery of Jamaica is bold and picturesque in the extreme. The Blue mountain range forms a backbone eight thousand feet high through the eastern division of the island; the mountain slopes extending to the coast on either side. The rivers formed by the rain-falls in the mountains are peculiar to themselves. The largest of these rivers does not exceed twenty or thirty miles in length, but after heavy rains the small streams uniting in their course down the mountains, arrive at the base with tremendous volume and velocity, sweeping every obstacle before it. The supply of water is exhausted in a few hours or a day of two at longest, and the river bed a half mile wide is only occupied by an insignificant rivulet. This is true of the "Yallabs," "Rio Grande," "Black," "Plantain Garden," and "Nigger" rivers. The western division is less mountainous and in a higher state of cultivation; sugar and rum being the principal products. The climate of Jamaica is without qualification, perfect; according to statistics the average temperature on the coast is 80° the extremes being 70° and 90°. By ascending four thousand feet into the mountains, an even temperature of 65° can be found the year round. Situated in the track of the trade winds, a healthful breeze blows over the length and breadth of the island nearly every day in the year, while at night the cool refreshing land winds come down from the mountains laden with perfume, like the "spicy breeze" that "blows soft over Ceylon's isle." Anthony Trollope, who wrote a book on the island, says "There is a scenery in Jamaica that almost equals that of Switzerland and the Tyrol, and there is also, which is more essential, a temperature in which a European can live comfortably. It was there that I first saw the full effects of tropical vegetation and I never can forget it." But others have referred to this Isle of Springs as a "God forsaken hole," "A land where no man lives and the dogs bark at strangers," while the Brittanica cyclopedia says: "A country noted for hurricanes and yellow fever." There has been but one hurricane since 1865, and yellow fever is almost unknown. It may have been different two hundred years ago perhaps, "The evil that (islands) do live after them." Be that as it may, Jamaica has undoubtedly a healthy climate free from malaria, and to those suffering from throat, lung, and other diseases so difficult to deal with in the north, offer the most favorable climate possible. One hundred years ago Jamaica must have looked a paradise, although to the slave it was far from being one. At that time nearly one million acres were planted to sugar cane, and the rum, coffee, ginger, pimento, and other industries were very great. With the freeing of the slaves fifty years ago, Jamaica virtually lost her life and ambition. The planters believing nothing could be done without slave labor, sold their plantations for almost nothing, in some cases abandoning them to the mercy of "squatters," who, holding undisputed possession for twenty years, became the lawful owners. Within the last twenty years many of the old sugar and coffee plantations have resumed business, disproving the belief that they could not be made profitable without slave labor. Monuments to bear witness of the magnificence of slavery times are not wanting: Miles of solid mason work on the coast highways where there was need of protection from the constant beating of the waves in the mountains feet from [illegible] road cut through solid rock where it was often impossible to avoid by going around. Many of the old stone mansions, scattered over the island, are in perfect condition to-day, although some of them are two hundred, and even three hundred years old. The old stone wind-mills, rising fifty and a hundred feet into the air, the sugar mills, near by fallen into disuse, the light roofs long since decayed and tumbled in, while the old stone walls are covered with thick tropical vines and flowers, large trees growing through rents in the walls, give many of the old plantations a very picturesque appearance.

During the past ten years, fruit-growing has become the most important industry in Jamaica. The island is rightly termed "the banana garden of America," and the banana growers are reaping golden harvests from comparatively small investments. Cocoanuts, oranges and pineapples, are also shipped in large quantities. There are "cocoanut walks" of one hundred thousand trees. A good tree will yield two hundred nuts a year. Like most tropical fruits, they have no season for bearing, or rather no season for not bearing, as the blossom and the matured fruit may be found on the same tree any month in the year. To own a cocoanut walk in Jamaica, is like owning an oil well in Pennsylvania—an inexhaustable mine of wealth. There are many varieties of fruit not known in the north, as they are too perishable for shipment. Some are delicious, others are delicious only after acquiring a taste for them. There are mangoes, soursops, mammee apples, star apples, rose apples, pomegranites, avocados, grenadillos, forbidden fruit, and very many others. A peculiarity of the jack-fruit, single specimens of which I have seen weighing fifty pounds, as well as the calabash and other varieties of heavy fruit, is the fruit growing direct from the trunk of the trees. The branches not being strong enough to bear the weight, nature has made this wise provision.

The bane of the country seems to be a lack of energy and ambition on the part of the creole. Jamaica might well be termed the improvident man's paradise. The mountains are full of fresh water and mineral springs. Chocolate and coffee grow with but little cultivation. Breadfruit and mangoes, and all that tempts the negro appetite can be had for the asking. It is not necessary to make provision for cold weather, as to-morrow is sure to be as bright and pleasant as to-day. With the necessarys of life thus easily provided, it is not strange that they yield to the enervating influences of the climate and become heedless happy-go-lucky creatures, who obey only too literally the commands of the Bible, and take no thought of the morrow what they shall eat, what they shall drink, or wherewithal they shall be clothed.

Our Drink Bills.

It is astonishing how lavishly people will spend their money for what is much worse than nothing, and yet be so stingy of it when asked to give a little for educational, benevolent, or religious purposes. The drink bills of this glorious country of ours is enough in two years to wipe out the national debt! Think of it! Nine hundred million dollars' worth of intoxicants poured down Uncle Sam's capacious throat! And add to this three hundred million dollars yearly wasted in tobacco spit and smoke, from his equally capacious mouth. It is a revolting, preposterous fact that somewhere between a billion and a billion and a quarter of good money is, so far as getting an equivalent consideration for it, worse used than if dumped into the sea. [illegible] Gazette.

The Chicago Evening [illegible] remarks correctly and [illegible] "Opponents to the temperance cause often occasional examples of old men who have taken their toddies regularly and still live. Likewise the case of soldiers surviving a war may be cited, but that does not prove that many soldiers are not killed in war."

Reports throughout the Atlantic States indicate that the recent storm was one of the most destructive in years.

The Cypress Hills Street Railway depot and sheds at Brooklyn were destroyed by fire, burning many cars. Loss, $100,000.

At a meeting of the Central Labor Union in New York the tin and slate roofers submitted a resolution that workingmen should take steps to prevent the coming East of the Chinamen who have been boycotted in the West. The meeting unanimously adopted the resolution and appointed a committee to take the matter into consideration.

A fire at Worcester, Massachusetts, destroyed the Ethan Allen pistol shop, causing a loss of $70,000. —

F. W. Nicholson & Co., a veteran West Indies trading house in Boston, has failed, with liabilities of $300,000. The Eastern Steamship Line is involved.

WESTERN.

Four glandered horses on farms near Rochester, Ill., were killed by the Assistant State Veterinarian, and thirteen others were ordered quarantined.

Two employes of the N. K. Fairbank Company, of Chicago, are missing, and are accused of having robbed the firm of about $5,000.

For the recent assault on Mr. Dickson, United States Attorney at Salt Lake, Angus and Frank J. Cannon have been held in $1,000 each.

Edison, the electrician, in an interview regarding the telephone decision by the Indiana Supreme Court, expressed the belief that the law would be pronounced unconstitutional, and declared the decision fatal to patents and progress.

At a Lutheran church in Detroit the twelfth male child of a German family named Detloff was named after President Cleveland, who was represented by Congressman Maybury. The infant was presented with a $10 gold-piece.

A schedule of the liabilities and assets of the defunct Ritzinger Bank of Indianapolis shows assets, $267,827; liabilities, $455,868. The bank had 1,400 depositors. It is claimed that 45 cents on the dollar can be paid them.

Wiebren Wartena, who murdered John Dreger on the bank of the Kankakee River, was executed at Rensselaer, Ind. Nearly one thousand persons were allowed to witness the hanging.

The Rev. Sam Jones, the evangelist, preached three times in Chicago, last Sunday. Fifteen thousand people heard him during the day, and he seemed to hold the audience spellbound.

Judge Tuttle, of East Tawas, Mich., refused to pay taxes, and the Town Treasurer seized a span of horses valued at $117.

Considerable excitement has been caused by the arrest at Windsor, Ill., of William S. Price, on a charge of committing the outrage on Miss Georgia Aldridge, which so shocked the community weeks ago. Price was held in $2,000 bail.

Citizens of the northern counties of Idaho which it is proposed to annex to Washington Territory are flooding Washington with telegrams and letters asking a suspension of action by Congress.

In the suburbs of Portland, Oregon, eighty armed and masked men drove twice that number of Chinese farm laborers to the ferry landing, whence they made their way to Portland before daybreak.

The Coroner's jury at Springfield, Mo., in the case of George Graham, returned a verdict that he murdered his wife, Sarah Graham, and that Mrs. Emma Malloy, the temperance evangelist, and Cora Lee were accessories to the crime.

Three workmen in the powder factory near Xenia, Ohio, lost their lives by an explosion which tore the building to splinters.

The Illinois Central Railway is planning to span the Ohio River with a bridge at Cairo, Ill., which will cost $3,000,000. It is estimated that three years' time will be necessary for its construction.

Two East St. Louis policemen who were looking for a brace of confidence sharpers, boarded a train, revolvers in hand, and set the passengers, who thought they were attacked by robbers, to flight. In the confusion the swindlers escaped, but the officers succeeded in arresting and locking up two innocent and frightened tourists.

An El Paso (Tex.) dispatch states that "a freight-train on the Mexican Central Road was ditched and robbed at Kilometre, north of San Francisco station, by a band of sixty Mexican outlaws. The train consisted of seven cars, which were all ditched. The outlaws first robbed and then stripped completely naked all the train-hands; then tied their hands behind their backs, in which condition they walked into San Francisco station. Nobody, however, was hurt. The cars were broken open and a large amount of freight was taken by them."

SOUTHERN.

While passing through Georgia, Thomas A. Edison, the electrician, conceived the plan of a machine for picking cotton, and showed sketches of his new invention to persons in a hotel at Atlanta.

The Houston (Tex.) Savings Bank has failed, with liabilities approximating $500,000. The suspension caused great excitement in the city, and was wholly unexpected in business circles. As the news spread through the town several hundred anxious depositors gathered about the bank, excitedly discussing the causes leading to the suspension. A receiver has been appointed.

Sam Ennis, a brother of the Sheriff of Baldwin County, Ga., shot and killed Deputy Sheriff C. N. Haywood. The trouble grew out of Haywood, who is a Prohibitionist, criticising an anti-prohibition speech made by a brother of Ennis.

The Louisiana Board of Pardons has refused to interfere in the cases of Pat Ford and John Murphy, the murderers of T. J. Murphy, and they must hang. A petition of commutation of sentence was signed by 24,000 persons.

In Northern Alabama Mormon elders have made many converts. In some sections the farmers have warned them to leave, but the elders refuse to go, saying they are doing legitimate work, and will be protected by the Government.

Enraged at a fractious cow, Gaston McCartney, a farmer of LaGrange, Ga., tired at the animal, missed his aim, and shot dead his 9-year-old son.

WASHINGTON.

The Senate Committee on Public Lands has voted to report adversely the nomination of Surveyor General Dement, of Utah.

The Senate Committee on Commerce has agreed to report favorably the Dingley shipping bill, with amendment.

The House Committee on Postoffices and Post Roads unanimously agreed to report adversely all bills before it for the purchase or construction of telegraph lines by the Government.

In the Supreme Court of the United States the case of the State of Tennessee against the Pullman Car Company was decided favorably for the latter. The question involved the right of the State to tax the property of the company, whose cars pass through the State. The decision sustained that of the lower courts, which had been in favor of the Pullman Company.

Bills are pending in both branches of Congress to increase the rate of postage on fourth-class matter from 1 to 2 cents per ounce. The reason is that the deficit in the Postoffice Department for 1885 was $10,500,000 and the deficit for the current year is estimated at $9,000,000.

The following cable dispatch has been received by the Chinese Minister at Washington from the Governor General of Canton:

CANTON, Feb. 25.

His Excellency Cheng, Chinese Minister, Washington, D. C.:

Cablegrams received from Chinese merchants at San Francisco stating that Chinese in the United States have been most outrageously attacked. Hearing this news Canton people are furious. Retaliation is threatened. How did the American Government act in this matter? Can you not ask the President to adopt measures for the protection of the Chinese there and for prevention of these inhuman acts in order to preserve the good friendship of the two countries? Otherwise the consequences here may be serious. CHANG CHI TUNG.

President Cleveland has nominated General Alfred H. Terry to the Major Generalship made vacant by the death of General Hancock. General Terry was born in Hartford, Conn., November 10, 1827, was graduated from Yale with honorary degrees, and was bred to the bar. He was serving as Colonel of the 2d regiment of the Connecticut militia at the outbreak of the rebellion, and led it to the field. After the battle of Bull Run he returned to Connecticut, recruited the 7th Connecticut Volunteers, and joined Sherman's forces in its command. Col. Terry was made a Brigadier on March 24, 1862. He participated in many of the most noted river battles, and on Jan. 15, 1865, became commander of the 1st division, 24th corps, and, aided by Porter's fleet, carried by assault Fort Fisher, guiding the Confederate supremacy in Cape Fear River. He was brevetted a Brigadier General of the regular army, and voted the thanks of Congress for this service. He was made a full Brigadier General of the United States army for gallant conduct at the capture of Wilmington, N. C. The close of the war in 1865 found him in command of the Department of Virginia, and during the early stages of reconstruction in Virginia he performed valuable services. Since the war he has held important commands in the South and in the Northwest, and has gained a wide reputation as an Indian fighter.

POLITICAL.

The Judiciary Committee of the United States Senate will make an adverse report on the nomination of Zachariah Montgomery, of California, as Assistant Attorney General, on account of his hostility to the public-school system.

The Ohio Supreme Court rendered judgment of ouster in the quo-warranto cases against the Cincinnati Police Commission, but refused to oust Police Superintendent Hudson, who was elected for one year. The action of Gov. Foraker in removing the Commissioners is thus sustained.

A Washington dispatch states that the Senate Military Committee "has agreed on the House bill for the relief of Fitz-John Porter. Senators Cameron and Sewell voted with the Democrats in favor of the bill. There will be a majority and a minority report. The former will probably be prepared by Senator Sewell and the latter by Senator Logan. The bill will have a majority of fourin the Senate, as Senators Sewell, Hoar, Cameron, Jones of Nevada, Sabin, and Pike will vote with the Democrats in its support."

The President has nominated Henry Albert Johnson, of the District of Columbia, to be Consul at Venice; Mortimer A. Turner, of Arkansas, to be Consul at St. Thomas; and Commodore William T. Truxton to be a Rear-Admiral.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The deposits in the Government savings banks of Canada during January were $595,393. The amount standing to the credit of patrons is $19,056,028.

A woman was blown from a train between Erie and Dunkirk while passing from the dining-car to the sleeper. She received a severe gash in the left temple.

A skating rink and three other structures at Troy, N. Y., were burned, falling walls injuring several persons, the skull of one man being crushed. The financial loss is $45,000. A business block at Baltimore, occupied by clothing firms, was partially gutted, the losses reaching $95,000.

John Swinton believes that the most deadly blow yet given to King Alcohol is the rule of the Knights of Labor excluding liquor-dealers and saloonkeepers from their organization. "It is doing more," he says, "to put an end to drunkenness and to bring the rum traffic under the ban than all the laws of Maine and all the speeches of Gough ever did."

The Canadian Pacific Railway depot at Winnipeg was destroyed by fire. The loss approximates $175,000.

A snowstorm in the Province of Quebec has continued four days, and several Intercolonial freight trains were buried out of sight. In some of the cuttings the snow was eighteen feet in depth for a distance of half a mile. Three men were found frozen to death in the streets of New York the other morning.

The Argentine Republic and Uruguay are on the verge of a serious quarrel.

The census of the Northwest Territories of Canada shows 24,000 whites, 20,000 Indians, and 4,000 half-breeds.

FOREIGN.

The Paris municipal authorities have ordered the name of the Deity expunged from children's school books.

A man named Peronnier, believed to be insane, caused a sensation in the French Chamber of Deputies by drawing a revolver and firing twice with a downward aim, at the same time throwing a letter toward M. Clemenceau. Peronnier was quickly seized, and hurried to prison.

Servia refuses to accept the treaty of peace drafted by Bulgaria.

The average prices of the leading cereals in the English markets for the last year are quoted up as 32s 10d per quarter for wheat, 30s 1d for barley, and 20s 7d for oats. All these are for the quarter of eight measured bushels, which for English wheat averages about eight times sixty-two pounds. It is understood that the wheat figures apply only to the grain grown at home, the product of Indian soil having averaged even less. The lowest price was 30s 2d, touched the last Saturday in the year, but even that minimum of less than 8s cents per sixty pounds has been surpassed since then. The average had not been so low in any former year since 1761, and only four times in the whole of the eighteenth century.

The Archduchess Maria of Tuscany was married at Vienna to the Archduke Carl Stephan, brother of the Queen Regent of Spain.

Prince Bismark has recovered from his recent illness.

Mr. Henry Stevens, the American bibliologist, died at London, Eng., after a long and painful illness.

A Paris journal asserts that Lord Salisbury drew up a convention with Turkey for the cession of Crete to England on the payment of £3,000,000 and a guarantee that Greece would be prevented from taking aggressive measures, but that Gladstone hesitates to confirm the same.

The Associated Chambers of Agriculture of Great Britain have adopted a resolution favoring the imposition of import duties on foreign corn.

John Morley, Chief Secretary for Ireland, in addressing a conference of Liberal delegates of London, admitted that the Government expected to make an early appeal to the country on the Irish difficulty.

LATER NEWS ITEMS.

The Ways and Means Committee heard arguments against the Morrison bill from Chairman Jones and Secretary Cope, of the American Iron and Steel Association. A sub-committee listened to arguments from Wisconsin, Connecticut, and New York tobacco-growers, who ask that a duty of 75 cents a pound be imposed on unstemmed tobacco suitable for wrappers, and a duty of $1 a pound on stemmed tobacco of the same quality.

The House Claims Committee has reported favorably a bill which directs that the demands of workmen for overtime under the eight-hour law shall be referred to the Court of Claims. The estimated cost of the proposed legislation is about $25,000,000.

The Ohio Supreme Court affirmed the ruling of the lower court in refusing to grant a writ of habeas corpus to Daniel J. Dillon, ordered to be imprisoned for contempt by the House of Representatives.

In the Iowa House a report was adopted recommending the appointment of a committee to investigate the charges against Judge Walter I. Hayes, who is accused of giving decisions in opposition to the purpose and intent of the prohibitive law.

In the Kentucky House Robert G. Thomas referred slightingly to William Jackson, who walked to where Thomas stood and invited him outside to "thrash him." Thomas declined, but later left the chamber, and returning with a pistol, informed Jackson that he was prepared to settle the dispute. Great excitement resulted, the Speaker ordering the arrest of both men.

Judge Hunter, of Newark, Ohio, has sentenced D. J. Boling to be hanged June 25 for the murder of John Douglas.

Prof. Gustavus Hinrichs has been dismissed from the Iowa State University by the regents, on the ground that he has been creating dissensions among the faculty.

Thomas Cleveland has been jailed at Cassopolis, Mich., for a murderous assault upon Myers J. Vincent, a school-teacher, in the presence of a room full of pupils. Two ribs were severed with a razor, and Vincent lies at the point of death.

The pallium of an Archbishop was formally conferred upon Bishop Corrigan, in St. Patrick's Cathedral, New York.

In the British House of Commons a Conservative member demanded that the Government make known its policy for maintaining order in Ireland before a vote is taken on the Irish estimates. The scheme was prearranged, and was met by the Parnellites with a resolution to vote with Gladstone.

THE debate on the Blair education bill was continued in the Senate on the 5th. The Fitz-John Porter relief bill was reported to the Senate. Secretary Manning reported to the Senate that $6,385,550 of the bonds maturing April 1 are held by national banks. The Senate passed a bill accepting for the United States the Grant memorial collection presented to the Government by Mrs. Grant and W. H. Vanderbilt. The President nominated James C. Matthews, of New York, to be Recorder of Deeds for the District of Columbia, vice Frederick Douglass, whose resignation sent to the President on Jan. 5, is made public to-day. On motion of Senator Platt (Conn.) the Senate adjourned, in expression of their sympathy with Senator Hawly (Conn.) in his bereavement. A minority report on the Eads ship-railway bill was submitted to the House of Representatives. It says that the bill will take from the public treasury $37,000,000 for the benefit of a private corporation, located and to be operated exclusively in a foreign country, without any corresponding benefit to our country or people. The pensions appropriation bill was passed after a lively partisan debate, during which the House was often in excitement and confusion; also a bill extending the limit of the cost of the Peoria public building from $225,000 to $275,000.

CONGRESS.

What Is Being Done by the National Legislature.

SENATOR MITCHELL, of Oregon, spoke in the Senate, on the 2d inst., in support of his anti-Chinese bill. The Blair educational bill was discussed, after which the Senate retired. The House had a lively session. Mr. Morrison from the Committee on Rules, reported a resolution that a select committee of nine members be appointed to inquire into the Pan-Electric telephone matter and report whether any officer of the Government has been improperly influenced. Mr. Gibson, of West Virginia, bitterly criticised Mr. Pulitzer, whom he accused of shrinking behind the columns of his newspaper to attack men instead of attacking them on the floor of the House. Mr. Morrison said: "As a friend of the officer supposed to be most affected (if anybody is to be affected by this investigation), having unlimited confidence in his honor and in his personal and official integrity, I want this resolution to pass and I want this investigation to go on." Mr. Rogers, of Arkansas, welcomed the resolution and hoped the investigation would be made thorough and searching. Mr. Breckenridge, of Arkansas, said he was proud to call the Attorney General his personal friend. He defended his course, declaring that his skirts were perfectly clear of any wrong-doing, and hoped the whole case would be investigated. The resolution was adopted without division. Mr. Burnes, of Missouri, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the immediate deficiency bill, and it was referred to the committee of the whole. The House, at its evening session, passed twenty-eight pension bills.

REPRESENTATIVE WOLFORD, of Kentucky, who was a Colonel in the Union army, made a speech in the House on the 27th ult., giving credit to the Southern members for voting for all the pensions asked. He then gave notice that he would introduce a bill to give to every Confederate soldier in need of it an artificial leg or arm. Mr. Weaver, of Nebraska, discussed the silver question, and predicted that the effort of the money oligarchy, assisted by the Executive officers of the nation, to double the people's burdens and cripple the business of the country by the suspension of the silver coinage, would prove unsuccessful; now the attention of the people was attracted to the subject. He favored unlimited coinage, and asserted that if the whole yield of the mines was coined annually it would be twenty years before the per capita circulation of the United States would be equal to that of France, and this calculation, he said, had been made without taking into account any increase in the population of the country. Mr. Candler, of Georgia submitted an argument against the suspension of silver coinage, and contended that there was no sound basis for the prediction made by the "goldbugs" that the continued coinage of silver would have the effect of driving gold out of the country. Mr. Clements, of Georgia, thought that the true test of the value of silver was not the gold standard as established in countries where the value of gold had been enhanced by the demonetization of silver, but the purchasing capacity of silver.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND sent to the Senate, on March 1, a special message declining to furnish unofficial documents relating to suspensions from office, and claiming the right to destroy them. When the message had been read Mr. Edmunds said it reminded him of the communication of King Charles I. to the Parliament. He also said that the President, unintentionally, no doubt, had entirely misstated the question involved between himself and the Senate. It was ordered printed. The Senate, in executive session, rejected the nominations of Messrs. Pillsbury and Chase to be Collectors of Internal Revenue at Boston, Mass., and Portland, Me., respectively. The nomination of John H. Shelter to be Postmaster at Kankakee was confirmed. The nomination of Surveyor General Dement, of Utah, was reported adversely. In the House of Representatives a member from South Carolina introduced a bill for the distribution of the surplus moneys in the Treasury, during the next four years, among the respective States in proportion to their representation in the Senate and House. Mr. Brumm asked unanimous consent of the House to have printed in the Record a memorial signed by J. P. Brigham and others, asking for the impeachment of Daniel Manning, Secretary of the Treasury, for high crimes and misdemeanors in the execution of the silver law. Mr. Beach objected.

THE Blair educational bill was again the subject of debate in the Senate on the 2d inst. Senators Call of Florida, Riddleberger of Virginia, Berry of Arkansas, and Hampton of South Carolina opposed the Allison amendment relating to colored schools, and Senator Saulsbury of Delaware opposed the bill with or without the amendment. Senator Ingalls of Kansas asked who was to administer the fund of $77,000,000 provided by the bill, and, answering his own question by saying that the Secretary of the Interior was to do it, launched into an attack of Assistant Secretary Montgomery, reading many extracts from a book entitled: "Drops from the Poisoned Fountain; Facts That Are Stranger than Fiction; by Zach. Montgomery, of the California bar." President Cleveland sent to the Senate a message urging measures to protect Chinese in the Western States and Territories, and insisting upon the punishment of citizens who commit outrages upon them. In the House the pensions appropriation bill came up for debate, and Mr. Cannon, of Illinois, supported it. Mr. Wilson, of West Virginia, vigorously defended Pensions Commissioner Black from the attack made in the House recently. He then said that he saw in the war the stately stepping of that Providence which used the wrath of men to work out its beneficial purposes. It had secured the preservation of the Union, but it had secured a greater result than the preservation of the Union in the extinction of slavery; and greater than the extinction of slavery was the utter annihilation of any ground, cause, or excuse for further sectional prejudice or sectional hate. Mr. Matson (Ind.) supported Mr. Black in his charges against ex-Commissioner Dudley. Mr. Butterworth (Ohio) criticised Commissioner Black's report as an insult to every man and woman in the employ of the Commissioner of Pensions. He spoke bitterly of the witnesses before the Warner Committee, especially Maj. Clark who were so swift, he said, to assault their chief that they might become the pampered and favored minions of a coming incumbent. Mr. Butterworth declared that every one knew that wherever Democracy reigned an honest ballot and a fair count was a lost art. Secretary Manning sent to the House, in reply to the Blair resolution calling for information in regard to the past and future policy of the Treasury Department on the silver question, a document of forty pages, containing a vast amount of correspondence and statistical information. The Secretary declares that he has used his utmost efforts to get silver into circulation, and says that he has already given his opinion as to the propriety of expressing his views concerning the past and future policy of the department upon the subject.

SENATOR HARRISON, of Indiana, supported the Blair education bill in the debate in the Senate on the 3d inst., and opposed the Allison amendment. He would leave the fund to be administered as all education funds of all the States were administered—in the hands of the people of the States. An amendment of the Allison amendment, offered by Senator Hear, was adopted, after which Senator Edmunds offered a substitute for the Allison amendment. Senator Blair accepted it, and it was agreed to. It provides that wherever separate schools for whites and negroes are maintained the money appropriated by the bill shall be paid out for the support of such white and colored schools respectively in the proportion which the white and colored children between the ages of 10 and 21 bear to each other. Prior to the adoption of the substitute, Senator Logan made a speech in which he attacked the South for suppressing the negro vote, and charged that the present bill was intended to raise money on the strength of the black population of the South for the benefit of the Southern whites. Mr. Frye presented a petition from citizens of New Jersey for the legal protection of young girls in all localities under the jurisdiction of Congress. Mr. Evarts introduced a bill to permit the sale of goods by sample in any State or Territory by non-residents. In the House the pension appropriation bill was debated. Mr. Weaver (Iowa) reported back to the House the resolution directing the House Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department to investigate the past and present administration of the Pension Bureau. The army appropriation bill was reported to the House by Mr. Bragg. It sets aside $23,887,588.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND

He Will Not Furnish Certain Papers Regarding Suspensions from Office.

In a Message to the Senate He Maintains His Right to Withhold Them.

The President sent to the Senate, on the 1st of March, a message stating his position in relation to the suspensions of officials, and defending his action in refusing to send to the Senate papers on file in departments upon which it is assumed by the Senate that the suspensions of certain officials are based. The message was read in the open session of the Senate. It is as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

Ever since the beginning of the present session of the Senate the different heads of the departments attached to the Executive branch of the Government have been plied with various requests and demands from committees of the Senate, from members of such committees, and at last from the Senate itself, requiring the transmission of reasons for the suspension of certain officials during the recess of that body, or for the papers touching the conduct of such officials, or for all papers and documents relating to such suspensions, or for all documents and papers filed in such departments in relation to the management and conduct of the offices held by such suspended officials. The different terms from time to time adopted in making these requests and demands, the order in which they succeeded each other, and the fact that when made by the Senate the resolution for that purpose was passed in executive session, have led to a presumption, the correctness of which will, I suppose, be candidly admitted, that from first to last the information thus sought and the papers thus demanded were for use by the Senate and its committees, in considering the propriety of the suspensions referred to.

Though those suspensions are my executive acts, based upon considerations addressed to me alone, and for which I am wholly responsible, I have had no invitation from the Senate to state the position which I have felt constrained to assume in relation to the same, or to interpret for myself my acts and motives in the premises. In this condition of affairs I have forborne addressing the Senate upon the subject lest I might be accused of thrusting myself unbidden upon the attention of that body.

But the report of the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate, lately presented and published, which censures the Attorney General of the United States for his refusal to transmit certain papers relating to a suspension from office, and which also, if I correctly interpret it, evinces a misapprehension of the position of the Executive upon such suspensions, will, I hope, justify this communication.

The President refers to the resolution of the Senate calling for the Dustin papers and the reply of the Attorney General thereto, and says:

Upon this resolution and the answer thereto the issue is thus stated by the Committee on the Judiciary at the outset of the report:

"The important question, then, is whether it is within the constitutional competence of either house of Congress to have access to the official papers and documents in the various public offices of the United States created by laws enacted by themselves."

I do not suppose that "the public offices of the United States" are regulated or controlled in their relations to either house of Congress by the fact that they were "created by laws enacted by themselves." It must be that these instrumentations were created for the benefit of the people and to answer the general purposes of government under the Constitution and the laws, and that they are unincumbered by any lien in favor of either branch of Congress growing out of their Constitution, and unembarrassed by any obligation to the Senate as the price of their creation. The complaint of the committee that access to official papers in the public offices is denied the Senate is met by the statement that at no time has it been the disposition or the intention of the President or any department of the executive branch of the Government to withhold from the Senate official documents or papers filed in any of the public offices. While it is by no means conceded that the Senate has the right in any case to review the act of the Executive in removing or suspending a public officer upon official documents or otherwise, it is considered that documents and papers of that nature should, because they are official, be freely transmitted to the Senate upon its demand, trusting the use of the same for proper and legitimate purposes to the good faith of that body. And though no such paper or document has been specifically demanded in any of the numerous requests and demands made upon the departments, yet, as often as they were found in the public offices, they have been furnished in answer to such applications.

The letter of the Attorney General in response to the resolutions of the Senate in the particular case mentioned in the committee's report was written at my suggestion and by my direction. There had been no official papers or documents filed in his department relating to the case within the period specified in the resolution. The letter was intended, by its description of the papers and documents remaining in the custody of the department, to convey the idea that they were not official; and it was assumed that the resolution called for information, papers, and documents of the same character as were required by the requests and demands which preceded it. Everything that had been written or done on behalf of the Senate from the beginning pointed to all letters and papers of a private and unofficial nature, as the objects of search, if they were to be found in the departments, and provided they had been presented to the Executive with a view to their consideration upon the question of suspension from office.

Against the transmission of such papers and documents I have interposed my advice and direction. This has not been done, as is suggested in the committee's report, upon the assumption on my part that the Attorney General or any other head of a department "is the servant of the President, and is to give or withhold copies of documents in his office according to the will of the Executive and not otherwise," but because I regarded the papers and documents withheld and addressed to me or intended for my use and action purely unofficial and private, not infrequently confidential, and having reference to the performance of a duty exclusively mine. I consider them in no proper sense as upon the files of the department, but as deposited there for my convenience, remaining still completely under my control. I suppose, if I desired to take them into my custody, I might do so with entire propriety, and if I saw fit to destroy them no one could complain.

The papers and documents that are now the objects of the Senate's quest consist of letters and representations addressed to the Executive or intended for his inspection; they are voluntarily written and presented by private citizens who are not in the least instigated thereto by any official invitation or at all subject to official control. While some of them are entitled to executive consideration, many of them are so irrelevant, or, in the light of other facts, so worthless, that they have not been given the least weight in determining the question to which they are supposed to relate. Are all these, simply because they are preserved, to be considered official documents, and subject to the inspection of the Senate? If not, who is to determine which belong to this class? Are the motives and purposes of the Senate, as they are day by day developed, such as would be satisfied with my selection? Am I to submit to theirs at the risk of being charged with making a suspension from office upon evidence which was not even considered? Are these papers to be regarded official because they have not only been presented but preserved in the public offices? Their nature and character remain the same whether they are kept in the Executive Mansion or deposited in the departments. There is no mysterious power of transmutation in departmental custody, nor is there magic in the undefined and sacred solemnity of department files. If the presence of these papers in the public offices is a stumbling block in the way of the performance of senatorial duty, it can be easily removed.

The papers and documents which have been described derive no official character from any constitutional, statutory, or other requirement making them necessary to the performance of the official duty of the Executive. It will not be denied, I suppose, that the President may suspend a public officer in the entire absence of any papers or documents to aid his official judgment and discretion. And I am quite prepared to avow that the cases are not few in which suspensions from office have depended more upon oral representations made to me by citizens of known good repute, and by members of the House of Representatives and Senators of the United States, than upon any letters and documents presented for my examination. I have not felt justified in suspecting the veracity, integrity, and patriotism of Senators, or ignoring their representations, because they were not in party affiliation with the majority of their associates; and I recall a few suspensions which bear the approval of individual members identified politically with the majority in the Senate. While, therefore, I am constrained to deny the right of the Senate to the papers and documents described, so far as the right to the same is based upon the claim that they are in any view of the subject official, I am also led unequivocally to dispute the right of the Senate, by the aid of any documents whatever, or in any way save through the judicial process of trial on impeachment, to review or reverse the act of the Executive in the suspension during the recess of the Senate of Federal officials.

I believe the power to remove or suspend such officials is vested in the President alone by the Constitution, which in express terms provides that "the executive power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America," and that "he shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed." The Senate belongs to the legislative branch of the Government. When the Constitution by express provision superadded to its legislative duties the right to advise and consent to appointments to office, and to sit as a court of impeachment it conferred upon that body all the control and regulation of executive action supposed to be necessary for the safety of the people; and this express and special grant of such extraordinary powers, not in any way related to or growing out of general Senatorial duty, and in itself a departure from the general plan of our Government, should be held, under a familiar maxim of construction, to exclude every other right of interference with executive functions.

As the first Congress which assembled after the adoption of the Constitution, comprising many who aided in its preparation, a legislative construction was given to that instrument in which the independence of the Executive in the matter of removals from office was fully sustained. I think it will be found that, in the subsequent discussions of this question, there was generally, if not at all times, a proposition pending to in some way curtail this power of the President by legislation, which furnishes evidence that to limit such power it was supposed to be necessary to supplement the Constitution by such legislation.

The first enactment of this description was passed under a stress of partisanship and political bitterness, which culminated in the President's impeachment. The law provided that the Federal officers to whom it applied could only be suspended during the recess of the Senate when shown by evidence satisfactory to the President to be guilty of misconduct in office, or crime, or when incapable or disqualified to perform their duties, and that, within twenty days after the next meeting of the Senate, it should be the duty of the President "to report to the Senate such suspension, with the evidence and reasons for his action in the case." This statute passed in 1867, when Congress was overwhelmingly and bitterly opposed, politically, to the President, may be regarded as an indication that even then it was thought necessary by a Congress determined upon the subjugation of the Executive to the legislative will to furnish a law for that purpose, instead of attempting to reach the object intended by an invocation of any pretended constitutional right.

The law which thus found its way to our statute-book was plain in its terms, and its intent needed no avowal. If valid and now in operation it would justify the present course of the Senate and command the obedience of the Executive to its demands. It may, however, be remarked in passing that under this law the President had the privilege of presenting to the body which assumed to review his executive acts his reasons therefor, instead of being excluded from explanation or judged by papers found in the department.

Two years after the law of 1867 was passed, and within less than five weeks after the inauguration of the President in political accord with both branches of Congress, the sections of the act regulating suspensions from office during the recess of the Senate were entirely repealed, and in their place were substituted provisions which, instead of limiting the causes of suspension to misconduct, crime, disability, or disqualification, expressly permitted such suspension by the President "in his discretion," and completely abandoned the requirement obliging him to report to the Senate "the evidence and reasons" for his action. With these modifications, and with all branches of the Government in political harmony, and in the absence of partisan incentive to captious discussion, the law, as it was left by the amendment of 1869, was much less destructive of executive discretion; and yet the great General and patriotic citizen who, on the 4th day of March, 1869, assumed the duties of chief executive, and for whose freer administration of his high office the most hateful restraints of the law of 1867 were, on the 5th day of April, 1869, removed, mindful of his obligation to defend and protect every prerogative of his great trust, and apprehensive of the injury threatened the public service in the continued operation of these statutes, even in their modification, in his first message to Congress advised their repeal and set forth their unconstitutional character and hurtful tendency. I am unable to state whether or not this recommendation for a repeal of those laws has been since repeated. If it has not, the reason can probably be found in the experience which demonstrated the fact that the necessities of the political situation but rarely developed their vicious character.

And so it happens that after an extension of nearly twenty years of almost innocuous desuetude, these laws are brought forth, apparently the repealed as well as the unrepealed, and put in the way of an executive who is willing, if permitted, to attempt an improvement in the methods of administration. The constitutionality of these laws is by no means admitted. But why should the provisions of the repealed law, which required specific cause for suspension and a report to the Senate of "evidence and reasons," be now, in effect, applied to the present executive instead of the law, afterward passed and unrepealed, which distinctly permits "suspensions by the President" in his discretion, and carefully omits the requirement that "evidence and reasons for his action in the case" shall be reported to the Senate?

The requests and demands which by the score have for nearly three months been presented to the different departments of the Government, whatever may be their form, have but one complexion. They assume the right of the Senate to sit in judgment upon the exercise of my executive function, for which I am solely responsible to the people from whom I have so lately received the sacred trust of office. My oath to support and defend the Constitution; my duty to the people who have chosen me to execute the powers of their great office, and not to relinquish them, and my duty to the Chief Magistracy, which I must preserve unimpaired in all its dignity and vigor, compel me to refuse to comply with these demands. To the end that the service may be improved, the Senate is invited to the fullest scrutiny of the persons submitted to them for public office, in recognition of the constitutional power of that body to advise and consent to their appointment.

I shall continue, as I have thus far done, to furnish, at the request of the confirming body, all the information I possess touching the fitness of the nominees placed before them for their action, both when they are proposed to fill vacancies and to take the places of suspended officials. Upon a refusal to confirm I shall not assume the right to ask the reasons for the action of the Senate, nor question its determination. I cannot think that anything more is required to secure wor hy incumbents in public office than a careful and independent discharge of our respective duties within their well-defined limits. Though the propriety of suspensions might be better assured if the action of the President was subject to review by the Senate, yet if the Constitution and the laws have placed this responsibility upon the executive branch of the Government it should not be divided nor the discretion which it involved relinquished.

It has been claimed that the present Executive having pledged himself not to remove officials except for cause, the fact of their suspension implies such misconduct on the part of a suspended official as injures his character and reputation, and therefore the Senate should review the case for his vindication. I have said that certain officials should not, in my opinion, be removed during the continuance of the term for which they were appointed solely for the purpose of putting in their place those in political affiliation with the appointing power; and this declaration was immediately followed by a description of official partisanship which ought not to entitle those in whom it was exhibited to consideration. It is not apparent how an adherence to the course thus announced carries with it the consequences described. If in any degree the suggestion is worthy of consideration it is to be hoped that there may be a defense against unjust suspension in the justice of the Executive.

Every pledge which I have made by which I have placed a limitation upon my exercise of Executive power has been faithfully redeemed. Of course the pretense is not put forth that no mistakes have been committed; but not a suspension has been made except it appeared to my satisfaction that the public welfare would be improved thereby. Many applications for suspension have been denied, and the adherence to the rule laid down to govern my action as to such suspensions has caused much irritation and impatience on the part of those who have insisted upon more changes in the offices.

The pledges I have made were made to the people, and to them I am responsible for the manner in which they have been redeemed. I am not responsible to the Senate, and I am unwilling to submit my actions and official conduct to them for judgment. There are no grounds for an allegation that the fear of being found false to my professions influences me in declining to submit to the demands of the Senate. I have not constantly refused to suspend officials, and thus incurred the displeasure of political friends, and yet willfully broken faith with the people for the sake of being false to them.

Neither the discontent of party friends nor the allurement constantly offered of confirmations of appointees conditioned upon the avowal that suspensions have been made on party grounds alone, nor the threat proposed in the resolutions now before the Senate that no confirmations will be made unless the demands of that body be complied with, is sufficient to discourage or deter me from following in the way which I am convinced leads to better government for the people.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

Executive Mansion, Washington, D. C., March 1, 1886.

THE MESSAGE IN THE SENATE.

Edmunds Likens It to One of King Charles I.—Referred to a Committee.

When the message had been read in the Senate, Mr. Edmunds arose and said that it reminded him of the communications of King Charles I. to the British Parliament. The President, he said, had, unintentionally, no doubt, entirely misstated the question involved between himself and the Senate. Continuing, the Senator said:

I think I am safe in saying that it is the first time in the history of the Republic that any President of the United States has undertaken to interfere with the deliberations of either House of Congress on questions pending before them otherwise than by messages on the state of the Union, which the Constitution commands him to make from time to time. This message is devoted solely to a question for the Senate itself, in regard to itself, that it has under consideration. That is its singularity. I think it will strike reflecting people in this country as somewhat extraordinary, if, in these days of reform, anything at all can be thought extraordinary. The Senate of the United States, in its communications to the heads of departments—not his heads of departments, but the heads of departments created by law—directed them to transmit certain official papers, and that is all. The President of the United States undertakes to change the question into a consideration by the Senate of his reasons or motives for putting a civil officer, as it might be called, "under arrest"—with which the Senate has not undertaken in any way to make any question at all. By every message he has sent to this body—and they are all public—he has asked the Senate to advise and consent to the removal of one officer and the appointment of another. That is what he has done, and the Senate in calling for these papers—to say nothing of wider considerations about any deficiencies in the Department of Justice—is asked to remove these officers, without knowing the condition of the administration of their offices.

Mr. Edmunds moved that the President's message be referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. Harris, of Tennessee, remarked that, for reasons to which he could not then refer, he had no desire to discuss the matter involved, and moved that the message be printed and laid on the table—the usual course, he said. After a little parrying between the two Senators the motion of Senator Edmunds was agreed to and the message was sent to the Judiciary Committee.

SENATOR PUGH'S REPORT.

The Minority Report of the Judiciary Committee Replies to the Majority.

Mr. Pugh, of Alabama, submitted to the Senate, on the 1st of March, the report of the minority of the Judiciary Committee on the Senate papers relating to the removal from office of United States District Attorney Dustin of Alabama. It is very long, and contains no resolutions. It says that when President Cleveland came into office 95 per cent. of the offices were filled by Republicans. Notwithstanding the great demand of his supporters for offices and the fact that good reasons for the removal of Republicans were abundant, removals from office have been sparingly made.

In the case of Dustin the report says that Dustin has made no complaint that he was wronged. The whole point at issue is the right to the possession of a single document relating exclusively to the removal of Dustin. The decision of the President that this document is not a public one must, the report says, be accepted as conclusive. The minority admits that all public documents relating to any subject over which Congress has power are subject to call, but denies the right to demand documents relating exclusively to removals or suspensions. The only rightful custodian of such papers is the President.

The minority expresses surprise at the appearance in the majority report of the resolution relating to the preference of appointing honorably discharged soldiers and sailors, and asks by what authority such a resolution was reported, and what it has to do with the Dustin case. The information of the minority is that Dustin never was a Union soldier, but on the contrary was either a Confederate soldier or sympathizer, and they believe the intent of the resolution was to secure political and partisan advantage. In conclusion, the report denies the right of the Senate to try the President for an alleged violation of his public pledges. It admits that the President did declare that he would not remove officials merely because they were Republicans, but says he at the same time declared that he would decapitate officeholders who had been guilty of offensive partisanship. The President, it says, declines to submit voluntarily to the decisions of a tribunal having no jurisdiction over the question, the sufficiency of such cause for suspensions, especially when his fear is that such conduct in the officer might be regarded by the Republican majority as a reason for the retention of the incumbent in office.

In relation to the reasons of the President for removing officials the report says that the documents in nearly every case contain only a partial statement of the causes, facts, and reasons, while in a large majority of the cases the President relied on oral testimony, which it would be impossible for him to remember or reproduce in every case, so as to put the Senate in possession of all the facts which governed him in the suspension, even if the Senate had the authority under the Constitution or laws of the United States to call him to an account.

FOR LOVE OF ADVENTURE.

Four Thousand Five Hundred Miles in a Canoe.

[New Orleans dispatch.]

Two brothers, from Pittsfield, Mass., W. E. and H. F. Hermance, aged respectively twenty-three and eighteen years, arrived in the city yesterday from Livingston, Mont., having traveled the distance of 4,500 miles in an open, light canoe, since July 4, 1885. The trip was made purely for love of adventure. The hardships of the trip have a romantic color, but, beyond a little spell of sickness, they have made the long voyage in safety, although they had unwelcome adventures with Indians and blizzards. The Eda is fifteen feet long, thirty-four inches beam, is made of yellow pine, and is provided with dry storage compartments. They are provided with a gun and cooking utensils, and camped out every night.

THE CHINESE QUESTION.

President Cleveland Sends a Message to Congress on the Recent Outrages.

He Says the Power of the Government Should Be Exerted to Punish Wrong-doers.

The President sent to the Senate and House of Representatives, on the 2d inst., a message on the subject of the outrages committed in the West against the persons and property of Chinese residents, and with it a note from the Secretary of State to the Chinese Minister containing an exhaustive statement of the whole Chinese question. The President's message is as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

It is made the constitutional duty of the President to recommend to the consideration of Congress from time to time such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient. In no matters can the necessity of this be more evident than when the good faith of the United States under the solemn obligation of treaties with foreign powers is concerned. The question of the treatment of the subjects of China sojourning within the jurisdiction of the United States presents such a matter for the urgent and earnest consideration of the Executive and the Congress.

In my first annual message, upon the assembling of the present Congress, I adverted to this question. [The President here quotes the passage from his message upon the Chinese question.] At the time I wrote this the shocking occurrences at Rock Springs, in Wyoming Territory, were fresh in the minds of all, and had been recently presented anew to the attention of this Government by the Chinese Minister in a note which, while not unnaturally exhibiting some misconception of our Federal system of administration in the Territories while they, as yet, are not in the exercise of the full measure of that sovereign self-government pertaining to the States of the Union, presents in truthful terms the main features of the cruel outrage there perpetrated upon inoffensive subjects of China.

In the investigation of the Rock Springs outbreak and the ascertainment of the facts on which the Chinese Minister's statements rest, the Chinese representatives were aided by the agents of the United States, and the reports submitted, having been thus framed and recounted facts within the knowledge of witnesses on both sides, possess an important truthfulness which could not fail to give them great impressiveness. The facts, which so far are not controverted or affected by any exculpatory or mitigating testimony, show the murder of a number of Chinese subjects in September last, at Rock Springs, the wounding of many others, and the spoliation of the property of all when the unhappy survivors had been driven from their habitations. There is no allegation that the victims, by any lawless or disorderly act on their part, contributed to bring about a collision. On the contrary, it appears that the law-abiding disposition of these people, who were sojourners in our midst under the sanction of hospitality and express treaty obligations, was made the pretext for the attack upon them.

This outrage upon law and treaty engagements was committed by a lawless mob. None of the aggressors, happily for the national good name, appear by the reports to have been citizens of the United States. They were aliens, engaged in that remote district as mining laborers, who became excited against the Chinese laborers, as it would seem, because of their refusal to join them in a strike to secure higher wages. The oppression of Chinese subjects by their rivals in the competition for labor does not differ in violence and illegality from that applied to other classes of native or alien labor. All are equally under the protection of law, and equally entitled to enjoy the benefits of assured public order. Was there no treaty in existence referring to the rights of Chinese subjects, did they come hither as all other strangers who voluntarily resort to this land of freedom, of self-government, and of laws, here peaceably to win their bread and to live their lives, there can be no question that they would be entitled still to the same measure of protection from violence and the same free forum for the redress of their grievances as any other aliens. So far as the treaties between the United States and China stipulate for the treatment of the Chinese subjects actually in the United States as the citizens or subjects of the "most favored nation" are treated, they create no new status for them—they simply recognize and conform a general and existing rule, applicable to all nations alike; for none are favored above others by domestic law, and none by foreign treaties, unless it be the Chinese themselves in some respects.

For, by the third article of the treaty of Nov. 17, 1880, between the United States and China, it is provided that if Chinese laborers, or Chinese of any other class, now either permanently or temporarily residing in the territory of the United States, meet with ill-treatment at the hands of any other persons, the Government of the United States will exert all its power to devise measures for their protection and to secure to them the same rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions as may be enjoyed by the citizens or subjects of the most-favored nation, and to which they are entitled by treaty. This article may be held to constitute a special privilege for Chinese subjects in the United States as compared with other aliens, not that it creates any peculiar rights which others do not share, but because, in case of ill-treatment of the Chinese in the United States, this Government is bound to "exert all its power to devise measures for their protection," by securing to them the rights to which equally with any and all other foreigners they are entitled.

Whether it is now incumbent upon the United States to amend its general laws or devise new measures in this regard I do not consider in the present communication, but confine myself to the particular point raised by the outrages and massacres at Rock Springs. The note of the Chinese Minister, and the documents which accompany it, give as its belief an unexaggerated statement of the lamentable incident, and present impressively the regrettable circumstance that the proceedings in the name of justice for the assessment of the crime and fixing the responsibility therefor were a ghastly mockery of justice.

So long as the Chinese Minister, under his instructions, makes this the basis of an appeal to the principles and convictions of mankind no exception can be taken. But when he goes further, and, taking as his precedent the action of the Chinese Government in past instances where the lives of American citizens and their property in China have been endangered, argues a reciprocal obligation on the part of the United States to indemnify the Chinese subjects who suffered at Rock Springs, it becomes necessary to meet his argument and to deny most emphatically the conclusions he seeks to draw as to the existence of such a liability and the right of the Chinese Government to insist upon it. I draw the attention of the Congress to the latter part of the note of the Secretary of State of Feb. 18, 1886, in reply to the Chinese Minister's representations, and to invite especial consideration of the cogent reasons by which he reaches the conclusion that, while the United States Government is under no obligation, whether by the express terms of its treaties with China or the principles of international law, to indemnify these Chinese subjects for losses caused by such means and under the admitted circumstances, yet that in view of the palpable and discreditable failure of the authorities of Wyoming Territory to bring to justice the guilty parties or to assure to the sufferers an impartial forum in which to seek and obtain compensation for the losses which those subjects have incurred by lack of police protection; and considering further the entire absence of provocation or contribution on the part of the victims, the Executive may be induced to bring the matter to the benevolent consideration of Congress in order that there may be made such provision of relief or indemnity as may be deemed appropriate to the case, as a gracious act of humane treatment has been, with the distinct understanding that the action is in no wise to be a precedent for future claims, wholly gratuitous, and is recommended by the fact of pure generosity toward those who are otherwise helpless.

The correspondence referred to is herewith submitted for the information of Congress.

MICHIGAN AFFAIRS.

—The Cheboygan Tribune appears in a handsome new dress.

—Justice Gale, at Corunna, has just bound over for trial Hank Schaffer, who is charged with having put paris green in the pump of Bob Berry.

—Edwin R. Clarke, of Coldwater, will build and donate to the city a $15,000 building constructed of brick and stone, for the use of the free public library.

—Richard Young, of Carrolltown Township, fell dead in front of the National Bank at Hastings, of heart disease. The deceased was a pioneer of Barry County.

—A malignant form of epizootic has been raging among horses at Maple Rapids. In some cases it very closely resembles glanders. Steps are being taken to prevent its spread.

—The jury in the case of Fred Foote, charged with the murder of Andrew J. Brink, a saloon-keeper at Fenton, on the evening of December 29th last, brought in a verdict of murder in the first degree.

—The doors of Louis Van Ness & Co., who run a general store at Mendon, have been closed by the Sheriff. The firm is an old one, and thought to be sound heretofore. Liabilities are about $35,000; assets unknown.

—The Governor has appointed R. H. Fosdick, of Mio, Agent of the Board of Corrections and Charities for Oscoda County; also, Hon. Watson Beach, of Lexington, Sanilac County, Judge of the Twenty-fourth Judicial Circuit, in place of Levi X. Wixson, resigned. Watson Beach is a lawyer, and also editor of the Sanilac Jeffersonian, published at Lexington.

—When W. J. Carveth, convicted of mingling poison with his wife's medicine, in order to kill her, was brought before the court at Hastings for sentence he made a pitiful plea for mercy, asserting that he was wholly innocent of the crime. He declared that his love for his wife was still the uppermost thought of his heart. The Judge sentenced him to eighteen years in the State's prison at Jackson.

—Wm. Mason and wife, farmers living five miles north of Adrian, were struck by the west-bound express on the Michigan Central at the Whitmore Lake Road crossing. The wagon was demolished. Mason had some ribs broken and received other bruises, and his wife had a deep gash cut over her left eye. The horses were uninjured. The couple were taken to the University Hospital, where their injuries were pronounced severe, but not fatal.

—The State Executive, W. J. Dawson, of the Irish League, has appointed the following Board of Council for Michigan: Isaac Marston, Michael Brennan, Thomas P. Tulle, Patrick Dee, and John Hyde, of Detroit; Edward Duffy, of Ann Arbor; T. A. Weadock, of Bay City; John E. Tyrell, of Jackson; Capt. James Walsh, of Grand Rapids; E. Ryan, of Hancock; O'Brien J. Atkinson, of Port Huron; and Timothy Nester, of Marquette.

—The statement is made in the Peninsular Record, the official organ of the Knights of Labor at Ishpeming, that an assembly of the order has been working at Calumet for nearly a month. The officers of the Calumet & Hecla Mining Company gave notice last October that any of their employes joining the Knights of Labor would be discharged, but it was thought then that an effort would be made to organize notwithstanding the action of the company's officers.

—The wives of George P. Glazier and John R. Gates of Chelsea, thwarted what would have been a heavy bank burglary the other night. They were going home from the sick-bed of a friend at midnight, and, in passing the Chelsea Savings Bank, saw burglars at work. There were four men. One of the quartet was on the lookout and threatened to shoot the women, who ran away terribly frightened. They determined to prevent the robbery if possible, and aroused several of the citizens, who started for the bank, when the burglars fled.

—The school-teachers of lower Michigan assembled at Ann Arbor, last week, to organize a mutual benefit association. Seventeen instructors and high school teachers were at the meeting. Several teachers from the northern peninsula sent letters of acquiescence. The Michigan School Teachers' Association was organized under the law, with L. C. Hull, of Detroit, as President; A. G. Hugner, of Lapeer, Vice President; and V. Spaulding, Secretary. There are to be three meetings annually held at Ann Arbor.

—The Grand Council, Royal Templars of Temperance, of Michigan, elected the following officers for the ensuing year: Grand Councilor, Mrs. P. B. Whitfield, of Grand Rapids; Grand Vice Councilor, L. R. Rummell, of Bay City; Grand Chaplain, Mrs. A. M. Cooper, of Battle Creek; Grand Secretary, G. M. Hasty, of Lansing; Grand Treasurer, A. S. Partridge, of [illegible]; Grand Herald, O. W. Bre[illegible] of Indiana; Grand Deputy [illegible] of Alpena; [illegible] for [illegible] years; [illegible] of Greenville; [illegible] to the Supreme Council, P. B. Whitfield, of Grand Rapids. The annual meeting of the Council will be held on the fourth Tuesday in February, 1887.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

The County Seat Question.

Three weeks from next Monday the voters of Charlevoix county will determine whether they want the county seat removed to Boyne City, the geographical center (territory alone considered), or whether they will have it placed ultimately near the center of population and business. If the latter, they will vote against removal this spring, leaving it where it is until the relative commercial importance of the four principal towns on Pine lake and the Arm is established. From present indications the future center of business and population is likely to be located nearer to Ironton than any point farther east; and Charlevoix will vote to put the county seat there if given a chance; but she will not be likely to have a chance if it is removed to Boyne this spring. Charlevoix voted against removing to East Jordan, and she will vote to take it away when she finds herself benefited either in distance or improved transportation. To go to Boyne now would be a gain of neither. But if by an adverse vote this spring she can compel another submission by the Board of supervisors to place it at Ironton, she will gain in both items, and will vote to put it there.

A glance at the table of population will show that the greatest growth has been in the towns on the lake. In the natural course of business this must continue, and consequently a greater number of people are benefited if the county offices are located so as to equalize the distance necessarily traveled by those having the most business with those offices. If this question can be intelligently decided now, let the whole controversy be settled now; but if the growth of certain sections in the immediate future is likely to change the conditions, it is better to wait a year or two to give a chance for development.

Ironton is practically a middle ground between the three other principal villages which have a large business with the county offices; and the location there will equally accommodate all. But if it is desired to that point, it must first be prevented from going to Boyne.

The Smithson Cottage.

The work on J. S. Smithson's beautiful cottage is now completed. It being the finest cottage on either resort, a somewhat extended discription will be of interest to our readers.

The cottage is situated on the western extremity of the Chicago resort, upon the point of the terrace nearest to Round lake, which it fronts upon and overlooks. The building itself is many-angled and many-gabled, a porch on every side, an oriel window on the south-east and a tower and balcony on the south-west.

Entering from the south, or front, and passing the vestibule, we find ourselves in a spacious sitting room, ceiled throughout with ash, wainscoting in birch, with an artistic centerpiece over the hanging lamp. As we enter, we face the open grate, which has a superb carved mantle containing the Smithson crest, which consists of a squirrel sitting in characteristic position upon its haunches, in the center; the whole encircled by a leathern girdle, upon which is inscribed the motto: "Faites bien, et laissez dire."

Three rooms open off from this sitting room, besides the staircase. The sliding doors at the left, open in to the parlor, a many angled room under the tower. This (as all except the sitting room) is finished in hard plaster, with birch casings and base.

Back of the parlor, through sliding doors we enter the dining room, adjoining which it a cozy little kitchen. In this dining room, is another beautiful grate and mantle, finished in ash.

The third room opening off from the sitting room is the family bedroom, a model of convenience. The staircase, just at the right as we enter the sitting room is decidedly unique and ornamental, finished in birch and ash. Rising three or four steps to the level of the oriel window, we have a landing upon which a speaker could stand and address visible audiences in the four rooms just described. From this landing we pass by several steps to the hall above, off from which opens four large rooms and a bath room. From these rooms views of the country can be had in all directions, surpassed only by the same views from the tower above. Here the steamers on Lake Michigan, the yachts on Pine Lake, and the promenaders of the Kalamazoo resort are plainly visible.

Mr. Smithson has shown fine taste, both in the selection of site and the style of building erected thereon.

The building contract was awarded to Messrs. Heath & Francis, of Charlevoix, and these gentlemen have had every facility, and spared no pains in making every part of their work above criticism.

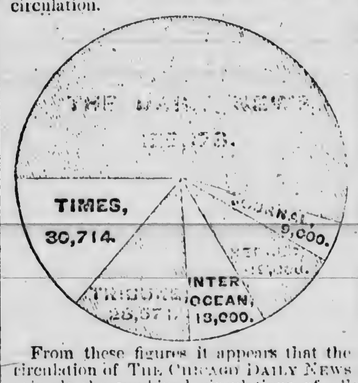
The Chicago Daily News

Has the Largest Daily Circulation in America.

Its issue for the year 1884 averaged 125,178 copies daily, and it is now regularly printing over 136,000 papers a day.

The magnitude of this unequaled circulation is best appreciated when it is said that it exceeds the circulations of all other Chicago dailies combined. Taking from the three standard newspaper directories—Ayer & Son's Annual, Rowell's Directory and Hubbard's Directory—the quotations which most nearly represent the actual circulations of the Chicago press, the following diagram correctly illustrates their relative positions as to extent of circulation.



From these figures it appears that the circulation of THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS exceeds the combined circulations of all the other Chicago dailies by 19,873 copies daily. The reasons for this phenomenal success are obvious:

THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS is a complete newspaper in all that constitutes the best type of American journalism.

It is a member of the Associated Press, and is the only 2 cent paper in the West that possesses this first essential to a complete news service. In addition, it has its own private wire (by lease from the Western Union Telegraph Co.) connecting its Chicago office with New York and Washington, at both of which points it has its own news bureaus. THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS prints ALL the news.

It is an independent paper. It recognizes the utility of political parties as means for the accomplishment of proper ends, but it declines to regard any mere party as a fit subject for unquestioning adoration. It solicits the patronage of intelligent, thoughtful, honest people, who love country more than party.

THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS is a "first and to the point" paper. It believes that newspaper reading is but an incident of the day, and its chief business. It accordingly leaves to the "blanket-sheets" the monopoly of the long and worthless amplification. It seeks to say all that the reader should care to read, and to say it in the shortest possible manner. It is a daily paper for busy people.

It is a clean paper, fit for the family circle. It is a cheap paper—2 cents per day, 12 cents per week, 50 cents per month, $6.00 per year. Sold by all news dealers throughout the Northwest. Mailed to any address, post paid, upon receipt of price.

Where the facilities of a daily mail are not enjoyed THE CHICAGO WEEKLY NEWS is recommended as "the next best." It is a large 8 page, 64 column paper, carefully made up to meet all the varying needs of the family circle. It is the largest "dollar weekly" in America. It is equal to the best.

Weekly News

THE WEEKLY NEWS is the cheapest first class weekly in the world. It is a family newspaper in the best sense—full of bright and entertaining reading. Both old and young people like it, and one of its most popular features is its own original method of illustrating its articles. Portraits of all the prominent men of the time are printed in it regularly. It has all the striking features that have made THE DAILY NEWS the most brilliant success ever known in Philadelphia journalism. Colonel A. Wilson Norris is writing for it a series of articles called "Pen Pictures of the War."

What? No! Can it be possible that the G. R. & I. are going to build a branch to Charlevoix, by way of Ironton? It certainly is not a dream that the company had an engineer sounding the channel of the Arm at Ironton, on Tuesday last.

Mr. Frederick Thier came into town yesterday with his head and face badly bruised and lascerated, the result of an interceation with his son-in-law William Wilie. A warrant was issued by justice McLeod, and sheriff Berdan took the offender in custody.

The use of tobacco is absolutely to be prohibited in all the government schools of France, on the ground that it affects injuriously the ability to study. The regulation is based on the recommendation of a commission of men of science, and meets with general approval.

Wm. Ranger calls attention in another column to the fact that he has taken the management of the Farmers' hotel, and will make it meet the needs of the town for a boarding house, and a place for farmers to get a good hot dinner and feed their teams when they come to town.

Election of officers of the Improvement Association next Monday night. Let there be a full attendance. The coming year promises to be full of interest, and no one should fail to do his part toward making it equally successful with last year. Come and bring your dollar for dues.

It comes with bad grace from a newspaper which assumes to take credit for booming Charlevoix, to abuse a citizen who does business in another town because he chooses to build a pleasant home for his family in Charlevoix, where they may have the advantages of our society, schools, etc.

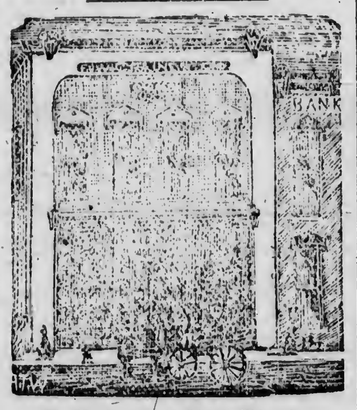
A southern paper of recent date says that a party of eighteen persons, three families, has arrived at Cedar Key, Florida, from Charlevoix, Lake Michigan, on the schooner Fair Play, having made the entire voyage by water. The party were all in good health, and intend locating somewhere near the gulf coast in South Florida. They had been three months on the way.—Traverse Eagle.

Alden's library magazine for March is at hand, fresh and bright as ever. It contains articles by the best authors on such topics as Gladstone as a Theologian. Myths and Mythologists, Home Rule in Ireland, Actors and their Calling. Tea Culture and tea Drinking in Japan, The Pleasure of Reading, and many others. Price only 15 cts. per number. John B. Alden, New York. Or Crouter will it for you.

What meaning shall we put upon the fact that so many of the Boyne City notables were in Ironton on Tuesday to witness the sounding of the channel? And they were very anxious to have us Charlevoix fellows there too. Well, we were there, ten of us, and took in the whole circus, and wondered if it were not after all the county seat that the notables were working upon instead of the railroad.

The steam engine now lights the streets and dwellings of Petoskey, by means of the electrical machine. We congratulate the citizens of our neighboring city on their new enterprise. Meanwhile, we can but ask: Why not bring the same convenience and luxury to Charlevoix? We have an engine that can't be beat, and ample space in the mill to put the machines, and the expense is comparatively light. Let the business men consider this matter.

Boyne City folks are so tickled over the joke they played on Charlevoix that they cannot keep it. It appears that the trespass agent of the G. R. & I. had a surveyor up here to settle some disputed lines, and concluded that it would be a fine scheme to run a railroad line from Boyne Falls to Charlevoix, and the whole line was surveyed in less than a day.



E. H. Green's New Block.

All winter the masons and carpenters have been at work upon this new structure; and now, with the exception of front windows and doors, it is ready for occupancy.

It is 80x24, two stories and basement. The upper story will contain business offices, the choice of which Mr. Green himself will occupy. These will be reached by stairs on the north side of the building.

The first floor will be occupied by F. W. Crane & Co., who will put in the finest stock of dry goods, carpets, and fancy goods ever brought to Charlevoix. The firm have one buyer for several stores, and propose to give the benefit of purchasing facilities to their patrons.

Al. Washburn, now in Cadillac in the interest of the firm, will be chief salesman, and we predict that they who look through the finest plate glass window north of Grand Rapids, will see the finest window display in the same territory.

The Historical Society.

Rev. Parmenter being the officiating clergyman in the funeral services of the late Mrs. Parker, he could not attend the Historical last Friday evening. In the absence of his paper, those present were entertained by a few choice reading selections, after which social games and visiting were introduced, the whole interspersed with music, so the evening passed pleasantly away. Mr. Parmenter's paper on Alexander the Great will now be presented at Mr. Kane's next Friday evening.

Card of Thanks.

I desire to return my hearty thanks to the neighbors and friends who have so very kindly offered help and sympathy—the latter, most precious in the hour of trial on the occasion of the decease and burial of my departed wife. May Heaven reward the love and sympathy that I can only repay with the most hearty thanks. I would not forget the churches, whose doors were kindly thrown open with invitations to the funeral services.

Marion Township Caucus.

A township caucus will be held at the Black school house, in the township of Marion, on Saturday, March 20, 1886, for the purpose of nominating candidates for township officers.

INCIPIENT CONSUMPTION.

Coughs, colds, bronchitis, &c., are all the results of neglect or exposure, and must have prompt and active remedies to remove them. Croup and whooping cough cause great suffering because an effective remedy is not at hand. Why, then, leave yourself and children exposed to danger and death, when HALTON'S COUGH BALSAM will relieve all of these and prevent diseases, such as pneumonia, inflammation of lungs, and consumption. All lung difficulties are removed by this remedy. Price 25 and 50 cts. per bottle.

Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

Died.

At her home in Charlevoix, Mrs. Tryphena, wife of Stilman Parker, in the 64th year of her age. It appears from such inquiries as we have been able to make, that Mrs. Parker was born, spent her youth and was married in Chautauqua county N. Y. And with her husband, several years ago, moved to Reading, Mich., where they resided until they came here, three years since.

Mrs Parker was a devoted and faithful Christian, a member of the Baptist church in Reading, and identified herself with the interests of that church here. She had been for a long time troubled with what seemed to be asthma, but had been as well as usual, and with her husband, walked to prayer meeting last Thursday evening; and arrived at her home rather late, retired feeling comfortable; but suddenly about two hours after was taken violently sick, and in a very few moments passed away.

The Village Elections.

The call for village caucus to be held in town hall was responded to by about 140 citizens who nominated the following ticket:

For president, A. R. Upright.
For trustees, J. M. Eaton, W. C Newman, S. M. See.
For clerk, H. S. Harsha.
For treasurer, H. C Cooper.
For assessor, Oscar Upright.
For street commissioner, Brice Sutfield.
For constable, O. I. Wheat.

The voting on Monday progressed quietly there being but one ticket in the field. A little opposition was made to two of the nominees; but this was so small as to be unworthy of mention.

THE HOMESTEAD.

BY JOHN GREENLEAF WHITTIER.

Against the wooded hills it stands,
Ghost of a dead home, staring through
Its broken lights on wasted lands
Where old-time harvests grow.

Unplowed, unsown, by scythe unshorn,
The poor, forsaken farm-fields lie.
Once rich and rife with golden corn
And pale green breadths of rye.

Of healthful herb and flower bereft,
The garden plot no housewife keeps;
Through weeds and tangle, only left
The snake, its tenant, creeps.

A lilac spray, once blossom-clad,
Sways bare before the empty rooms;
Beside the roofless porch a sad,
Pathetic red rose blooms.

His track, in mold and dust of drouth,
On floor and hearth the squirrel leaves,
And in the fireless chimney's mouth
His web the spider weaves.

The leaning barn, about to fall,
Resounds no more on husking eves;
No cattle low in yard or stall,
No thrasher beats his sheaves.

So sad, so dear! It seems almost
Some haunting presence makes its sign;
That down yon shadowy lane some ghost
Might drive his spectral kine!

O home, so desolate and lorn!
Did all thy memories die with thee?
Were any wed, were any born,
Beneath this low roof-tree?

Whose ax the wall of forest broke,
And let the waiting sunshine through?
What good-wife sent the earliest smoke
Up the great chimney flue?

Did rustic lovers hither come?
Did maidens, swaying back and forth
In rhythmic grace, at wheel and loom,
Make light their toil with mirth?

Did child feet patter on the stair?
Did boyhood frolic in the snow?
Did gray age, in her elbow chair,
Knit, rocking to and fro?

The murmuring brook, the sighing breeze,
The pine's slow whisper, can not tell;
Low mounds beneath the hemlock trees
Keep the home secrets well.

Cease, motherland, to fondly boast
Of sons far off who strive and thrive,
Forgetful that each swarming host
Must leave an emptier hive!

O wanderers from ancestral soil,
Leave noisome mill and chaffering store;
Gird up your loins for sturdier toil,
And build the home once more!

Come back to bayberry-scented slopes,
And fragrant fern, and ground-mat vine;
Breathe airs blown over holt and copse
Sweet with black birch and pine.

What matter if the gains are small
That life's essential wants supply?
Your homestead's title gives you all
That idle wealth can buy.

All that the many-dollard crave,
The brick-walled slaves of change and hoart,
Lawns, trees, fresh air, and flowers, you have,
More dear for lack of art.

Your own sole masters, freedom-willed,
With none to bid you go or stay,
Till the old fields your fathers tilled,
As manly men as they!

With skill that spares your toiling hands,
And chemic aid that science brings,
Reclaim the waste and outworn lands,
And reign thereon as kings!

THE SYRINGA BUSH.

BY PAUL PASTNOR.

Mr. Maginnis was not afraid of ghosts. He never had been—he never would be. If he had said so once he had said so five hundred times, perhaps more. It was one of the supremest satisfactions of his life to laugh at the women folks and the children when they talked about ghosts. "Pooh, pooh, my dears!" he would cry. "The idea of being afraid of what doesn't exist—afraid of nothing! I declare, it makes me tired!" (Mr. Maginnis fully sympathized with the recently published views of Mr. Walt Whitman on the subject of American slang.) It sometimes used to make Mr. Maginnis turn fairly purple in the face with laughing to hear how the visiting servant girls came in all of a shiver in the evening after seeing Mr. Maginnis' own last week's underclothes mistily waving upon the clothes-line. It was always with a fiendish delight that the worthy man beheld a white cow or an old spavined and decrepit milk-white horse abroad in the golden eventide, for he knew that in a very short time somebody—presumably an old maid or a schoolma'am, or a fat cook with a dozen bundles under her arm, would be frightened out of their false teeth. Such was Fletcher Maginnis—a disbeliever in things supernatural; a little, pudgy, bay-windowed, prosaic, short-breathed, every-day grocer, who never sanded his sugar because he fully believed that somebody else had attended to that little matter before him.

Now it happened in the regular course of events that winter approached, with its usual heraldry of frosts and mittens and the arrival of the man with the five-inch stove-pipe elbow under his arm. Mr. Maginnis, as usual, resurrected his ulster, and cracked the same old chestnut, as he met the blue-nosed ice man delivering his last blocks of crystal comfort at the back door. Mrs. Maginnis began to gather in her choice plants, lamenting meanwhile that she had neglected this important domestic duty until the complexion of her nose, tweaked by the remorseless fingers of Jack Frost, must surely attract the attention of passers by. One delicate syringa bush (Maginnis called it syringe bush, but then Maginnis had no eye for beauty, no olfactory organ capable of æsthetic titillation) she debated long over, undecided whether to remove it, roots and all, to the cellar, or venture to intrust it to the chilly embraces of winter. Finally she decided to give it a nice, fashionable, corn-colored ulster of straw, which Maginnis should purchase for her, and some competent son of Erin cut and fit to suit the requirements of the bush. But meanwhile a sharp night threatened; Maginnis had gone to the store, to be absent "rather later than usual," he said, as it was "lodge night;" and unless some covering were provided for it the precious syringa would probably freeze. So Mrs. Maginnis went into the house and got an old skirt of hers and a sheet. It was quite dark, but Mrs. Maginnis laughed as she spread out the balloon-like garment and slipped it over the bush, thinking what if anybody should see her now! Then she wrapped the sheet, fold on fold, around the bush, and fastened it with that woman's rode ne coon, a pin.

It was considerably "small" in the morning when Maginnis got away from the "lodge." He felt queer. The piercing air of the early morning cut to his very marrow. He shivered, actually trembled—something he had not done for twenty-three years, although he was a married man. Somehow, his head seemed to be bursting. He grabbed his hat-rim, and with the greatest difficulty dissevered the connection between his brow and the tightening band, and tilted the hat upon the back of his head. How strangely the stars looked!—How the ground seemed to glide forward and backward beneath his feet. He started dizzily in the direction of home, every now and then stopping to allow the shifting earth time to subside; then, clasping the unbuttoned ulster feebly with both hands, he staggered on again.

Fletcher Maginnis was drunk—a little. Not so drunk that he didn't realize it himself, but just drunk enough to be somewhat dazed and apprehensive and oblique of vision. He had no difficulty in finding his way home, but the way seemed long and strangely full of terrors. He shook like a leaf as he passed the low iron fence of the cemetery, and once, as the wind passed with a long, rustling sound through a pile of leaves, he started to run, but his flapping ulster catching him between the legs, twirled him squarely around and brought him face to face with a ghastly gravestone close against the fence.

The cold sweat stood on Mr. Maginnis' brow when he staggered into his own yard. He stopped for a moment and rubbed his hands across his eyes. Good heavens! what was that nodding back and forth in the rising winds? Mr. Maginnis' heart gave a great thump, and his hair wiggled about under his hat till it nearly pushed it off. He advanced a step—then retreated two. It surely was a ghost! It swayed from side to side like a person in great mental agony. Maginnis was sure that he heard a low moan escape his lips, and saw it wring its clammy hands.

Just then a fierce gust of wind swept around the house. The figure seemed to shake itself and expand. Another gust—and horrors! with an awful rustling and a clap that shook every bone in Maginnis' body, the ghost left its moorings and floated swiftly toward him. One piercing, agonizing cry, more like the bray of a lost mule than the utterance of a human being, burst from the disbeliever's lips, and Maginnis fell back more dead than alive, while the trailing garments of the ghost passed over him and swept away in the darkness.

* * * * * * *

Mrs. Maginnis and the fat cook dragged Maginnis into the house. He was so badly scared that he could not speak an audible word for ten minutes; then he opened his ashen lips and groaned:

"Where is the ghost?" If he had asked to see his maternal great-grandfather Mrs. Maginnis could not have been more taken aback. The idea of Maginnis admitting the existence of a ghost! By gentle degrees the wife of his bosom drew from him the harrowing tale. At the story of the ghost in the yard she pricked up her ears. As Maginnis in his recital located the specter, a smile began to creep from the corners of the good lady's mouth. When the ghost left its base and sprang upon Maginnis, she grinned. When he described the flop, and the rustle, and the trailing garments, she laughed outright.

Maginnis in his turn was amazed. Mrs. Maginnis laughing at a ghost—the idea! He charged her with woman's inconsistency. Her reply was brief and to the point:

"Maginnis, you are a fool!"

Maginnis rose on his elbow.

"That ghost you saw was the syringa bush, done up in a——"

"And the trailing garments?"

"The sheet blown off by the wind."

Maginnis has bought his wife a two-hundred-dollar seal-skin sacque and the cook a red dress, and their lips are sealed.—Chicago Ledger.

A New Wrinkle for Modern Society.

As there are flirtations and rumors of flirtations in the air the expected early importation of the system of screens now in vogue at Paris will come none too soon. No drawing-room will then be considered complete without screens enough to render each couple in the room secure in the privacy of the enfolding panels. Well, the one couple left out, of course, will not require a screen. The idea is to obviate all the difficulties now in the way of conversation, don't you know, and remove the tension imposed upon the nerves of a person who is trying to make a few pointed remarks and at the same time look totally unconcerned in the eyes of the probably observing company. There are a score of advantages to be gained from the screen scheme in society. Each person will fit a set to his own particular wants and needs, and when the hour for striking the blow in favor of the new reform arrives, the city will be ready to a man to say a word in its behalf. How charming Mrs. Whitney's new ball room will look broken into scores of cosy nooks, each with its own pretty decorative arrangement and central motive. Thinking of a few parlors in town now, I believe the screen notion is not entirely unknown in the city. Mme. de Struve arranged her parlors with subdivisions and nooks, with banks and hedges of greenery arranged, and everybody was charmed with the supremely artistic effect.—Washington Republican.

PARENTS AND CHILDREN.

A TERRIBLE MISTAKE.—The monstrous horrible lies that are told children to make them obedient by working upon their fears are numbered by scores. Such children are easily identified, for they are almost paralyzed when they see the strangely crawling snake; a rat or mouse, of interesting habits, may set them into convulsions; that charming feature of the country, the woodland, where many a happy hour may be spent, is the home of bears that live on innocent little children; that interesting object, the worm, about which Darwin wrote a whole volume, causes a shudder of repulsion; and various other creations of nature that children love to be told about become sources of the keenest pain.

We once knew a mother who tried to govern her children by telling them that "the old man will be after you;" in consequence of this, in fear and trembling, they shunned all old men—those fellow-beings of ours who are particularly fond of children. Young people grow out of these fears in time, but many of them haunt them through life. The most lasting of these are caused by peopling darkness with ghosts, hobgoblins, and dangerous men, thereby filling with terror the darkness of night, whether outdoors or in the unlighted room of a house.—Detroit Free Press.

HOUSEHOLD GAMES.—It is not necessary that a great amount of money be spent in toys and games. If the children are properly encouraged, and directed a little, they may prepare the materials for their own games, thus accomplishing two desirable things—acquiring manual and mental facility in the manufacture and production of something with which to be afterward instructed and amused. In the card games many can be prepared on plain bristol board cards in manuscript, involving simple facts in history, botany, geography, etc., or the always valuable and interesting word-making game can be prepared on small bits of cards by drawing the letters with pen and ink, or pasting on letters cut from hand bills, newspapers, etc. In board games the cover of a paper box serves well for the surface to be decorated with the pen, pencil, or water-colors. In "ye olden times," when this country was not cursed with manufacturers of games, our grandfathers cut the lines of fox-and-geese, twelve-men-morris, and checkers on the side of pine boards, coloring the spaces, when necessary, with red chalk, and using buttons, red and white corn, or colored beans for counters or men, and it is related by those who claim to know that more pleasure was derived from these rude constructions than the children of the present generation get from their most elegant editions in gold and colors. Many most valuable and interesting games have gone out of the market, and are not to be bought, but which may be reproduced under the instructions of some older persons who may have played them in their youth; and if the details are not fully remembered, others equally good may be originated.

All games are made by some one, or by a number of persons, either at once or by slow growth, with practice and various changes, modifications, and additions, so that there is no reason why any one may not originate others as good as the best in the market, and in one sense a home-made game is much more valuable to its originator or possessor than another which in other respects is equally good or better—as an original painting may be more valuable than a printed copy of a much better picture, because no one has a duplicate of it.

The invention of games and social amusements is as good mental exercise as anything the schools offer, because it requires the exercise of the inventive faculties, in the combination and adaptation of knowledge already possessed, or which must be hunted up for this purpose. Original thought in any direction exercises the inventive faculties, and the construction of games, puzzles, anagrams, rebuses, etc., is one of those exercises which are fascinating and pleasing when once understood and practiced.—Good Housekeeping.

The Capture of Gen. Scott.

After Hull's surrender in August, 1812, the army was greatly demoralized, and it was evident that an attack must be made to retrieve the national honor. The Army of the Center, under Gen. Van Rensselaer, was therefore massed on the banks of the Niagara River, with the purpose of invading Canada. Oct. 13, Van Rensselaer crossed the river at Lewiston. The British were entrenched on Queenstown Heights, nearly opposite. The landing was desperately resisted. Col. Scott and Capt. Wool led the Americans in charge after charge, driving the British before them. Three times they won the victory. Van Rensselaer then returned to the American shore to bring over the rest of his troops. These were mainly New York militia, altogether unused to the terrors of battle. The sight of the bloody struggle on the opposite side of the river, of the field strewn with dead and dying, wholly unnerved them. To the General's order, therefore, their officers returned the reply that he had no right to take the militia out of the State, and they refused to follow him. "Fifteen hundred able-bodied men," says an historian of the time, "stood cowardly by their constitutional rights while their comrades vainly struggled against the odds of their swarming foes." Scott, on the other side, finding that no help could be sent him, mounted a log before the remnant of his troops, and urged them to renew the attack. "Hull's surrender," he said, "must be redeemed. Our condition is desperate. Let us die arms in hand. Our country demands the sacrifice. The example will not be lost. The blood of the slain will make heroes of the living. Those who follow will avenge our fall and our country's wrongs. Who dares to stand?" A loud "All!" rang along the line. Another charge was made with desperate courage, but the numbers of the enemy were overwhelming, and all who were not killed were taken prisoners. In January, 1813, Scott was exchanged, and joined the army under Gen. Dearborn as Adjutant General.—Inter Ocean.

The Poles in Prussia.

The Prussian Government, in the summer of 1885, issued an order for the expulsion of all Poles from the country. They were to be allowed a certain time to dispose of their effects, and at the end of that time were obliged to depart, whatever their circumstances or condition of health. As the Russian Government refused to admit these banished people unless they could prove that they were born in that country, their hapless condition aroused much sympathy in the German states, and upon the meeting of the Reichstag, or German Parliament, a resolution was passed requesting an explanation of this action. To this Chancellor Bismarck replied that the matter was a Prussian affair wholly, and as he could not admit the right of the Reichstag to concern itself in those affairs that were exclusively the province of the states, he could give no explanation. Subsequently, however, a similar resolution was passed by the Prussian Landtag, or Local Assembly. To this Bismarck replied, Jan. 28, 1886, at some length. He said that the primary cause of the Government's action was the disloyalty of the Poles to the German crown. They were always, he said, engaged in intrigues, endeavoring to set foreign states against Prussia, and keeping up a continual agitation against the Government. The Government had therefore decided to banish the evil element that made all this trouble. The Government had decided to purchase all the real estate owned by the Polish nobles in Prussian Poland, and place German colonists on the land hitherto occupied by the expelled people. None of the Poles were to be allowed to repossess the land, even by renting it, and to make its colonization more permanently valuable to the German Empire, the colonists were to be forever prohibited from marrying Poles. While it is admitted that the Government will have some difficulty in carrying out these extreme measures if they are not concurred in by a majority of the Prussian Assembly, it is certain that neither Bismarck nor the King is likely to concede a single point of the plan, and their influence is quite powerful enough to bear down all opposition to these measures.—Inter Ocean.

Phases of United States Banking.

The banking law of 1791 established one organization only, the United States Bank, with a stock limited to $10,000,000. The present system, founded upon a number of different acts passed between 1863 and 1875, provides for a practically unlimited number of banks, and fixes the inside limit of capital at $50,000, $100,000, and $200,000, according to the population of the city where organized. In the old United States Bank, the Government took $2,000,000 of stock, and three-fourths of all private and corporate subscriptions were to be paid in United States bonds, the remaining one-fourth to be paid in coin; in the National banks the Government takes no stock, but guarantees each bank's notes of issue, on condition that 111 per cent. of these notes is deposited in the United States Treasury in the form of Government bonds, as security. No part of the law of 1791 restricted the issue of the bank's notes, this matter being left to the accepted prudence of the bank's directors. As this prudence is not so fairly calculable a quantity at the present day, the question of security limits each bank's circulation. The circulating notes of the Bank of the United States were made receivable in payment of all dues to the United States; the present law provides that National bank notes "shall be received by the Government in payment of all taxes and other dues, except duties on imports, and are payable for all debts or demands owing by the Government, except interest on the public debt, and in the redemption of the notes themselves." These are the salient points of contrast between the two systems, to which we may add the fact that the law limited the existence of the charter of the United States Bank to ten years, to be extended at the pleasure of Congress; while the National banks are made, if their solvency continues, permanent institutions. By no means all of the specifications of these laws are here quoted, as the circumstances under which they were framed are widely different.—Inter Ocean.

Arabian Manuscripts.

The collection of manuscripts which the Sultan of Morocco has turned over to the Medresseh, or High School, of Fez, proves to comprise copies of numerous West Arabian works which in Spain were destroyed by the holy inquisition. In scientific attainments the scholars of the Moorish Universities were several hundred years ahead of their Trinitarian rivals, and by ignoring their existence Christian historians of civilization have been obliged to assume a thousand years interregnum of science. In the ghastly night of the middle ages Bagdad and Cordova were the intellectual Goshens, still enjoying the light of a sun which in the land of their neighbors seemed to have set forever at the downfall of the Roman Empire.

THE MAIDEN'S FAREWELL.

The time has come and we must part,

But nothing earthly doth endure—
All things must pass away.

How oft in days forever past
My form thou hast embraced!
Another takes thy place at last
And clasps me round the waist.

But such is life—we meet to part,
In midst of change we dwell.
I clasp another to my breast—
Old corset fare thee well.

Voters in Canada.

There are assessment qualifications required for voters by the election laws of nearly every part of Canada. In Ontario and Quebec a vote is given to every male subject who is the owner, occupier, or tenant of real property of the assessed value of $300, or of the yearly value of $30, within the limits of cities or corporate towns; or, of the assessed value of $200, or yearly value of $20, if not so situated. In New Brunswick, a vote is given to every male subject of the age of 21 years, assessed in respect of real estate to the amount of $100, or of personal property, or of personal and real, amounting together to $400, or $40 annual income. In Nova Scotia the franchise is with all subjects of the age of 21 years, assessed in respect of real estate to the value of $150, or in respect of personal estate, or of real and personal together, to the value of $400. Voting is by ballot. Indians not resident with their tribes are allowed to vote under the same qualifications as white men, and by a law passed by the Dominion Parliament in August, 1885, those Indians who are still with their tribes are, with certain property restrictions, allowed to vote for members of the House of Commons, as well as concerning matters of local government.—Inter Ocean.

Citrate of Silver.

WHAT WARNER'S SAFE CURE CURES AND WHY.

Congestion of the Kidneys, Back Ache.

Inflammation of the Kidneys, Bladder or Urinary Organs.

Catarrh of the Bladder, Gravel, Stone, Dropsy, Enlarged Prostate Gland, Impotency or General Debility, Bright's Disease.

WHY? Because it is the only remedy known that has power to expel the uric acid and urea, of which there are some 500 grains secreted each day as the result of muscular action, and sufficient, if retained in the blood, to kill six men. It is the direct cause of all the above diseases, as well as of Heart Disease, Rheumatism, Apoplexy, Paralysis, Insanity, and Death.

This great specific relieves the kidneys of too much blood, frees them from all irritants, restores them to healthy action by its certain and soothing power.

IT CURES ALSO Jaundice, Enlargement of the Liver, Abscess and Catarrh of the Bile Ducts, Biliousness, Headache, Furred Tongue, Sleeplessness, Languor, Debility, Constipation, Gall Stones, and every unpleasant symptom which results from liver complaint.

WHY? Because it has a specific and positive action on the liver as well as on the kidneys, increasing the secretion and flow of bile, regulates its elaborating function, removes unhealthful formations, and, in a word, restores it to natural activity, without which health is an Impossibility.

IT CURES ALSO Female Complaints, Leucorrhœa, Displacements, Enlargements, Ulceration, Painful Menstruation, makes Pregnancy safe, prevents Convulsions and Child-Bed Fever, and aids nature by restoring functional activity.

WHY? All these troubles, as is well known by every physician of education, arise from congestion and impaired kidney action, causing stagnation of the blood vessels and breaking down, and this is the beginning and the direct cause of all the ailments from which women suffer, and must as surely follow as night does the day.

WHY Warner's Safe Cure is acknowledged by thousands of our best medical men to be the only true blood purifier is because it acts upon scientific principles, striking at the very root of the disorder by its action on the kidneys and liver. For, if these organs were kept in health all the morbid waste matter, so deadly poisonous if retained in the body, is passed out. On the contrary; if they are deranged, the acids are taken up by the blood, decomposing it and carrying death to the most remote part of the body.

WHY 93 per cent. of all diseases which afflict humanity arise from impaired kidneys, is shown by medical authorities. Warner's Safe Cure, by its direct action, positively restores them to health and full working capacity, nature curing all the above diseases herself when the cause is removed, and we guarantee that Warner's Safe Cure is a positive preventive if taken in time.

As you value health take it to avoid sickness, as it will at all times and under all circumstances keep all the vital functions up to par.

We also guarantee a cure and beneficial effect for each of the foregoing diseases, also that every case of liver and kidney trouble can be cured where degeneration has not taken place, and even then benefit will surely be derived. In every instance it has established its claim.

AS A BLOOD PURIFIER, particularly in the spring, it is unequaled, for you cannot have pure blood when the kidneys or liver are out of order.

Look to your condition at once. Do not postpone treatment for a day nor an hour. The doctors cannot compare records with us. Give yourself thorough constitutional treatment with Warner's Safe Cure, and there are yet many years of life and health assured you!

It Cured Him.

Some years ago a certain Methodist congregation in Chicago was presided over by a minister who had formerly held a pastorate in Springfield, Ill. The preacher was a very good man, but he subjected himself to severe criticism by constantly comparing his surroundings with those in Springfield. Nothing was so nice as it was in Springfield; the church was fine, but not so fine as the Springfield church; the congregation was zealous, but it was not Springfield zeal—and so on, all the time, Springfield being perfected perfection. At last one of the sisters hit upon what she thought might prove a remedy for her pastor, so at the next "class" she gave in her experiences. "I have," said she, found the path dark and rough, and at times have been on the point of falling by the wayside and giving up in despair; I have felt that my earthly nature was uncongenial with that heavenly one I have been taught to seek in the closest association, and there have been seasons when I thought I should never be able to reach that better land lying beyond the Jordan; but brethren and sisters, since our dear new pastor has come among us, I feel to rejoice that although I may fall short of attaining the heavenly kingdom, bless the Lord, I shall at least reach Springfield."

The minister tells the story on himself and acknowleges that it cured him. —Merchant Traveler.

Physicians Have Found Out

That a contaminating and foreign element in the blood, developed by indigestion, is the cause of rheumatism. This settles upon the sensitive sub-cutaneous covering of the muscles and ligaments of the joints, causing constant and shifting pain, and aggregating as a calcareous, chalky deposit, which produces stiffness and distortion of the joints. No fact, which experience has demonstrated in regard to Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, has stronger evidence to support than this, namely, that this medicine of comprehensive uses checks the formidable and atrocious disease, nor is it less positively established that it is preferable to the poisons often used to arrest it, since the medicine contains only salutary ingredients. It is also a signal remedy for malarial fevers, constipation, dyspepsia, kidney and bladder ailments, debility and other disorders. See that you get the genuine.

What It Was.

A State street merchant put a handsome plaster figure in his store window and prepared himself to enjoy it with his customers. Along in the afternoon the wife of an artist came in, and she noticed it at once.

"Ah, Mr. B——," she said, "that's a handsome figure in your window."

"Yes," replied the merchant, "I call it so myself, I do."

"Your taste is excellent," pursued the lady, "and I'm glad to see a love of art developing in commercial circles. What is the figure—Hebe?"

"Oh, no, ma'm, it's plaster of Paris." —Merchant Traveler.

"Here is my poetry back from the editor. He doesn't want it," said Snobberly, dismally, as the letter-carrier handed him a large package.

"That's what he says, but if he had a friendly feeling for me he would publish it anyhow. I wish I knew some way of getting into that editor's good graces."

"I can tell you how to make yourself popular with him."

"How is that; tell me?"

"Don't send him any more of your poetry."—Texas Siftings.

Collar High.

The latest favorite occupation among New York society exquisites is measuring the height of their collars. The weary clerk toiling at his desk, finds surprising joy in being able to compass a collar that possesses an altitude of two inches and a half, and is cast down with envy and despair when his brother clerk taunts him with an extra half inch. The dimensions of the exquisite's brain seem to diminish in proportion as his collar grows higher.

The Great German Physician.

The remarkable phase in the practice of Dr. Peter W. Schmidt (frequently called Dr. Pete) is, he never asked one to describe their disease but tells each one their trouble without asking a question. His success is phenomenal. His practice enormous. He is sought after by hundreds wherever he goes, because he cures when every other physician and remedy have failed. He has allowed his great medicines, Golden Seal Bitters and Lung Food for Consumption, to be offered to the suffering, and we assert without fear of successful contradiction that there is no disease they will not cure. Thousands of bottles have been sold. Thousands of broken-down and discouraged invalids saved. Send to Golden Seal Bitters Company, Holland City, Mich., for Facts for the Million! Free.

A Remedy for Lung Diseases.

Dr. Robert Newton, late President of the Eclectic College of the City of New York, and formerly of Cincinnati, Ohio, used DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM very extensively in his practice, as many of his patients, now living, and restored to health by the use of this invaluable medicine, can amply testify. He always said that so good a remedy ought to be prescribed freely by every physician as a sovereign remedy in all cases of lung diseases. It cures Consumption, and has no equal for all pectoral complaints.

THE HOTEL CLERK'S STORY.

It is the fashion among many so-called humorists to represent the American hotel clerk as a lordly and supercilious being, who, with a headlight diamond in his immaculate shirt front and a look of contemptuous disdain upon his classic features, sends tired and travel-stained arrivals off to impossible regions in the fifteenth story, or haughtily refuses them any lodging whatever.

The fact is that the true American hotel clerk is an invaluable feature of our civilization. The time of the arrivals and departures of all the trains on all the railroads is at his tongue's end; he is full of information about what is interesting at the theaters, and of stories of actors and actresses who have stopped at his hotel, and withal a kindly man, who, if the house is crowded, will let you sleep on a billiard table. Mr. W. P. Hammond, who is clerk at the West End Hotel, 503 and 505 West Madison street, Chicago, is of this obliging disposition and is always ready to give any information regarding the hotel to those who seek it. The accomplished landlady of the West End has recently suffered with rheumatism. The story of her cure is thus told by Clerk Hammond:

"Our landlady was taken with quite a severe attack of rheumatism in the lower limbs, suffering much pain and being scarcely able to walk. She heard of Athlophoros and of the cures it had effected, and sent me to the drug store to buy a bottle of it. I got it, and in half an hour's time after she had taken the first dose she felt relieved, and in a few days the rheumatism was entirely gone."

"How much did she take?"

"About one bottle."

"Has she had any return of the pain?"

"Not to my knowledge," replied Mr. Hammond, "and I am certain she would be likely to say something about it if she had. She speaks of Athlophoros in the highest terms, and has recommended it to many. In one case I remember the cure was as quick as in her own."

The accuracy of Clerk Hammond's statements is fully confirmed by the landlady herself, who is not averse to having it known how she was cured.

"I will tell you something about my cure," she said to a visitor who called to learn the facts in her case. "I was so lame and suffered so much pain that it was impossible for me to bend my limbs or walk around my room without taking hold of the back of a chair for support. My relief, after taking the first dose of Athlophoros, was almost immediate. In fact, after taking a few doses I was well and have not been troubled since. At the same time that I was suffering from the rheumatism, there was a lady boarding in my hotel who was suffering with facial neuralgia so much that it was impossible for her to sit up. I advised her to try 'my remedy,' that being the name I have for Athlophoros. After she had taken two doses of it she was well, and the next thing I know I saw her rushing for a street-car to go up town. My confidence in Athlophoros cannot be shaken. I find it a positive cure for nervous headache and shall always keep some in the hotel, as I cannot afford to suffer from rheumatism, neuralgia, or any such trouble while I can get a medicine like Athlophoros."

If you cannot get ATHLOPHOROS of your druggist, we will send it, express paid, on receipt of regular price—one dollar per bottle. We prefer that you buy it from your druggist, but if he hasn't it, do not be persuaded to try something else, but order at once from us, as directed. ATHLOPHOROS Co., 112 Wall street, New York.

The Man in the Moon.

How does the sailor know there is a man in the moon? Because he has been to see (sea), and states that whenever he has a cough or cold he takes Taylor's Cherokee Remedy of Sweet Gum and Mullein.

I have been afflicted with catarrh for 20 years. It had become chronic, and there was a constant dropping of mucous matter from the roof of my mouth. It extended to my throat, causing hoarseness and great difficulty in speaking; indeed, for years I was not able to speak more than thirty minutes, and often this with great difficulty. I am so, to a great extent, lost the sense of hearing in the left ear, and of taste. By the use of Ely's Cream Balm I have received more relief than from all other remedies besides. All dropping of mucous has ceased and my voice and hearing are greatly improved.—Jno. W. Davidson, Attorney at Law, Monmouth, Warren County, Ill.

Victory at Last.

Consumption, the greatest curse of the age, the destroyer of thousands of our brightest and best, is conquered. It is no longer incurable. Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" is a certain remedy for this terrible disease if taken in time. All scrofulous diseases—consumption is a scrofulous affection of the lungs—can be cured by it. Its effects in diseases of the throat and lungs are little less than miraculous. All druggists have it.

Saving the Lawyers.

"The first thing we do, let's kill all the lawyers." This is rather a blood-thirsty proposition, which we modify by offering to cure this worthy class of people. Most of them suffer (in common with nearly all others of sedentary habits), from the injurious effects of dyspepsia, indigestion, piles, loss of appetite, and other ailments caused by a constipated habit of the body. Dr. Pierce's "Pleasant Purgative Pellets" eradicate all these disorders in promptly removing the cause thereof, and induce a rare degree of comfort and health.

Around the County.

County Seat Again.

East Jordan, March 8, 1886.

EDITOR JOURNAL,—The Sentinel of the 3d inst comes to us with another contribution to its county-seat literature. Like what has preceded it on the same subject from the same high source, it is totally irrelevant to the question as to whether it is for the best interests of this county at this time to allow the county seat to remain at East Jordan, or to remove it to the extreme northern edge of Boyne City, or, more probably, into the swamp to the north of that. The Sentinel man does not even refer to the question at issue, but proceeds in his characteristic fashion to scandalize a very respectable merchant of this village, whose family is one of the most respected families of your village. That the readers of the JOURNAL may form their own opinion upon it, I give the opening sentences, the rest being worse rather than better:

A business man of East Jordan, who, however, considers Charlevoix the best place in which to live, has a letter in last week's JOURNAL, denying a naughty lie that was told about him. It would be eminently proper for the peripatetic cosmopolite to keep on denying, and see if he can as successfully disprove the charge that he has been a traitor to the town he lives in.

And what was the immediate cause of this outpouring of the Sentinel man's wrath? Why, Mr. Loveday had ventured to publish a letter in your issue of the week previous, denying one of the many falsehoods that have been put in circulation in regard to East Jordan. The truth seemed to affect the great editor as a red rag does an old gobbler.

The chief's indiscretions are notorious, but we hardly think he would have been so indiscreet as to raise the cry of traitor, as he has done, had he known the whisperings that are afloat in various parts of the county as to his own honesty upon this question; unless he does it on the old "stop thief" plan. Many there are who cannot account for his conduct upon any other theory than that he has for a very considerable time been in the secrets and employ of the men who have for years past been trying to move the county seat to Boyne City. The reasoning here is: This town and village has always, by the official acts of its supervisor, as well as by the popular vote, supported Charlevoix as against Boyne City on the county seat question. The good feeling which has existed between East Jordan and Charlevoix must, then, be destroyed, and he and they use their best efforts to destroy it. Then there was the scheme by which the will of the people as expressed at the ballot-box was to be defeated, so that the county seat should not go to East Jordan at all, but be moved at once to Boyne City, to which he was a party with them.

Then, when that did not work, there came his secret meetings, both at Boyne City and Charlevoix with these well-known schemers, and his immediate espousal of their cause. Taken together they certainly have a very dubious aspect; so much so, indeed, that if the Sentinel man's skirts are really clear, he owes it to his friends to make an explanation. We do not wish to be understood as charging him positively with being a traitor to his town and the western end of the county, but we do wish to be understood to say that his conduct has an infinitely greater appearance of guilt than the conduct of the man he accused of being a traitor. Mr. Loveday's was open and clear to everybody; much of the Sentinel man's has been secret and misleading. Probably, however, a judicial verdict, if taken now, would show him not guilty, but the verdict of history will, we fear, be different. Nor will his mere word be a sufficient contradiction for those best acquainted with his tergiversations. For has he not a queer faculty of disclaiming responsibility? Witness this sample. The Enterprise, of the 25th ult., contains the following:

It might be well to call the attention of our readers to the fact that the Sentinel of April 1st, 1885—four days before election—contained the following words relative to moving the county seat: "If it goes there, it goes to stay and don't you forget it, next Monday." * * * "As far as the personal wishes of Charlevoix people go, they would, if the county seat must be moved at present, prefer to see it at East Jordan to any other point. East Jordan has stood by Charlevoix. It is the second largest village in the county. If a railroad reaches Charlevoix, as it is bound to in the near future, it will be most certain to come through East Jordan. And water travel offers better connections in that direction."

And last week's Sentinel answers it in this fashion:

The East Jordan Enterprise evidently saves the files of the Sentinel, judging from its liberal quotations from its columns of a year ago. We cannot return the compliment in this matter, as we have not considered the Enterprise worth saving, and we certainly do not consider its current utterances worth noticing.

This is but a single specimen of the Sentinel's eel-like ways, that of late are far too common for common decency.

Ironton.

[Our Ironton correspondent delayed his correspondence until late in order to give a report of the meeting to discuss the county seat question; after which, by accident, it did not reach us until too late for publication. We give a portion of it this week.]

Messrs. Corbett, Hill, and Norton, of Boyne City, discussed the merits of that burg as the county seat of Charlevoix county, in the Ironton school house Tuesday evening. A challenge was sent to East Jordan to participate in the debate, but for reasons best known to themselves, they failed to connect, and Boyne City had the argument all its own way. They came, loaded for bear, with maps to show that Boyne City is near the geographical center of the county, but gracefully acknowledging Ironton to be the center of population and the center of commerce. Lawyer Corbett led off in the discussion, speaking earnestly and candidly—creating a good impression, and beyond a doubt winning some votes. He was followed by Elder Hill, who argued the advantages a change in the county seat would be to the eastern end of the county, which, according to the elder, is being settled rapidly and will soon make Boyne City the center of population in the county. The elder didn't take into consideration the fact that the western end of the county is likely to grow rapidly enough to keep up a respectable balance. On the other hand, to quote the late Wm. Shakespeare, he "condemned with faint praise," by informing us that when the timber is cut from the Pine Lake region our only resource will be gone and our prosperity and growth at an end. This "feast a coldness over the meetin'." The older courteously answered the many questions, relative to the subject, put by the audience. The vulgarity and profanity on the part of the last speaker was not calculated to win votes. We may or we may not favor Boyne City in the coming election; but we do not propose to be dictated to on the subject. If Boyne City is the most desirable point for the county seat, get it. Some in Ironton will favor it, and some will not; but we don't propose to barter our vote for a bridge across "south arm," not if the gentleman brings the promise from fourteen supervisors in stead of nine. We can swim.

The Ironton hotel has been leased to Mr. A. Munson and will be opened in a few days.—Mr. Munson will work his farm in connection with the the hotel and so provide his guests with fresh vegetables, milk and butter. The hotel will be refurnished, balconies built, and every thing done that can be done to make it attractive and home-like.

Mr. E. A. Lewis has accepted a position with the Pine Lake Iron Co. and, with his family, will take up his residence in Ironton.

Boyne City offers us a bridge across the Arm, and backs the promise with the signatures of nine Supervisors. If Evelyne gives a majority vote in her favor on the county seat question; but if we fail to give a majority of our votes for Boyne City, we can "swim and be blanked." If it is a question of being blanked or having a bridge, we prefer the bath; but if these nine supervisors should not be reelected this spring, must we sell our votes and swim too?

Rev. Strang filled the appointment left vacant by Rev. VanAuken's indisposition last Friday evening, leaving an appointment for the 19th inst.

Boyne City.

Last Saturday the Pine Lake Lumber Co. paid nearly $2,000 to different farmers, for logs they bought here this winter, and which are delivered on the beach.

The village election passed off quietly. The greatest contest being between E. H. Shepard and J. C. McFellin, for president, the latter "getting there" by just nine votes. H. C. Miley was elected clerk; W. J. Lewis, treasurer; A.E. Martin, R. E. Newville, Frank W. Littlefield, trustees; P. F. M'Intire, street commissioner; Walter Ware, assessor; F. M. Gates, constable.

The Boyne City mill is running steadily, and expects to do a bigger business next summer than any previous one. They have given the mill thorough repairs, and have nearly 2,000,000 feet of hardwood logs now on hand.

Cure for Piles.

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he has some affection of the kidneys or neighboring organs. At times, symptoms of indigestion are present, flatulency, uneasiness of the stomach, etc. A moisture, like perspiration, producing a very disagreeable itching, after getting warm, is a common attendant. Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Bosanko's Pile Remedy, which acts directly upon the parts affected, absorbing the tumors, allaying the intense itching, and effecting a permanent cure. Price 50 cents. Sold by Geo. W. Crouter. 152

MORTGAGE SALE.

WHEREAS, default has been made in the payment of the money, secured by a mortgage, made and dated the tenth day of September, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-four, executed by Hemaine Frizzell to the Pine Lake Iron Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, and doing business in the County of Charlevoix, in the State of Michigan, which mortgage was recorded in the office of the register of deeds of the said County of Charlevoix, in Liber H of mortgages, at page 11, on the 18th day of April, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-five, at one o'clock in the afternoon, and the same is now owned by the said Pine Lake Iron Company. And whereas the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice is the sum of Fifty-Five Dollars and Twenty-two cents, principal and interest, which sum is a part of the purchase price of the premises herein described, and a further sum of fifteen dollars provided by law as an attorney's fee in the foreclosure of said mortgage, which is the whole amount claimed to be due and unpaid on said mortgage, and no suit or proceedings at law or in chancery having been instituted to recover the debt now remaining secured by the said mortgage or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained in the said mortgage has become operative.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises herein described at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door of the Town Hall, in the township of South Arm, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, which is the place of holding the circuit court for said county, on Friday, the 2d day of April next, at twelve o'clock meridian, which premises are described in the said mortgage as follows, to wit: Lots twenty (20) and twenty-one (21) in block number twelve (12) in the Pine Lake Iron Co.'s plat of Ironton, town of Evelyne, county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan.

Dated December 30th, A. D. 1885.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Whereas default has been made in the payment of the money secured by a mortgage dated the 12th day of November, in the year A. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-one, executed by Mary A. Thomas to John Frenz, which mortgage was recorded in the office of the register of deeds, of the county of Charlevoix, in the state of Michigan, in liber 8 of mortgages at page 494, on the 29th day of November, in the year A. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-one, at two o'clock in the afternoon of said day. And whereas, the said mortgage has been duly assigned by the said John Frenz, to Daniel Head, by instrument of assignment bearing date the 10th day of May, in the year A. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-two, and recorded in the office of the register of deeds of said county of Charlevoix, on the 11th day of July in the year A. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-three, at two o'clock in the afternoon of said day, in liber 9 of mortgages, at page 101, and the same is now owned by the said Daniel Head. And whereas, the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice, is the sum of Thirteen Hundred and seventy two dollars and seventy cents ($1,372.70) principal and interest, and a further sum of thirty dollars ($30), provided by law as an attorney fee in the foreclosure of said mortgage which is the whole amount claimed to be due and unpaid on said mortgage, and no suit or proceeding at law or in chancery having been instituted to recover the debt now remaining secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described, at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door of the Town Hall, in the village of East Jordan, in the county of Charlevoix, Michigan, that being the place where the Circuit Court is holden in said county, on the 27th day of April, 1886, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon of that day, which premises are described in said mortgage as follows: The west half of the southeast quarter of section seventeen, in township thirty-four north, of range seven west, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the payment of the money secured by a certain mortgage, dated the thirtieth day of October, 1883, executed by Benjamin Walker and Maria Walker, his wife, of Charlevoix county, Michigan, to Josiah E. Harding, of Allegan county, Michigan, which said mortgage was recorded in the office of the register of deeds of Charlevoix county, in liber 9 of mortgages, on page 14, on the 23d day of October, A. D. 1883, and whereas the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice is the sum of three hundred and forty-six dollars, and no suit or proceeding having been instituted at law, or in equity, to recover the debt now remaining secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof, and whereas, in said by the conditions of said mortgage it is provided that should any default be made in the payment of the interest due thereon, or any part thereof, on any day whereon the same is made payable, and should the same remain unpaid and in arrears for the space of thirty days, the principal sum together with all arrearages of interest thereon shall at the option of the said obligee or his assigns become due and payable immediately thereafter, and whereas, default has been made in the payment of the interest due on the principal sum on the day when the same became due, and whereas said interest has remained unpaid and in arrears for the space of over thirty days; the said Josiah E. Harding has elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole amount of said mortgage, principal and interest, due and payable, whereby the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative. Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described, at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door of the Town Hall, in village of East Jordan, in the county of Charlevoix, Michigan, that being the place where the Circuit Court is holden in said county, on the 27th day of April, 1886, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon of that day, which premises are described in said mortgage as follows: The west half of the southeast quarter of section seventeen, in township thirty-four north, of range seven west, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan.

I am six years old
And like play and fun.
I mean to grow up
Like George Washington.
So when mother said,
"Who ate all the pie?"
I spoke like a man,
And said: "It was I."

But she didn't say
She'd rather lose the pie
And know that her boy
Would not tell a lie.
She just shut me up
Where I couldn't see,
Then sent me to bed
Without any tea.

In Jamaica we can study the negro character in all its purity(?). Those living near the coast are generally contaminated by associating with sailors, but in the interior, where a white man is not seen often enough to allow familiarity to breed contempt, Massa "Buckra" (white man) receives homage enough to elevate himself considerably in his own estimation. The negro discriminates widely between the white creole and the "over water buckra," all in favor of the latter. The negro character is a strange mixture of contradiction. They are pious thieves and would steal a prayer book on general principals. They are emphatically a church-going people, and the man is poor indeed who has not one suit of respectable clothes for church-wear, though he is clothed in rags and barefooted throughout the week. Yellow gloves and a "stove-pipe" hat are an additional luxury which it is the ambition of all to possess. The favorite costume of the women on this day is a white dress with a bright colored sash around the waist and a hat decorated with many bright artificial flowers. They seldom put on their shoes until arriving near the church, but carry their hat in their hands and their shoes on their heads. This is a matter of comfort as well as economy, as their feet are not accustomed to confinement. The one grand day in the life of the negro is his wedding day. It is only too common for them to live together after the manner of slavery time when marriage was not allowed, but once he decides to marry, it must be done regardless of expense. In very many cases they live together for years before marriage, and while bringing up a large family of "pickaninnies" are gradually increasing the fund for their wedding day. They make a great merit of being married and are not slow to proclaim it. I remember putting the question to a negro: "Sambo, are you a Christian?" and being answered: "I'se a lawfully married man, sah." The black man has a proverb for all occasions. The following apply to the married state: "Come see me is nothing, come lib wi' me is something," and "marriage got teef, him bite like a dog." The propensity to steal seems to be an almost inherent element in the negro character. Burglary is almost unknown, but petty thieving, as a bunch of bananas or a score of cocoanuts, is their delight. As these peculations are the rule and not the exception, it is safe to conclude that each man steals from his neighbor that which the neighbor has already stolen from him. Here again their proverb will apply: "When buckra man tief, him tief half a bit; when buckra tief, him tief whole estate." Address any small boy you may meet, who is carrying or eating fruit, with "Hi dar you pickiny, whar you get dem fruit, yah?" you will invariable be answered "Me tief him, massa."

The negro works best when inspired by numbers, and their own songs which are many times improvised for the occasion. This is best shown in loading steamers with bananas. Usually from one hundred to two hundred hands are employed, men and women, girls and boys. Gang-planks are placed from the wharf over the vessel's side and an endless stream of black humanity pass up one plank with a bunch of bananas on their head, give them to the "swinger" and pass down the other plank as the "swinger" hands the fruit to the laborers in the hold. The tallier whose recommendations are musical ability and strength of lungs, sings out the tally which is usually an improvised doggeral with personal reflections on each arrival. As the song is taken up by the stevedores in the hold, the gang-plank procession, and the wharf laborers, the effect approaches pandemonium. Occasionally they vary their song and thrust us with something like this: "Oh, very well Yankee, oh very well? Oh, Yankee can't fight, for him coward you know. Yankee can't fight for him coward des say. Him shoot nigger quick and then run away."

A negro was never yet known to acknowledge ignorance on any subject. Whatever question may be asked he will answer it in some way. It will be readily seen a large fund of (unreliable) information can be obtained by conversing with them. A conversation held with an old negro will illustrate: Howdy, old massa, how old are you? Me sah, forty years old sah, well, yes, I should think about forty, or seventy or eighty, yes sah. Old massa do you remember when Port Royal was sunk by the earthquake? Yes sah I was in Savla mar when Port Royal sunk. Said earthquake occurred in 1692.

I asked an "old massa" named Grant, and nicknamed the General, if he was related to our General Grant in America. "Is he black man sah?" "No but he fought for the black men of America and freed them from slavery." "Des say I is, sah, des say so."

It is amusing yet vexing as you ride around the island to try to learn the distance from one place to another; but the answers are so uniform in their indefiniteness that with experience you can get almost a correct idea; for example, ask Sambo how far to Oracabessa. If a long way, "it too far, sah;" a shorter distance is "not too far, far enough sah;" three or four miles is simply "not too far;" and a mile or two, "you ride brisk, massa, get there quick."

Saturday with the negro is market day and a holiday. The gardeners from forty miles around bring their produce to the various market towns, as Kingston, Montego Bay and Port Antonio. Some of the more pretentions have their goods, as perhaps a couple cans of sugar, strapped across a donkey's back. But the most fashionable way is to mount the yam, scallion, cocoa or what ever they may have to sell, on their heads and carry it in many cases, a distance of forty miles. This seems like rather energetic exercise for the ladies, but they enjoy it. Arriving at the market we see a truly stirring scene; men, women and children, dogs, goats and donkeys in one mass of confusion. The bleat of the goat, the bray of the donkey and the jargon of the Jamaican being equally unintelligable to the "over water Buckra."

The unscrupulous of their own race who have acquired a better education, profit by the superstition so general among them. "Annancy" and the "Obeah man" are dreadful realities and when they fancy themselves possessed by the spirit of obeahism they willingly give the savings of a year to have the proper incantations pronounced over them. The people as a class are all that could be expected of them when we consider how they have been held down by slavery. One generation of education will not improve them much, but only prove true that "a little learning is a dangerous thing" as in the case of one of my negro acquaintances who after acquiring a knowledge of Latin wrote a letter in that language to a society with which he was connected. When asked why he wrote in that language he answered "because I knew none of you fellows could read it." After dwelling so long upon the character of the negro I seem to be with them again and hear the customary salutation: "A marnin my good massa, I hope you well sah. I beg you quattie to buy bread massa; I hungry sah. I nyam (eat) anything you gie me."

Concise Record of the Week.

EASTERN.

Suit has been commenced in the United States Court, at New York, by Alexander Stewart, who claims to be an heir of the dead millionaire of the same name, to recover $200,000 from Judge Hilton, manager of the Stewart estate. The claimant has been adjudged insane by a Vermont court.

Nearly two thousand persons assembled at Rhinebeck, New York, to witness the killing of a famous fat hog and bet on his weight. When dressed, he scored 888½ pounds.

Jersey justice was promptly meted out to Samuel Johnson, alias "Mingo Jack," a black ruffian who committed a fiendish assault upon Miss Angelina Herbert, a pretty girl of Eatontown, N. J. The victim was beaten with a club, outraged, and left by the roadside for dead; but the perpetrator was overtaken and lynched by a mob of infuriated citizens.

The Governor and Attorney General of Pennsylvania are personally investigating the charges of neglect and cruelty made against the managers of the Mount Joy Soldiers' Orphans' School.

The funeral of Jacob Bixby was held at Mount Carmel, Pennsylvania. He weighed over five hundred pounds, and the services of twelve strong men were necessary to carry his coffin. At the grave a female relative fell dead.

Simon Cameron, the veteran Pennsylvania politician, has entered on his 88th year.

The tug John Martin exploded in Boston harbor, the craft being blown to pieces and the crew of five men instantly killed.

WESTERN.

Wherever Mr. W. J. Florence, the veteran actor, appears, he draws a goodly share of the patronage bestowed upon amusements, but not more than the merits of his plays and performance deserve. Mr. Florence and wife appear in "No Thoroughfare" and "Dombey and Son," at McVicker's Theater, Chicago, this week. "Make a note on't."

In a wolf hunt in Douglas County, Kansas, over 100 "vermints" were killed.

The three Schoolcraft brothers, who last month murdered John Mann, near McLeansboro, Ill., have been sentenced to twenty-five years each in the penitentiary.

Rev. W. J. Spears, of Detroit, thirty years of age, well known among horsemen and base-ball players, has married the widow of C. R. Mabley, the mother of thirteen children, who has a million dollars.

A very pure lead ore, which has yielded nearly four hundred thousand pounds, was recently struck in the Galena district by John Eyrne & Sons.

The extensive mills of Ferdinand Schumacher, at Akron, Ohio, and the railway station adjoining were destroyed by fire, and a residence was crushed by a falling wall. Engines were forwarded from Canton and Cleveland. The loss is estimated at $1,000,000.

Kansas has 900 manufacturing establishments, representing a capital of $19,000,000, an annual product of $31,000,000, and employing 12,000 men, who earn $4,000,000.

John Teemer, the oarsman, has accepted an offer of $2,000 to have the rowing race with Gaudaur take place on White Bear Lake, Minnesota.

The ice in the Straits of Mackinaw is porous and covered with water, and open water is visible at the head of Lake Huron.

The body of Edward Hogan, Jr., son of the roadmaster of the Hannibal and St Joe Railway, was found in a slough near Quincy, Ill., with his head split, his throat cut, and a stab wound in the side. There is no clew to the murderers.

The warrant against Mr. Price, charging him with the outrage on Miss Aldridge, was withdrawn at Windsor, Ill., and the accused was discharged. The Grand Jury will investigate the matter. A bitter feeling has arisen over the affair, friends of Price declaring that the girl hanged herself. The condition of Miss Aldridge has not improved, and her sufferings are said to be as acute as were those of Emma Bond.

A farmer named Roucke, living near Milwaukee, while at work cleaning a deep well, was buried under several feet of stones and earth, and lay in the water forty hours before he could be rescued by neighbors.

A horrible tragedy is reported from Osage Mission, in Southeastern Kansas. A farmer named J. W. Sells, his wife, his daughter aged 14, and a son aged 19 were found murdered in their house, only one of the family surviving, a boy named Willie Sells. The boy is in custody, and there is strong evidence that he is the guilty one, and that he killed his parents, brother, and sister, while they were asleep, with a hatchet and butcher-knife. The motive of the young assassin is a mystery.

John, Martin, and Thomas Archer, three brothers, accused of murder, were taken from jail at Shoals, Ind., by a mob and lynched.

All the strikers on the Missouri Pacific Road have been ordered out of the company's yards, and will not be taken back in the employ of the corporation. The wholesale trade of St. Louis is suffering greatly from the suspension of railroad communication with the Southwest, but the merchants can do nothing. While many of the men who are out did not want to strike they say they will not go back now until their demands are acceded to. The railroad company has made overtures, and the men are surprised at the fact.

A chamois belt, cut from the body of Preller, supposed to have been murdered by Brooke at St. Louis, and a strong link in the chain of evidence against the latter, has been stolen. The police officials do not even know the date of its disappearance.

The examination of County Treasurer Hollinsworth's books was completed at Vincennes, Ind., showing a shortage in his accounts of $78,278.33.

SOUTHERN.

By the destruction of the Alabama Warehouse, at Montgomery, 3,500 bales of cotton were destroyed, involving a loss of $150,000, covered by insurance.

An exhorter named Murgall, who attempted to outrage a young girl in an Indian family at Vinita, Indian Territory, was taken out next day for trial, but the men returned without him, saying he had "escaped." The inference is that he was lynched.

At Kingston, Tex., an editor named W. B. Howard fatally wounded A. R. Russell, City Marshal, and two unoffending persons standing on the sidewalk. The principals have been hostile for some time

Street-car employes in Baltimore have refused an offer from the company to pay $2.50 per day of sixteen hours, with two days a week off. The men want $2 and twelve hours.

The citizens of Brooklyn, Miss., have petitioned Judge Geiger to summon a special grand jury and dispose of the charge of wife-murder brought against George E. Graham, giving a hint that lynching is to be feared.

The cattle drive from Texas in 1886 will reach, it is estimated, 300,000 head. Several herds will be started on the trail within the next ten days.

The Carnival was opened at New Orleans on the 8th, Rex, in the character of Charles V. of Germany, receiving the keys of the city at noon, and then repairing to the Exposition building, where he held a grand reception.

The outcome of the great strike on Gould's Southwestern railroad system is still a matter of grave doubt. Each side appears determined to hold out, and the railroad magnates, it is said, have declared that it is their intention to settle in this instance the question whether in future they shall be dictated to by the Knights or whether the Knights shall be dictated to by them. As an evidence of their determination to fight it out the railroad managers yesterday "dropped" about 5,000 clerks, telegraph-operators, and other men in their service who do not belong to the Knights. Business among St. Louis shippers and on 'Change there is paralyzed.

The free miners at Greenwood, Ky., spend the nights in firing shots at the convict camp, preventing the militia guard from getting any sleep.

A shooting affray took place in the office of the District Court in New Orleans, between M. E. Grace and Captain I. M. Brou, resulting in the death of the former, the latter receiving fatal injuries.

T. J. Henry, clerk in the Kentucky Court of Appeals, is locked up in a Louisville station-house for persistent alcoholism.

WASHINGTON.

Five bills for the admission of half or the whole of Dakota are before the House Committee. These are the Joseph bill, to divide the Territory on the forty-sixth parallel and create the Territory of North Dakota; the Frederick bill, to admit the whole Territory this year; the Springer bill, for division on the Missouri River and securing a popular vote by the plan of minority representation on the question of division and admission; Senator Butler's bill, which is simply an enabling act for the whole Territory; and the Harrison bill, passed by the Senate and admitting South Dakota, full-fledged, with State officials, and Senators, and Congressmen elected.

The receipts from internal revenue for the first seven months of the fiscal year were $66,878,117, an increase of $1,535,157 over the corresponding period of last year.

The House Committee on Postoffices and Post Roads unanimously agreed to report adversely all bills before it for the purchase or construction of telegraph lines by the Government.

The Knights of Labor have declared in favor of the Hennepin Canal project, as they believe the working classes would be greatly benefited by the construction of the waterway and the consequent decrease in the freight rates from the grain-growing sections of the West. Numerous petitions bearing on the subject have been sent to Senators.

The House Committee on Pensions has agreed to report a bill to pension the surviving soldiers and sailors of the Mexican war. The new measure requires the applicants to have served at least sixty days and prohibits the drawing of more than one pension.

The Territory of Utah owes the General Government nearly $330,000, and Controller Durham has advised the Secretary of the Treasury to withhold all payments to the Legislature of that Territory until a settlement is made.

United States Consul General Waller of London declares that the report that the United States consuls in his jurisdiction talk of resigning if their salaries are reduced is mischievous and totally without foundation.

The retired list of the navy includes forty-nine Rear Admirals, fifteen Commodores, eleven Captains, eleven Commanders, nineteen Lieutenant Commanders, twenty-five Lieutenants, and nine Engineers, besides others. Of this number enough were retired because of bad habits, drunkenness, etc., to cost the country $500,000 annually.

POLITICAL.

The Michigan Legislature has rejected a bill for the repeal of the law forbidding any State officer or legislator from accepting a railroad pass.

The five companies of State militia sent by Gov. Knott, of Kentucky, to protect the convicts at the Greenwood Mines, Pulaski County, that State, arrived there early Sunday morning. The miners say they will do nothing as long as the troops remain, but say the convicts shall go just as soon as the soldiers are ordered away.

President Cleveland sent to the Senate the nomination of Henry W. Clendonin as Postmaster of Springfield, Illinois, vice Paul Selby.

A decision in favor of the Prohibitionists' appeal, in the matter of the Atlanta election, was made by the Georgia Supreme Court.

The Ohio legislature has adopted a resolution for a celebration of the centennial anniversary of the first permanent settlement in that state, by an exposition on the fairgrounds in Columbus in September of next year.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Nine thousand Knights of Labor are involved in the strike on the Gould railway system.

Poundmaker, the Indian Chief connected with the Northwestern rebellion, has been released with eleven of his braves from the Penitentiary at Stony Mountain.

The Canadian Department of Marine and Fisheries has called for tenders for the charter of six swift sailing vessels of between sixty and one hundred tons registered burden, to be employed by the fisheries police for use on the coast of Canada.

In a court room at Montreal, during the trial of John S. Hyde, for forgery, the father of the accused fell dead in the witness box.

William Sherman, the eldest son of the retired general of the army, is finishing his studies for the Jesuit priesthood at Georgetown College, much to the disgust of his father.

As a result of the boycott against non-union made cigars, the wholesale dealers of St. Louis are said to be receiving large lots of cigars returned from their customers, who say they cannot sell goods that have not the union label.

Prominent Citizens of Chihuahua, named Leverez and Panodez, fought a duel, and the former was killed by a bullet in the forehead; the latter is likely to die.

It is now estimated that 10,000 employes of the Gould Southwestern railway system are on strike. In all yards along the lines numbers of trackmen, shop hands, and others went out on the 8th, and in some instances the locomotives of freight trains were "killed." At Fort Worth the situation grows graver, and the passenger traffic is threatened, while between that point and Sedalia, Mo., hundreds of cars of perishable freight are side-tracked. The men in the yards at Carondelet and the switchmen of the Bridge and Tunnel Company at St. Louis also quit work, which will greatly retard traffic. From Galveston no freight is being sent out for points north of Houston. The strikers, however, are particular regarding the movement of the mails, and see to it that they are not delayed through any act of theirs.

Recent deaths: Mrs. Mary Bleecker Seymour, widow of the late ex-Gov. Horatio Seymour, of New York; Senator John F. Miller, of California.

Hon. J. B. Chaffee, the millionaire ex-United States Senator of Colorado, died near New York. He was the father-in-law of Ulysses S. Grant, Jr. The death at Philadelphia of the wife of Hon. B. H. Brewster, late Attorney General at Washington, is also announced; also, the death of the wife of Col. W. B. Thompson, of Chattanooga, Tenn., who was the daughter of Hon. D. M. Key, the Postmaster General in President Hayes' Cabinet.

FOREIGN.

A sister of the late King of Spain was married to Prince Antonio in the palace chapel at Madrid.

A jubilee of a fortnight will next summer be held in Germany to commemorate the five hundredth anniversary of the founding of Heidelberg University. The students are arranging a grand historical procession for August 8, and eight hundred hogsheads of the best Rhine wine have been tendered free.

The German authorities, by the conviction of Captain Saranw for selling plans of fortifications, have obtained information which justifies further arrests of officers.

The Duke of Seville has received a pardon for the offense of insulting Queen Christina.

Captain Gerstel, of the Austrian army, was tried by a court martial at Vienna for a slight offense and was convicted. As a matter of form a light sentence was imposed, whereupon he bowed respectfully to the court, drew a revolver and shot himself twice through the head, falling dead.

A Paris newspaper asserts that a serious difference of opinion between France and China has arrested the progress of negotiations for a settlement of the Tonquin question.

The boiler of the tug Rifleman exploded in Cardiff (Wales) Harbor. The vessel and crew, consisting of six persons, were blown to atoms. The cylinder of the engine struck a passing Italian ship, a quarter of a mile distant, and killed the pilot.

Mr. Gladstone, it is announced, is suffering from a severe cold. The physicians do not look upon the Premier's ailment as serious.

The steamer Acton, which arrived at Queenstown, reports meeting with fearful storms during the voyage from Baltimore, in which two sailors were swept from the decks by enormous waves.

Mr. Gladstone, it is said, intends to submit to Parliament his home rule and land measures embodied in the same bill. If the measure is defeated in the House of Commons Parliament will be dissolved immediately.

Thirty-five persons, including several women, perished in the flames of a burning factory in Oels, in Prussian Silesia

At Monaco, an English baronet who had been ruined at the gambling tables took his own life, whereupon a governess in his employ poisoned herself with laudanum.

The Belfast (Ireland) Presbyteries have adopted a series of resolutions expressing loyalty to the Queen, favoring land reform, occupying ownerships, reducing rents, and opposing local government in any shape.

LATER NEWS ITEMS.

An attempt to run a freight train from St. Louis on the Missouri Pacific road on March 11, the fifth day of the great strike of Gould's men, was a failure, the engine being seized by the strikers twenty miles out and "killed." A train was sent out from Little Rock, Ark., under guidance of officers of the law. Traffic is open at Big Springs, Tex., and telegrams have been received from the engineers on the Transcontinental Division of the Texas Pacific that they will stand by the company. At St. Louis the engineers are standing by the strikers and are abandoning their engines by order of the Knights of Labor. Some freight trains are running on the Central Branch Division of the Missouri Pacific Road in Kansas. John C. Brown, Receiver of the Texas and Pacific Road, on being requested by T. V. Powderly to arbitrate difficulties with the Knights of Labor, replied that United States Marshals, under writs from the Federal Court, are settling troubles for him. The superintendent of the Missouri Pacific Road held a conference with freight engineers, who agreed to resume work when permitted to do so.

Chinese are being discharged in large numbers by employers at Los Angeles, Cal.

The Governor of Indiana, in warning the Sheriff of Daviess County that threats had been made to lynch another of the murderers of Bunch, offered all the assistance required to maintain the supremacy of the law.

An opera company rendered "The Mikado," with complete costumes and scenery, in the State prison at Jackson, Mich., the audience being composed of convicts employed by certain contractors. The prisoners were lavish of their applause.

Commodore Truxton, on the 11th inst., attained the age of 62 years, and was retired under the compulsory law, although he had been nominated to the Senate as Rear Admiral.

The Senate Committee on Civil Service has directed an adverse report to be made to the Senate on Mr. Vance's bill for the repeal of the civil-service law.

An aged inmate of the almshouse near Lebanon, Pennsylvania, threw pots green into a large kettle of coffee, by which one hundred persons were poisoned, ten or more of them fatally.

Extreme cold weather forced the Austrian railways to suspend operations. Several persons were frozen to death in the streets of Vienna. The hospitals of Paris are overcrowded with sufferers from frost bites.

The conference at Constantinople of the representatives of the Powers accepted in its entirety the Turco-Bulgarian treaty, which creates Prince Alexander ruler of Eastern Roumelia.

RESOLUTIONS inviting the House of Representatives, the President, Cabinet, Supreme Court, and Foreign Legations to be present at the funeral of Senator Miller, on the 13th, were adopted by the Senate on the 11th. Senators Jones (Nev.), Frye, Cullom, Butler and Gray were appointed a committee to accompany the body to California. The Senate adopted resolutions of respect for the memory of the dead Senator. The Senate in executive session confirmed the nomination of Mr. Dement to be Surveyor-General of Utah. The vote stood 25 to 22, Gen. Logan and five other Republicans voting with the Democrats. The President returned to the Senate without his approval the bill to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River land in Iowa. The President says in his veto message that every possible question that ought to be raised in any suit relating to these lands has been determined by the highest judicial authority, and if any substantial point remains unsettled he believes there is no difficulty in presenting it to the proper tribunal. Senator Logan submitted the views of the minority of the Military Committee on the Fitz-John Porter bill. It is the same report presented by the minority in the last Congress, with the addition of Gen. Logan's letter in reply to Gen. Grant's article in the North American Review justifying the conduct of Fitz-John Porter. In the House, Mr. Sowden, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department, reported a resolution, which was adopted, calling on the Secretary of the Navy for a statement showing the amount of money expended in the Ordnance Shop at the Washington Navy Yard, the number of guns made, altered, and repaired there, and the number of cartridges purchased, and from whom.

CONGRESSIONAL.

The Work of the Senate and House of Representatives.

THE Blair educational bill passed the Senate on the 5th. The sum appropriated is $79,000,000. It provides for eight years after its passage there shall be annually appropriated from the Treasury the following sums in aid of common school education in the States and Territories, and District of Columbia and Alaska: The first, $7,000,000; the second, $10,000,000; the third year, $15,000,000; the fourth year, $13,000,000; the fifth year, $11,000,000; the sixth year, $9,000,000; the seventh year, $7,000,000; and the eighth year, $5,000,000; in all, $77,000,000. Besides this there is a special appropriation of $2,000,000 to aid in the erection of schoolhouses in sparsely settled districts, making the total $79,000,000. The money is given to the several States and Territories in that proportion which the whole number of persons in each of the age of ten years and over who cannot write bears to the whole number of such persons in the United States, according to the census of 1880, until the census figures of 1890 shall be obtained, and then according to the latter figure. In States having separate schools for white and colored children the money is to be paid out in support of such white and colored schools respectively in the proportion that the white and colored children between ten and twenty-one years old bear to each other. No State is to receive the benefit of the act until its Governor shall file with the Secretary of the Interior a statement giving full statistics of the school system, attendance of white and colored children, amount of money expended, number of schools in operation, number and compensation of teachers, etc. No State or Territory is to receive in any one year from this fund more money than it has paid out the previous year from its own revenues for common schools. If any State or Territory declines to take its share of the national fund such share is to be distributed among the States accepting the benefits of the fund. If any State or Territory misapplies the fund, or fails to comply with the conditions, it loses all subsequent apportionment. Any State or Territory accepting the provisions of the act at the first session of its Legislature after the passage of the act shall receive its pro rata share of all previous annual appropriations. The right to alter or repeal the act is reserved by the Senate bill. The Senate adopted a resolution offered by Senator Hale (Me.) calling on Secretary Whitney for all the papers and information in his possession relating to the Dolphin affair. The House passed the urgent deficiency bill, appropriating $631,452 to meet the emergencies in various departments where the appropriations have proved inadequate.

SENATORS PLUMB (Kan.) and LOGAN and CULLOM (Ill.) presented to the Senate, on the 8th, a large number of petitions from assemblies of Knights of Labor favoring the building of the Hennepin Canal. Senator Plumb said they all seemed to emanate from a central source, as they were handsomely printed, and, while greatly respecting the bodies that sent the petitions, he presumed there must be some strong private interest behind the movement in the interest of the Hennepin Canal. Senator Manderson (Neb.) presented a petition setting forth that owing to the "hopeless destitution" prevailing in Illinois the canal should be built by the government. All the petitions were appropriately referred. Senator Vance (N. C.) offered a resolution directing the Committee on Civil Service Reform to report forthwith the bill before it providing for the repeal of the civil-service laws. The resolution, at Senator Vance's request, was for the present laid on the table. Senator Wilson (Iowa) reported favorably from the Senate Judiciary Committee an amendment of the Pacific Railroad funding bill authorizing the President in his discretion to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to buy up any mortgage or other liens on the Pacific roads paramount to the rights or interests of the United States in those roads. Senator Plumb (Kan.) introduced a bill to amend section 5132 of the revised statutes so as to include the cities of Kansas City, Omaha, St. Paul, Minneapolis, Indianapolis, and Atlanta among those whose national banks' reserves may consist in part of balances due one association by another. Mr. Bennett (N. C.) introduced in the House a bill repealing the civil-service law. It was referred to the committee on the revision of the laws. Mr. Hanley (Ala.) offered a resolution for the appointment of a sub committee to inquire into the alleged invasions of the Tinsman act by the Union Pacific Railroad Company, and to determine whether by reason of any violation of the provisions of that act the corporate rights, powers, and franchises of the company have become forfeited. Thomas R. Hudd, Member-elect from the Fifth Wisconsin District, took the oath of office. A bill has been introduced to preserve and protect "The Garden of the Gods" in Colorado from spoilation and to make it a public park.

THE bill authorizing the Central Missouri Railway Company to build a railroad bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Alton, Ill., was passed by the Senate, on the 9th. Senator Edmunds spoke at length on the subject of suspensions. He opened with a reference to former differences between the Senate and the executive branch of the Government, and said that for nearly fifty years Congress and its committees had been furnished upon request and without question with the public papers on file in the departments. The House passed the bills requiring Pacific railroads to pay the cost of surveying their lands and to take out patents for the lands; also, by a vote of 249 to 8, a bill forbidding the hiring out of the labor of Federal prisoners. The Secretary of War transmitted to the House reports of Chief of Engineers Newton and Maj. Handbury, of the engineer corps, in reference to surveys for the Hennepin Canal. Maj. Handbury recommends the Marais d'Osier route, and estimates the cost of the canal at $5,811,367, exclusive of the cost of the "Dixon feeder," which will cost $1,661,117. General Newton adheres to his previous recommendation of the Rock Island route. Only three votes were recorded in the House against the bill to prohibit convicts of the United States from contracting for the labor of Federal convicts.

THE urgent-deficiency bill with an amendment appropriating $30,000 to defray the expenses of Gen. Grant's funeral, was passed by the Senate on the 10th. The Secretary of the Treasury reported to the Senate in reply to a resolution of inquiry, that the reduction of the public debt from July 1, 1877, to June 30, 1885, has exceeded the requirements of the Sinking Fund by $312,647,531. The amount of 3 per cents outstanding is $184,683,250, and these are the only bonds now outstanding redeemable at the option of the Government. All these bonds may be absorbed before the maturity of the 6s per cent. bonds of 1881, which come next in order for redemption, further additions to the fund can only be made by the purchase of bonds in open market. Senators Riddleberger (Va.) and Logan (Ill.) enlivened the Senate proceedings by a sharp personal controversy. The chair having laid before the Senate in the absence of Senator Logan the latter's motion to refer to the Committee on Rules for revision the letter of Mr. Ends denying that the Ends had any representatives on the floor of the Senate, Senator Riddleberger called attention to the fact that the letter had crept into the Record, and not kept to speak on the subject, but was answered by Senator Cullom (Ill.) upon the matter. Later, Senator Logan being then present, Senator Riddleberger called up the subject again, and asked Senator Logan how he had got the letter into the Record. Senator Logan said that he had had nothing to do with it, that he knew, and he had treated the Senator kindly, but the Senator stated that he was the "mere creature" of anybody in any office or position, and in proper sense he stated what was said was true. Senator Riddleberger said he only meant that he was Mr. Ends's representative to the extent of putting his letter in the Record. During a debate on the Blair educational bill in the House Mr. Vance (N. C.) opposed the education of the laboring people of the South, and favored the granting of land to the Southern States. In his opinion Mr. Vance was still in favor of this reserved right system. Touching the future of the Indian question he said: "The Senate bill to repeal the civil-service reform law was reported adversely. Mr. Stone (Mo.) was given permission to file a minority report.

AMERICAN stone jewelry, although a new industry, is already represented in a variety of designs. The minerals employed in its manufacture are agate, moss agate, jasper of all hues, pyrite, moonstone, rhodonite, etc.

SUSAN B. ANTHONY claims to have twenty-six Senators on her list who are in favor of woman suffrage. This sounds encouraging, but it is possible, barely possible, that twenty or so of these Senators have been dealing out taffy to the guileless Susan.

THE valet seems to be occupying the position until recently so well filled by the coachman and the skating-rink man. The valet of Mr. George Pancoast, of New York, married Miss Pancoast, who has $50,000 in her own right, and great expectations besides. The Pancoasts claim that the marriage is illegal, and they will fight it out in the courts, but the young lady insists that she is the lily of the valet.

IN Germany recently was held the "Cooper's Festival," which occurs in Munich every seven years. Those who took part in the Coopers' Dance wore green skull-caps with blue and white feathers, silver-bordered crimson jackets, black velvet knee-breeches, white stockings and shoes with silver buckles. Each dancer held above his head a half hoop of evergreens, from which hung a small keg.

"BRETHREN," said Rev. Sam Jones in his closing sermon at Cincinnati, "you'd better do like Chicago—brag on yourself and stand by yourself;" and then he told this story: "At an experience meeting an old colored brother got up and said; 'Breddern, I are the meanest nigger in all this country. I'll steal, and I'll tell lies, and I'll get drunk, and there ain't a mean thing in God's world I won't do.' Well, he took his seat, and then a great big yellow brother jumped up and said: 'Br'ern, I have heerd Br'er Steve's confession, and it's true, 'fore God.'"

THAT brilliant woman, Mme. Edmond Adam, whose salon was once the headquarters of bright people who did not bow the knee to Napoleon III., and whose ambition has long been to make of Paris an ancient Athens and of France a Greek republic, is again agitating the question of visiting this country and investigating the sources and aspects of New York society. With her perfect detestation of Wagner, whose music, she says, always reminds her of the tramp of Bismarck's soldiers across the fields of France, she will be interested in noticing the American triumphs of the great composer.

THE Princess of Wales had a narrow escape from the recent London mob. She was in an open carriage, and was driving past Apsley House, when the mob advanced upon the carriage, as they did upon every one that came in their way. Her Royal Highness was recognized by some of those in the crowd, and, amid cries against her, several hundred men ran yelling after the carriage until it was driven swiftly into Hyde Park. The worst that would have happened to the Princess would probably have been to be dispossessed of her carriage and compelled to walk through the jostling crowd amid insulting remarks.

HENRY M. STANLEY, who now has an intercontinental railroad on hand for Africa, spends, says Correspondent King, "all his time nowadays in receiving and dismissing the dozens of delegations which come to him from all parts of Great Britain with offers of capital and advice, and of sympathy relative to the new free state. A noble duke drops in on him in the morning, and a Manchester millionaire in the afternoon—the one to say that a narrow-gauge road will never do, the other to insist that it is just the thing." Mr. Stanley remains the representative of the Belgian King, and though he will not return to the Congo for some time, he is practically the shaper and molder of the wonderful model of a state set up by the consensus of diplomacy and capital.

THAT great sea mystery, the great sea serpent, has apparently just made its appearance in South African waters. According to late mails from the Cape the huge monster was recently observed in Morewood's Bay, Umhlali, by eight or nine people. It was first seen seven or eight miles from the shore, swimming in a very erect manner, and apparently proceeding at the rate of eight or nine miles an hour. Occasionally it plunged into the water, making a noise as if a sea were breaking heavily on an open shore, and lashing the water into foam for yards around. Fins like immense oars protruded from its sides. Its length was computed at from 90 to 160 feet.

EVERY schoolboy is supposed to know what a river is, yet Judge Brown, of the United States District Court of New York, has given a decision which confers on the time-worn geographical definition all the authority of legal recognition. He has decided that East River, so called, is not a river. He says a river is a considerable stream of water, that has a current flowing from the higher level that constitutes its source to its mouth. The East River, it seems, lacks this essential and can not lay claim hereafter to the title of river without committing contempt of court.

HITHERTO Japanese ladies have not countenanced tight lacing, as well-rounded figures were in Japan more admired than sylph-like waists. But it is said that a change is coming; that Japanese ladies will now follow their civilized sisters, and the craze for Parisian toilets and hour-glass figures, like those of European females, has set in. The husbands are said not to like it, but to be even more helpless than husbands generally are under the circumstances. For the rage for Japanese clothing in Paris is as great as the craze for Parisian costumes in Japan, and so the wily Jap ladies are bartering their native gowns for those of foreign lands.

A CITIZEN of Tempe, Arizona Territory, has been excavating in some old Aztec ruins near that place, and has found quantities of flint arrowheads of splendid workmanship, superior to those now found among the Indians, nicely painted pottery, ornaments made of shell and of slate representing different birds, a number of toys made of clay, beads made of shell, a number of what seem to be precious stones, stone axes and hammers, stone and bone tools, "metates" or mills for grinding grain, large stone mortars and pestles, and numerous other curiosities. He also found during the excavation a number of furnaces, which had evidently been used for smelting ores, as there was among the debris slag and considerable rich copper and silver ores that had been taken there by Aztec miners.

A COLUMN or more of solid nonpareil type is devoted by each leading London paper to an account of Miss Gladstone's wedding, the list of gifts occupying two-thirds of that space. Among the objects whose presentation was supposed to add to the joy of the occasion were six checks for an aggregate of $2,500, three watches, eight brooches, one pianoforte, a score of silver cream-jugs, a silver-mounted magnifying-glass, a "weighing machine," a portrait of the ill-fated Lord Frederick Cavendish, and the following books: Cardinal Newman's Sermons, Ruskin's works, Carlyle's works, George Eliot's works, Shakspeare, Miss Procter's poems, Clough's poems, Chopin's works for the pianoforte, Tennyson's works (from Hon. Hallam Tennyson), and "The Epic of Hades" (from the author). Tea-trays, inkstands, and candlesticks were too multitudinous for counting.

THIS is very remarkable, if true. A Springfield, Ohio, special says: "One of the most remarkable and perfectly authenticated cases of a presentiment of approaching evil occurred in this city in connection with the Driscoll murder case. Early Tuesday morning, at the time when the struggle must have been taking place in the factory on Columbia street, where George W. Driscoll met his death, Mrs. Driscoll, the mother of the murdered man, was awakened by hearing herself called by her son's voice sounding out of the darkness. Thrice came the cry, 'Mother! Mother! Mother?' So real was the voice that Mrs. Driscoll spoke to her husband and asked him if he had not heard it also, but he was sleeping soundly. Thinking that some member of the household had called, Mrs. Driscoll arose and awakened the members one by one and asked them if they had called. They all denied that they had spoken, and the source of the cries could not be discovered. The family were just composing themselves in sleep again when a messenger arrived to inform them that George was shot."

A RICE pudding was received among the third-class mail matter at the Brooklyn Postoffice.

RAISING A BOYCOTT.

Knights of Labor Score a Point Against the Employment of Convict Labor.

[Chicago telegram.]

The boycott declared by the Illinois Knights of Labor at their convention in Decatur against Phelps, Dodge and Palmer, Selz, Schwab & Co., and C. H. Fargo & Co., boot and shoe dealers of Chicago, was lifted yesterday. The manufacturers came to the terms dictated by the Knights, and signed the following:

The disagreement existing between the Knights of Labor of Illinois and the firm of Phelps, Dodge & Palmer, concerning the employment of convicts in the State Penitentiary for the manufacture of boots and shoes, is, by this agreement, settled. Both parties agree that convict-contract labor should not come in conflict with free labor, and that the interest of the public is better served by its discontinuance. Such being the sentiment of Phelps, Dodge & Palmer, they voluntarily agree that they will not, directly or indirectly, renew any of their existing contracts for contract labor; they also agree that they will cancel all their contracts for contract labor with the State of Indiana as soon as the State of Indiana will relieve them from said contracts, or any liability by virtue of said contracts. Phelps, Dodge & Palmer further agree that they will not knowingly buy boots and shoes of any manufacturer using convict labor. Phelps, Dodge & Palmer further agree that no one seeking employment in their factory at Chicago shall be refused employment on account of being a member of the Knights of Labor.

The compromise was signed by representatives of the firms, and by Robert Bennett, President; P. Tremble, Secretary, and George Rodgers, John J. Mahoney, James Conticey, and John Budlong, members of the Executive Board of Knights.

Included in the boycott originally declared were C. M. Henderson & Co. and M. D. Wells & Co., of Chicago, and Pettingill & Co., of Peoria. A new boycott will be declared against them at once. Members of the yielding firms say the meeting was held at the request of the board. The members of the board say it was called by the firms. The influences which prompted the agreement are mysterious. Neither the members of the board nor of the conceding firms will express themselves lucidly on that point. There exists an understanding—an oral agreement—between the parties, which appears to be more potent than the written one. This they all acknowledge, but refuse to explain. An analyzation of the agreement shows that it has no immediate effect upon the business methods of the firms concerned.

Selz, Schwab & Co. employ 451 men in the Joliet penitentiary, on three contracts. One of these, controlling the labor of seventy-five men, expires in a year; another expires in 1889, and the other, for the labor of the majority of the men, expires in 1892. The firm recently closed a contract with the prison authorities. Mr. Schwab explained to a reporter that he was heartily in accord with the abolishment of contract labor, and for that reason alone had signed the agreement. He said the firm had a factory in Chicago, employing free labor, from which good results had been obtained. He said in connection with this, that Chicago manufacturers were compelled to employ prison labor to compete with the East. He insisted that his firm is of the opinion that contract prison labor is a wrong principle, and that when the Knights of Labor demanded its abolishment his house was entirely willing to comply.

The firm of C. H. Fargo & Co. employs about two hundred prisoners in the Michigan Penitentiary. Their contract expires in two years. Mr. C. H. Fargo said yesterday that he would rather not discuss the influences which caused him to sign the agreement. He had carefully considered the matter, and found that it was to his business interests to agree with the Knights.

Phelps, Dodge & Palmer employ 130 men in the Indiana Prison. Their contract expires in three years.

IN A MOB'S CLUTCHES.

The Brothers Archer, Three in Number, Taken from Jail and Lynched.

[Shoals (Ind.) special.]

The members of the notorious Archer gang, who have been confined in the County Jail here for several weeks past on a charge of having been concerned in several brutal and unprovoked murders, but more especially for the killing of old man Bunch, expiated their crimes just before 1 o'clock this morning at the hands of a mob of determined men, all armed and thoroughly prepared to carry out their purpose.

The mob was composed of many of the farmers of the surrounding country, and was quiet and orderly. On reaching the city the men passed rapidly along through the streets until the jail, situated in West Shoals, was reached. The keys were at once demanded of the jailer, but were refused. Without tarrying a moment for a call stay the spokesman of the mob pushed the jailer aside, and, crying out to the men to follow him, led the way up to the door. A few vigorous strokes against it, and it fell in with a crash. In an instant the excited men were before the iron gratings of the cells.

These were speedily broken open by a hammer, and the doomed prisoners led out into the court-yard adjoining the jail. The mob was as silent as death. From the court-yard the prisoners were led a short distance up the road to a place where three trees had been extemporized into three ghastly gallows. Here the prisoners were given a few moments in which to exchange parting greetings or to make confession of their crimes. But the three men made no sign, and as the three nooses were slipped about their necks they stood composed and resigned to their fate.

The ends of the rope were then thrown over the limbs of the trees, a strong pull was given by each of the little groups of men who held the ropes, and in an instant the three lifeless bodies of John, Mace, and Thomas Archer were dangling heavily in mid-air. In a moment the lynching party was gone, leaving its victims still warm in death. Anxious citizens are now thronging in to view the bodies, and the people are wild with excitement. The hanging is generally commended by the entire city.

OUR PORTRAIT GALLERY.

Senator James K. Jones, of Arkansas.

Hon. James K. Jones, of Arkansas, is one of the youngest members of the United States Senate. He was born in Marshall County, Miss., Sept. 29, 1839, and is therefore but a little more than 46 years of age. His father emigrated to Arkansas in 1848, and the son received his education at select schools and under private tutors. He was a private soldier during the "late unpleasantness" on the losing side; lived on his plantation after the close of the war until 1873, when he commenced the practice of law. He was chosen a member of the Arkansas State Senate in 1873, to fill a vacancy; was re-elected in 1874, and was made President of that body. In 1880 he was elected to the Forty-seventh Congress, and was re-elected to the Forty-eighth and Forty-ninth Congresses. He was recognized as the ablest member of the Arkansas delegation. He was elected to the Senate to succeed James D. Walker, and took his seat March 4, 1885. His term of service will expire March 3, 1891.

Captain Emmet Crawford.

A resolution was recently introduced in the Senate of the United States directing the Secretaries of State and War to inquire and report to the Senate the facts concerning the killing of Capt. Emmet Crawford, of the United States army, who was slain Jan. 10, 1886, by Mexican troops. Should it be proved that the Mexican troops intentionally attacked the United States forces, the matter will at once assume a serious aspect, as so gross an insult could never be passed without full and ample explanations.

Capt. Crawford was born in Philadelphia, and in the early days of 1861 enlisted as a private in Company F of the Seventy-first Pennsylvania Regiment. He was honorably discharged July 2, 1864. He immediately after this again entered the army as First Sergeant in the One Hundred and Ninety-seventh Pennsylvania Regiment, and subsequently served as Lieutenant in the Thirteenth United States Colored Regiment. In 1865 he was brevetted Captain for bravery, and from February, 1866, till May, 1867, served as Lieutenant in the Thirty-seventh United States Colored Regiment. In 1868 he was made First Lieutenant of the Thirty-ninth Infantry, and a year later was transferred to the Twenty-fifth Infantry. In 1871 he was assigned to the Third Cavalry, and in 1879 was made Captain. He had for years served under General Crook, and was considered one of the most efficient Indian fighters in the service. He was for some time in charge of the Apache Reservation. The affair in which he was killed took place on Mexican soil, about two hundred miles from the border line. The Mexicans lost several men in the engagement.

How to Kill Noise.

There are a multitude of sufferers from the noises of their neighborhood who endure what amounts to agony, exciting their nerves to abnormal action and their pulse to fever heat, when it would do them no injury to use a simple means of obviating the whole thing. The clangor of machinery, the ringing of bells, the cries and laughter, the yells and roars, of a hundred or less children at recess or at ball-playing, the passing of heavy drays—all or any of these and other things are sometimes fatal to the health of the invalid and to the work of the thinker. Often it is utterly impossible to move into a region where no heavy drays pass, no bell-ringing is allowed; and then there is hardly a region to be found not invaded by the whistle of the steam engine, or where boys do not shout at their games; and even where there are no cocks to crow, or dogs to bark, or birds to sing at unseemly hours before dawn, there is always some other sound to torture the sensitive ear. If now, the sufferer will take a bit of spermaceti ointment of about the size of a pea, tie it up in a small square of fine linen, and place it deep in the ear, working it round till it takes the shape of the orifice, leaving the end to hang out, not a murmur of sound can be heard; the atmosphere is sweet and serene, the nerves are quite at rest, all exasperation is subdued, and when the noise is over, or the necessary season of quiet has been had, the little plug can be removed, the murmur of the world allowed to return, and no harm done.—Harper's Bazar.

WAR TO THE KNIFE.

The Missouri Pacific Retaliates by Ordering the Strikers from Its Premises.

A Long and Weary Struggle Anticipated, with a Prospect of Some Bloodshed.

[St. Louis (Mo.) telegram.]

General Superintendent Kerrigan, of the Missouri Pacific Railway, this morning issued an order expelling from the Missouri Pacific yards all Knights of Labor. This order includes the delegation of men appointed by the Knights to guard the company's property. The order is as follows:

"You are hereby notified that your action in withdrawing from the services of the Missouri Pacific Railroad Company was a voluntary abandonment of the services of the company, and that you are no longer in its employment, and that your names have been stricken from its rolls. All such who are now about the company's premises are hereby notified that they must immediately leave the same, to the end that this company may resume the traffic of the country.

"WILLIAM KERRIGAN."

Simultaneously with the appearance of the above order in the Missouri Pacific yards in this city twenty Pinkerton detectives and about the same number in the employ of the railroad company marched into the yards under the command of Thomas Furlong, and ordered the Knights who have been guarding the property to leave at once. The order was obeyed and the freight turned over to the detectives. At Carondelet, where the bulk of the Iron Mountain freight is abandoned, the yards are still in possession of the Knights of Labor. The company is engaging all the men it can to act as watchmen, but the applications are few, and the number now in its employ is not large enough to watch all the freight. The most important rumor of the day was that the Missouri Pacific would attempt to resume business to-morrow. The officials of the road were questioned about it, but refuse to say where they are going to get men. To-night it is stated that an order will be issued calling on the men to return to work, but they cannot return as Knights of Labor.

A meeting of the merchants was held on 'Change to-day, and the situation discussed. While many of the merchants sympathize with the railroad employes, they question the wisdom of striking at this time and for the causes which have been given.

"There are two sides to the question," said a prominent commission merchant. "The one-man power in the railroad must be met by organization on the part of employes, but it is unfortunate that just at the opening of the spring trade this terrible blow should come on the city and country."

There is but one opinion on the subject of interference with business, and that is, that in one way or another the embargo on trade should be lifted. The question of whether the railroad could not be held responsible and be made to carry freight, even if this did involve paying a little higher wages than usual, received considerable attention. In addition to the actual stoppage of the movement of commodities, one of the chief elements operating to check and depress trade is fear. The dealers are afraid to move one way or another and prefer to await developments. Trade is, therefore, practically at a standstill, and scarcely anything was done to-day. The speculators, of course, have free swing, but even they are very cautious in their operations. The commission men can do little or nothing but wait until shipments can be made. This state of affairs is working up the feelings of the merchants to a high pitch.

The situation in East St. Louis is alarming in the extreme. Not a pound of freight from any of the Eastern trunk lines can be brought across the river by rail, and the result is that the tracks on the East Side are all blockaded with delayed freight. The bridge is crowded with teams hauling freight to the city. The number of laden coal cars now in the yards of the various roads across the river is enormous, and as there is no way of getting the coal across the river except by hauling it in wagons or shipping it on the ferries, the blockade is likely to cause a cessation of work at the various mines throughout the district, and so throw 2,000 miners out of employment. This afternoon an attempt was made to start the Kirkwood passenger train on the Missouri Pacific, which was abandoned Sunday. When the signal was given to start the fireman on the engine stepped off and refused to fire. No other man could be secured, and Superintendent Kerrigan jumped on the engine himself and fired her while the run was made to Kirkwood, twelve miles out.

The departure of the passenger trains on the Missouri Pacific to-night was delayed about two hours in consequence of somebody having withdrawn the fire in the locomotives. A force of some four hundred men has been employed by the company to operate their yards, and more will be engaged as rapidly as the proper men can be obtained. The opinion is that if the railroad company attempts to run freight trains to-morrow the effort will be resisted even to the point of violence. There is a feeling of great uncertainty as to what either side will do, and much apprehension is felt regarding the result. A report that the railroad company had applied or would apply to the United States Court here for the appointment of a receiver, so that the road may be placed in charge of a court and be under the protection of the Government, was denied. None of the roads centering here have been at all interfered with, except the Missouri Pacific. There are no indications of trouble on any other road.

Steps have been taken to have St. Louis merchants ship goods by the river to New Orleans, and thence to Texas by the Texas and Pacific Road, which it is thought can be kept open.

DAN RICE, the one-time famous Shakspearean circus clown, is lecturing in Texas, and is said to receive $500 a week for his oracular ground and lofty tumbling.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

The County Seat Question.

It has been asserted by several gentlemen, who saw the letter of President Hughart before it was printed in the Sentinel, that one important paragraph was omitted from the Sentinel, thus evading the question at issue, if indeed it does not greatly distort its meaning. The omitted paragraph stated that on the earnest solicitation of Mr. Geo. Beardsley, tres pass agent, the engineer was permitted to come at this time and make a preliminary (pretended) survey of the proposed route. When it is understood that Mr. Beardsley is an active partisan in the county seat struggle, his purpose is apparent. We are sorry we cannot have complete confidence in the scheme as it is now being worked.

Those letters from the president of the G. R. & I. R. R. Co., which are being circulated for the benefit of Boyne City, all refer to some proposition from a committee of citizens from that town Without their proposition the letters mean nothing. As we have understood it, their proposition contemplates the building of a spur from Boyne Falls to Boyne City, and no farther. And the president evidently had that in mind last fall when he wrote of the proposed line to Charlevoix: "as far as our company is concerned, there is no truth in the rumor." And this view of the matter is supported by the statement in Mr. Hughart's letter, as published in yesterday's Sentinel, that "Mr. Sherrie proposed to put on a boat to haul his ore from Boyne City to Ironton."

Perhaps the Sentinel is not "secretly in the pay of Boyne City," but by reason of an understanding with gentlemen from that village the editor has uttered sentiments exactly opposite his previous assertions, and has received the business of men he could not approach for any other consideration. Even as bitter a political partisan as is the supervisor from Evangeline, who had up to the last meeting of the board of supervisors been supposed to be a warm personal and party friend of the editor of the JOURNAL, refused the courtesy of a motion to substitute the JOURNAL for the Sentinel when the matter of county printing was being voted upon, asserting that "the Sentinel is known to favor the east end of the county on the county seat question, and you are not." And this at a time when the editor of the JOURNAL had expressed no opinion on the question beyond a refusal to sign an agreement to make an aggressive fight against East Jordan, and had given no intimation of taking any side of the issue beyond an impartial consideration of the best interests of a majority of the people of the whole county. By reason of this understanding with the editor of the Sentinel all past offences were forgiven, all past slurs and villifications were overlooked, and every dollar of business turned to him that was possible. This much is perhaps legitimate, but is it all? Where did that $500 worth of new material come from which he boasts of having just bought and put into his printing office?

"The JOURNAL can do as good service for East Jordan in advocating that idea as any other."—Sentinel. We deny any intention to work for East Jordan. We opposed its removal there last spring because it was as far from the center of population and business, as well as geographically, as was Charlevoix. But we are in favor of not removing it again until it is determined whether the geographical center of the county, is also the center of business, population, and accessibility. If it goes to Boyne City now, there is little hope of ever getting it back any nearer to Charlevoix, but if it fails to carry now, it is the avowed purpose of a majority of the townships to keep submitting it until they finally get it where they want it. By reason of that intention, we have a hope that it can be brought to Ironton, and thus better accommodate Charlevoix, besides accommodating a greater number of people from other parts of the county, than it now does at East Jordan or ever can at Boyne City.

"We should not like to assert that Bro. Strang is in the pay of East Jordan." Sentinel. Don't do it, then. If you do, you will tell "a deliberate and collossal lie!"

It is wonderful what a power there is in a railroad "boom" when applied for county seat purposes. Last year we were to have a railroad from Elmira to Charlevoix via East Jordan. This year it is Boyne Falls to Charlevoix via Boyne and Ironton. And when you get through it will be all for votes.

Population of Charlevoix County

To enable the readers of the JOURNAL to intelligently consider the county-seat question in its relation to the future greatest good to the greatest number, we print below a tabular statement, by townships, of population in 1874, 1880, and 1884, with the percent of increase from 1880 to 1884, and the total vote at the last election:

INCIPIENT CONSUMPTION.

Coughs, colds, bronchitis, sore throat, are all the results of neglect or exposure, and must have prompt and active remedies to remove them. Croup and whooping cough cause great suffering because an effective remedy is not at hand. Why, then, leave yourself and children exposed to danger and death, when HANSON'S CURE BALSAM will relieve all of these and prevent diseases, such as pneumonia, inflammation of lungs, and consumption. All lung difficulties are removed by this remedy. Price 25 and 50 cts. per bottle.

Guizot's France

CELEBRATED HISTORY OF FRANCE from the Earliest Times to 1848. By M. GUIZOT, Prime Minister of France, continued from his notes, by his daughter, MME. GUIZOT DE WITT. Complete in 8 vols., large 12mo., bound elegantly in fine cloth, gilt tops. A new edition just issued, reduced in price to $4.00, including postage. This is much the best edition published of this magnificent work, which is known as the best popular history of France. The cost of the imported edition, with substantially the same illustrations is $36.00, while this is certainly the best in form, and the most desirable for the library. "THE MATCHLESS BRILLIANCY of Guizot's style, his graphic descriptions of men and events, his painstaking minuteness of detail, the lucidity and ease of his style and the admirable philosophic reflections, all combine to render it worthy of the description it bears as the most popular history of France. It is as fascinating as a novel, and as life-like as a theatrical representation of the events and personages it describes. How the set can be sold for that price remains, after much reflection, a mystery, for the work is not sham work, it is well done; altogether it is a marvel of cheapness. Mr. Alden has done much for the cause of good literature, but nothing better than this."—Daily Times, Buffalo, N.Y. "What VICTOR HUGO is in fiction, Cousin in philosophy, Guizot is in history. Among Frenchmen he had but few peers."—Christian Leader, Boston, Mass. "IT IS FAR THE best history of France that has been written. It is a wonder of cheapness."—Christian Advocate, Richmond, Va. "SUCH A HISTORY, by such a writer, and at such a price, should gain readers by the thousand."—Churchman, Richmond, Va. "IN STYLE of cover, firmness of binding, quality of letterpress, affluence of illustration, and lowness of price, this edition of one of the noblest historical works in existence, is one of the most remarkable publications now offered to the public."—Morning Star, Dover, N. AMERICAN stone jewelry, although a new industry, is already represented in a variety of designs. The minerals employed in its manufacture are agate, moss agate, jasper of all hues, pyrite, moonstone, rhodonite, etc.

SUSAN B. ANTHONY claims to have twenty-six Senators on her list who are in favor of woman suffrage. This sounds encouraging, but it is possible, barely possible, that twenty or so of these Senators have been dealing out taffy to the guileless Susan.

THE valet seems to be occupying the position until recently so well filled by the coachman and the skating-rink man. The valet of Mr. George Pancoast, of New York, married Miss Pancoast, who has $50,000 in her own right, and great expectations besides. The Pancoasts claim that the marriage is illegal, and they will fight it out in the courts, but the young lady insists that she is the lily of the valet.

IN Germany recently was held the "Cooper's Festival," which occurs in Munich every seven years. Those who took part in the Coopers' Dance wore green skull-caps with blue and white feathers, silver-bordered crimson jackets, black velvet knee-breeches, white stockings and shoes with silver buckles. Each dancer held above his head a half hoop of evergreens, from which hung a small keg.

"BRETHREN," said Rev. Sam Jones in his closing sermon at Cincinnati, "you'd better do like Chicago—brag on yourself and stand by yourself;" and then he told this story: "At an experience meeting an old colored brother got up and said; 'Breddern, I are the meanest nigger in all this country. I'll steal, and I'll tell lies, and I'll get drunk, and there ain't a mean thing in God's world I won't do.' Well, he took his seat, and then a great big yellow brother jumped up and said: 'Br'ern, I heerd Br'er Steve's confession, and it's true, 'fore God.'"

THAT brilliant woman, Mme. Edmond Adam, whose salon was once the headquarters of bright people who did not bow the knee to Napoleon III., and whose ambition has long been to make of Paris an ancient Athens and of France a Greek republic, is again agitating the question of visiting this country and investigating the sources and aspects of New York society. With her perfect detestation of Wagner, whose music, she says, always reminds her of the tramp of Bismarck's soldiers across the fields of France, she will be interested in noticing the American triumphs of the great composer.

THE Princess of Wales had a narrow escape from the recent London mob. She was in an open carriage, and was driving past Apsley House, when the mob advanced upon the carriage, as they did upon every one that came in their way. Her Royal Highness was recognized by some of those in the crowd, and, amid cries against her, several hundred men ran yelling after the carriage until it was driven swiftly into Hyde Park. The worst that would have happened to the Princess would probably have been to be dispossessed of her carriage and compelled to walk through the jostling crowd amid insulting remarks.

HENRY M. STANLEY, who now has an intercontinental railroad on hand for Africa, spends, says Correspondent King, "all his time nowadays in receiving and dismissing the dozens of delegations which come to him from all parts of Great Britain with offers of capital and advice, and of sympathy relative to the new free state. A noble duke drops in on him in the morning, and a Manchester millionaire in the afternoon—the one to say that a narrow-gauge road will never do, the other to insist that it is just the thing." Mr. Stanley remains the representative of the Belgian King, and though he will not return to the Congo for some time, he is practically the shaper and molder of the wonderful model of a state set up by the consensus of diplomacy and capital.

THAT great sea mystery, the great sea serpent, has apparently just made its appearance in South African waters. According to late mails from the Cape the huge monster was recently observed in Morewood's Bay, Umhlali, by eight or nine people. It was first seen seven or eight miles from the shore, swimming in a very erect manner, and apparently proceeding at the rate of eight or nine miles an hour. Occasionally it plunged into the water, making a noise as if a sea were breaking heavily on an open shore, and lashing the water into foam for yards around. Fins like immense oars protruded from its sides. Its length was computed at from 90 to 160 feet.

EVERY schoolboy is supposed to know what a river is, yet Judge Brown, of the United States District Court of New York, has given a decision which confers on the time-worn geographical definition all the authority of legal recognition. He has decided that East River, so called, is not a river. He says a river is a considerable stream of water, that has a current flowing from the higher level that constitutes its source to its mouth. The East River, it seems, lacks this essential and can not lay claim hereafter to the title of river without committing contempt of court.

HITHERTO Japanese ladies have not countenanced tight lacing, as well-rounded figures were in Japan more admired than sylph-like waists. But it is said that a change is coming; that Japanese ladies will now follow their civilized sisters, and the craze for Parisian toilets and hour-glass figures, like those of European females, has set in. The husbands are said not to like it, but to be even more helpless than husbands generally are under the circumstances. For the rage for Japanese clothing in Paris is as great as the craze for Parisian costumes in Japan, and so the wily Jap ladies are bartering their native gowns for those of foreign lands.

A CITIZEN of Tempe, Arizona Territory, has been excavating in some old Aztec ruins near that place, and has found quantities of flint arrow-heads of splendid workmanship, superior to those now found among the Indians, nicely painted pottery, ornaments made of shell and of slate representing different birds, a number of toys made of clay, beads made of shell, a number of what seem to be precious stones, stone axes and hammers, stone and bone tools, "metates" or mills for grinding grain, large stone mortars and pestles, and numerous other curiosities. He also found during the excavation a number of furnaces, which had evidently been used for smelting ores, as there was among the debris slag and considerable rich copper and silver ores that had been taken there by Aztec miners.

A COLUMN or more of solid nonpareil type is devoted by each leading London paper to an account of Miss Gladstone's wedding, the list of gifts occupying two-thirds of that space. Among the objects whose presentation was supposed to add to the joy of the occasion were six checks for an aggregate of $2,500, three watches, eight brooches, one pianoforte, a score of silver cream-jugs, a silver-mounted magnifying-glass, a "weighing machine," a portrait of the ill-fated Lord Frederick Cavendish, and the following books: Cardinal Newman's Sermons, Ruskin's works, Carlyle's works, George Eliot's works, Shakspeare, Miss Procter's poems, Clough's poems, Chopin's works for the pianoforte, Tennyson's works (from Hon. Hallam Tennyson), and "The Epic of Hades" (from the author). Tea-trays, inkstands, and candlesticks were too multitudinous for counting.

THIS is very remarkable, if true. A Springfield, Ohio, special says: "One of the most remarkable and perfectly authenticated cases of a presentiment of approaching evil occurred in this city in connection with the Driscoll murder case. Early Tuesday morning, at the time when the struggle must have been taking place in the factory on Columbia street, where George W. Driscoll met his death, Mrs. Driscoll, the mother of the murdered man, was awakened by hearing herself called by her son's voice sounding out of the darkness. Thrice came the cry, 'Mother! Mother! Mother?' So real was the voice that Mrs. Driscoll spoke to her husband and asked him if he had not heard it also, but he was sleeping soundly. Thinking that some member of the household had called, Mrs. Driscoll arose and awakened the members one by one and asked them if they had called. They all denied that they had spoken, and the source of the cries could not be discovered. The family were just composing themselves in sleep again when a messenger arrived to inform them that George was shot."

A RICE pudding was received among the third-class mail matter at the Brooklyn Postoffice.

RAISING A BOYCOTT.

Knights of Labor Score a Point Against the Employment of Convict Labor.

[Chicago telegram.]

The boycott declared by the Illinois Knights of Labor at their convention in Decatur against Phelps, Dodge and Palmer, Selz, Schwab & Co., and C. H. Fargo & Co., boot and shoe dealers of Chicago, was lifted yesterday. The manufacturers came to the terms dictated by the Knights, and signed the following:

The disagreement existing between the Knights of Labor of Illinois and the firm of Phelps, Dodge & Palmer, concerning the employment of convicts in the State Penitentiary for the manufacture of boots and shoes, is, by this agreement, settled. Both parties agree that convict-contract labor should not come in conflict with free labor, and that the interest of the public is better served by its discontinuance. Such being the sentiment of Phelps, Dodge & Palmer, they voluntarily agree that they will not, directly or indirectly, renew any of their existing contracts for contract labor; they also agree that they will cancel all their contracts for contract labor with the State of Indiana as soon as the State of Indiana will relieve them from said contracts, or any liability by virtue of said contracts. Phelps, Dodge & Palmer further agree that they will not knowingly buy boots and shoes of any manufacturer using convict labor. Phelps, Dodge & Palmer further agree that no one seeking employment in their factory at Chicago shall be refused employment on account of being a member of the Knights of Labor.

The compromise was signed by representatives of the firms, and by Robert Bennett, President; J. P. Trench, Secretary, and George Rodgers, John J. Mahoney, James Conticny, and John Budlong, members of the Executive Board of Knights.

Included in the boycott originally declared were C. M. Henderson & Co. and M. D. Wells & Co., of Chicago, and Pettingill & Co., of Peoria. A new boycott will be declared against them at once. Members of the yielding firms say the meeting was held at the request of the board. The members of the board say it was called by the firms. The influences which prompted the agreement are mysterious. Neither the members of the board nor of the conceding firms will express themselves lucidly on that point. There exists an understanding—an oral agreement—between the parties, which appears to be more potent than the written one. This they all acknowledge, but refuse to explain. An analyzation of the agreement shows that it has no immediate effect upon the business methods of the firms concerned.

Selz, Schwab & Co. employ 451 men in the Joliet penitentiary, on three contracts. One of these, controlling the labor of seventy-five men, expires in a year; another expires in 1889, and the other, for the labor of the majority of the men, expires in 1892. The firm recently closed a contract with the prison authorities. Mr. Schwab explained to a reporter that he was heartily in accord with the abolishment of contract labor, and for that reason alone had signed the agreement. He said the firm had a factory in Chicago, employing free labor, from which good results had been obtained. He said in connection with this, that Chicago manufacturers were compelled to employ prison labor to compete with the East. He insisted that his firm is of the opinion that contract prison labor is a wrong principle, and that when the Knights of Labor demanded its abolishment his house was entirely willing to comply.

The firm of C. H. Fargo & Co. employs about two hundred prisoners in the Michigan Penitentiary. Their contract expires in two years. Mr. C. H. Fargo said yesterday that he would rather not discuss the influences which caused him to sign the agreement. He had carefully considered the matter, and found that it was to his business interests to agree with the Knights.

Phelps, Dodge & Palmer employ 130 men in the Indiana Prison. Their contract expires in three years.

IN A MOB'S CLUTCHES.

The Brothers Archer, Three in Number, Taken from Jail and Lynched.

[Shoals (Ind.) special.]

The members of the notorious Archer gang, who have been confined in the County Jail here for several weeks past on a charge of having been concerned in several brutal and unprovoked murders, but more especially for the killing of old man Bunch, expiated their crimes just before 1 o'clock this morning at the hands of a mob of determined men, all armed and thoroughly prepared to carry out their purpose.

The mob was composed of many of the farmers of the surrounding country, and was quiet and orderly. On reaching the city the men passed rapidly along through the streets until the jail, situated in West Shoals, was reached. The keys were at once demanded of the jailer, but were refused. Without tarrying a moment for a call only the spokesman of the mob pushed the jailer aside, and, crying out to the men to follow him, led the way up to the door. A few vigorous strokes against it, and it fell in with a crash. In an instant the excited men were before the iron gratings of the cells.

These were speedily broken open by a hammer, and the doomed prisoners led out into the court-yard adjoining the jail. The mob was as silent as death. From the court-yard the prisoners were led a short distance up the road to a place where three trees had been extemporized into three ghastly gallows. Here the prisoners were given a few moments in which to exchange parting greetings or to make confession of their crimes. But the three men made no sign, and as the three nooses were slipped about their necks they stood composed and resigned to their fate.

The ends of the rope were then thrown over the limbs of the trees, a strong pull was given by each of the little groups of men who held the ropes, and in an instant the three lifeless bodies of John, Mart, and Thomas Archer were dangling heavily in mid-air. In a moment the lynching party was gone, leaving its victims still warm in death. Anxious citizens are now thronging in to view the bodies, and the people are wild with excitement. The hanging is generally commended by the entire city.

OUR PORTRAIT GALLERY.

Senator James K. Jones, of Arkansas.

Hon. James K. Jones, of Arkansas, is one of the youngest members of the United States Senate. He was born in Marshall County, Miss., Sept. 29, 1839, and is therefore but a little more than 46 years of age. His father emigrated to Arkansas in 1848, and the son received his education at select schools and under private tutors. He was a private soldier during the "late unpleasantness" on the losing side; lived on his plantation after the close of the war until 1873, when he commenced the practice of law. He was chosen a member of the Arkansas State Senate in 1873, to fill a vacancy; was re-elected in 1874, and was made President of that body. In 1880 he was elected to the Forty-seventh Congress, and was re-elected to the Forty-eighth and Forty-ninth Congresses. He was recognized as the ablest member of the Arkansas delegation. He was elected to the Senate to succeed James D. Walker, and took his seat March 4, 1885. His term of service will expire March 3, 1891.

Captain Emmet Crawford.

A resolution was recently introduced in the Senate of the United States directing the Secretaries of State and War to inquire and report to the Senate the facts concerning the killing of Capt. Emmet Crawford, of the United States army, who was slain Jan. 10, 1886, by Mexican troops. Should it be proved that the Mexican troops intentionally attacked the United States forces, the matter will at once assume a serious aspect, as so gross an insult could never be passed without full and ample explanations.

Capt. Crawford was born in Philadelphia, and in the early days of 1861 enlisted as a private in Company F of the Seventy-first Pennsylvania Regiment. He was honorably discharged July 2, 1864. He immediately after this again entered the army as First Sergeant in the One Hundred and Ninety-seventh Pennsylvania Regiment, and subsequently served as Lieutenant in the Thirteenth United States Colored Regiment. In 1865 he was brevetted Captain for bravery, and from February, 1866, till May, 1867, served as Lieutenant in the Thirty-seventh United States Colored Regiment. In 1868 he was made First Lieutenant of the Thirty-ninth Infantry, and a year later was transferred to the Twenty-fifth Infantry. In 1871 he was assigned to the Third Cavalry, and in 1879 was made Captain. He had for years served under General Crook, and was considered one of the most efficient Indian fighters in the service. He was for some time in charge of the Apache Reservation. The affair in which he was killed took place on Mexican soil, about two hundred miles from the border line. The Mexicans lost several men in the engagement.

How to Kill Noise.

There are a multitude of sufferers from the noises of their neighborhood who endure what amounts to agony, exciting their nerves to abnormal action and their pulse to fever heat, when it would do them no injury to use a simple means of obviating the whole thing. The clangor of machinery, the ringing of bells, the cries and laughter, the yells and roars, of a hundred or less children at recess or at ball-playing, the passing of heavy drays—all or any of these and other things are sometimes fatal to the health of the invalid and to the work of the thinker. Often it is utterly impossible to move into a region where no heavy drays pass, no bell-ringing is allowed; and then there is hardly a region to be found not invaded by the whistle of the steam engine, or where boys do not shout at their games; and even where there are no cocks to crow, or dogs to bark, or birds to sing at unseemly hours before dawn, there is always some other sound to torture the sensitive ear. If now, the sufferer will take a bit of spermaceti ointment of about the size of a pea, tie it up in a small square of fine linen, and place it deep in the ear, working it round till it takes the shape of the orifice, leaving the end to hang out, not a murmur of sound can be heard; the atmosphere is sweet and serene, the nerves are quite at rest, all exasperation is subdued, and when the noise is over, or the necessary season of quiet has been had, the little plug can be removed, the murmur of the world allowed to return and no harm done.—Harper's Bazar.

WAR TO THE KNIFE.

The Missouri Pacific Retaliates by Ordering the Strikers from Its Premises.

A Long and Weary Struggle Anticipated, with a Prospect of Some Bloodshed.

[St. Louis (Mo.) telegram.]

General Superintendent Kerrigan, of the Missouri Pacific Railway, this morning issued an order expelling from the Missouri Pacific yards all Knights of Labor. This order includes the delegation of men appointed by the Knights to guard the company's property. The order is as follows:

"You are hereby notified that your action in withdrawing from the services of the Missouri Pacific Railroad Company was a voluntary abandonment of the services of the company, and that you are no longer in its employment, and that your names have been stricken from its rolls. All such who are now about the company's premises are hereby notified that they must immediately leave the same, to the end that this company may resume the traffic of the country.

"WILLIAM KERRIGAN."

Simultaneously with the appearance of the above order in the Missouri Pacific yards in this city twenty Pinkerton detectives and about the same number in the employ of the railroad company marched into the yards under the command of Thomas Furlong, and ordered the Knights who have been guarding the property to leave at once. The order was obeyed and the freight turned over to the detectives. At Carondelet, where the bulk of the Iron Mountain freight is abandoned, the yards are still in possession of the Knights of Labor. The company is engaging all the men it can to act as watchmen, but the applications are few, and the number now in its employ is not large enough to watch all the freight. The most important rumor of the day was that the Missouri Pacific would attempt to resume business to-morrow. The officials of the road were questioned about it, but refuse to say where they are going to get men. To-night it is stated that an order will be issued calling on the men to return to work, but they cannot return as Knights of Labor.

A meeting of the merchants was held on 'Change to-day, and the situation discussed. While many of the merchants sympathize with the railroad employes, they question the wisdom of striking at this time and for the causes which have been given.

"There are two sides to the question," said a prominent commission merchant. "The one-man power in the railroad must be met by organization on the part of employes, but it is unfortunate that just at the opening of the spring trade this terrible blow should come on the city and country."

There is but one opinion on the subject of interference with business, and that is, that in one way or another the embargo on trade should be lifted. The question of whether the railroad could not be held responsible and be made to carry freight, even if this did involve paying a little higher wages than usual, received considerable attention. In addition to the actual stoppage of the movement of commodities, one of the chief elements operating to check and depress trade is fear. The dealers are afraid to move one way or another and prefer to await developments. Trade is, therefore, practically at a standstill, and scarcely anything was done to-day. The speculators, of course, have free swing, but even they are very cautious in their operations. The commission men can do little or nothing but wait until shipments can be made. This state of affairs is working up the feelings of the merchants to a high pitch.

The situation in East St. Louis is alarming in the extreme. Not a pound of freight from any of the Eastern trunk lines can be brought across the river by rail, and the result is that the tracks on the East Side are all blockaded with delayed freight. The bridge is crowded with teams hauling freight to the city. The number of laden coal cars now in the yards of the various roads across the river is enormous, and as there is no way of getting the coal across the river except by hauling it in wagons or shipping it on the ferries, the blockade is likely to cause a cessation of work at the various mines throughout the district, and so throw 2,000 miners out of employment. This afternoon an attempt was made to start the Kirkwood passenger train on the Missouri Pacific, which was abandoned Sunday. When the signal was given to start the fireman on the engine stepped off and refused to fire. No other man could be secured, and Superintendent Kerrigan jumped on the engine himself and fired her while the run was made to Kirkwood, twelve miles out.

The departure of the passenger trains on the Missouri Pacific to-night was delayed about two hours in consequence of somebody having withdrawn the fire in the locomotives. A force of some four hundred men has been employed by the company to operate their yards, and more will be engaged as rapidly as the proper men can be obtained. The opinion is that if the railroad company attempts to run freight trains to-morrow the effort will be resisted even to the point of violence. There is a feeling of great uncertainty as to what either side will do, and much apprehension is felt regarding the result. A report that the railroad company had applied or would apply to the United States Court here for the appointment of a receiver, so that the road may be placed in charge of a court and be under the protection of the Government, was denied. None of the roads centering here have been at all interfered with, except the Missouri Pacific. There are no indications of trouble on any other road.

Steps have been taken to have St. Louis merchants ship goods by the river to New Orleans, and thence to Texas by the Texas and Pacific Road, which it is thought can be kept open.

DAN RICE, the one-time famous Shakspearean circus clown, is lecturing in Texas, and is said to receive $500 a week for his oratorical ground and lofty tumbling.

GENERAL ROSECRANS is said to be dissatisfied with his place as Register of the Treasury, and wants to be Superintendent of the Coast Survey.

The Charlevoix Minstrels occupy the boards at Boyne City to-morrow night, and East Jordan Monday night.

At the annual meeting of the Improvement Association, Monday evening, all the old officers were unanimously re-elected.

Henry Barth boiler maker, has contracted to repair the boilers of Sweet's saw mill on South Arm; also the boilers of the steamer North Star.

The Pine Lake Lumber Co. are building a scow on the north side of Round lake, upon which they will erect a "cook shanty" for their raftsmen.

Maudie Plamondon has so far recovered as to be around, and can talk quite a little, and no doubt that in the near future she will be as well as ever.—Petoskey Democrat.

The Charlevoix Minstrels entertainment on Tuesday evening was a complete success. The entertainment opened with mirth, continued and ended with laughter and applause. The acting was ingeninsly imitative of negro character, clog dancing and all. All we need to say concerning the conundrums and jokes is that they never failed to bring down the house. The band boys played well, as usual, and the ingenius illustration of popular strikes brought out the part of each instrument in the general harmony with marked effect.

The Master of Lodge No. 282, F. & A. M., would like to see all the Brethren at their rooms, Saturday evening; also a special communication Tuesday evening, March 23d.

John Nichols and family, entertained about 50 guests, the most of whom were young people, last Wednesday evening at their home. All report an exceedingly pleasant evening.

Miss Emma J. Todd, of Cheboygan, formerly in the employ of R. Rosenthal of Petoskey, arrived in Charlevoix on Tuesday, to act as saleslady in the store of Rosenthal & Son.

"Prof." Bryant Weed will return Friday after an absence of five months teaching in Manistique. He will return to the same place in June, to take up the same work in a different school.

From the best information we can obtain, the output of hardwood lumber, cedar ties and posts, and shipping wood from the Pine Lake region will be larger this season than ever before in a single season.

Gid. Fuller, formerly with J. L. Hurd & Co., died in Wheeling, West Virginia, on the 7th inst. after an illness of three days. He went to Virginia on account of feeble health, and was apparently improving up to within a few days of his death.

The Historical Society.

Having nearly all of our type upon the galleys, we were obliged to condense our report last week as much as possible, and were not aware until the entire edition was printed that we had failed to state that the meeting was with Mr. and Mrs. Carpenter. We regret the error.

Last Friday the meeting was with Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Kane, with the following program, president Green in the chair:

Violin solo O. I. Wheat, accompanied by Mrs. Kane.

Select reading from Mark Twain—Dr. Carlstein.

Duet "O'er the bright and sparkling waters," Mrs. Mayne and Mrs. Kane, accompanied by Miss Cochrane.

Intermission.

Vocal solo—"Bonnie Sweet Bessie," W. A. Smith, accompanied by Miss Cochrane.

In place of the biographical essay, Mr. Nichols read an extended selection from a paper by Hon. Anthony Van-Wyck, before the Wisconsin Historical Society, entitled, "The History of a People as Represented by their Monuments." The article was of surpassing interest.

Another violin solo, by O. I. Wheat, and a select reading by W. A. Brown, closed the literary exercises.

The meeting this week Friday, will be with Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Smith. Paper by R. W. Kane on Daniel Webster.

M. E. Church.

Sermon by the pastor at the morning hour. Sabbath school as usual. Young people's prayer meeting at 6 o'clock.

In the evening, at 7 o'clock, in response to urgent requests, the first of a series of lectures on popular amusements will be delivered. The subject of this first lecture will be "The Modern Dance." All are invited to attend this course.

An Interview With Mr. Hughart.

Hoping that the day had come at last when we might announce authoratively that Charlevoix is to have a railroad in the near future, we called at president Hughart's office in Grand Rapids, to inquire concerning the meaning of the civil engineering done in Ironton on the 9th inst. The president himself being sick, the interview was with his son, who has charge of all his father's business under such circumstances.

His reply was that he knew nothing of the matter until he received a letter from Mr. Beardsley, the company's trespass agent, who stated that after finishing the work of finding some old lines, he had some time at his disposal, and had embraced the opportunity to sound the channel of the Arm at Ironton, thinking the facts might be of use in determining the feasibility of a route to Charlevoix, by way of Boyne City and Ironton. The company did not authorize this survey, and knew nothing of it until this letter came from the trespass agent.

Now, laying aside our interest in the county seat question, what are Charlevoix's prospects for a railroad in the near future? We hold that it is morally certain that we shall have a railroad some time. Mr. Hughart stated that although nothing had been determined upon officially, yet individual stockholders had discussed the subject among themselves. This discussion among individual stockholders, shows that the subject is ripe for official action. Moreover, upon a previous visit to the south part of the state, we overheard a conductor of the G. R. & I. asking of some other official of the road who happened to be on the train, what had been done yet concerning the "Charlevoix Branch." The term Charlevoix Branch has therefore got into railroad circles.

But we are no nearer to the determination of the matter as to when this road is to be built, than we were a year ago. All we can say is, that nothing official has been done.

Much less are we able to state that if a road connecting us with the G. R. & I. is built, it will pass through Boyne City.

When, in answer to Mr. Hughart's question we stated the width and depth of the Arm at Ironton, he manifested great surprise, as if a greater obstacle presented itself than had been anticipated. Who can say the road when built will not go through East Jordan? Be that as it may, either we who went to Ironton ten days ago, were made the unconscious players of a farce, or private parties from Boyne are building the road for a sort of surprise gift to the G. R. & I. company. If the former is the fact, and we are not made indignant by it, we have ceased to be men. If the latter is the truth, the scheme will miscarry unless Charlevoix is let into the secret.

Since the above was in type, the Sentinel has published a letter from president Hughart stating what has been done toward the Charlevoix Branch: from which it does not appear that anything has been done recently. Several reliable parties who saw the letter state that, in a suppressed passage, it referred to a permit granted to Mr. Beardsley to use the company's surveyor for a cursory survey. This courtesy of the president of the road to its trespass agent is the attenuated thread upon which hang all the fond hopes and bold assertions, that the road is to be built immediately, and that through Boyne City.

ST. ANDREWS BAY,
March 8th, 1886.

EDITOR JOURNAL.—Seeing by your paper that you would like to hear from us in regard to the St. Andrews Bay question, I will try and give you a true statement of affairs here. I am sorry to say that the railroad company is a swindle, but that does not necessarily ruin the place. A certain class that came here, thinking to find every thing as the pamphlets represented it, and being too lazy to work, are very dissatisfied and take no pains to better their condition; but anyone who is willing to work can do well here. There is plenty of land to be had in Florida either at the government price of $1.25 per acre, or under the homestead law. We have a homestead of 160 acres, and I think it is the loveliest place near St. Andrews Bay. We have built a nice cottage on it and planted some fruit trees, and grape vines; also a fine vegetable garden and some potatoes. I cannot say what can be raised here, as the people here only plant what they know will do well, and do not experiment at all; but I think we can raise nearly every thing here that they do in Michigan, except wheat, and why should we worry about that, when one acre of fruit will produce enough to supply our family with bread some time.

The southern farmer does not work nearly as hard as the northern farmers do, else they would be better off to day. They have not the energy, and besides they got so discouraged losing their property through the rebellion, that they have not tried to redeem it. They are very friendly and if there is any animosity existing towards northerners we have failed to perceive it. They seem pleased to see them coming and hope it will improve their condition. Most of those that are writing such discouraging letters, have not been here at all, but received their information from some of the disappointed ones that have been here. Mr. Stockman forgets how small Charlevoix was, not many years ago. Look at it to-day; it has grown without a railroad, and I see no reason why St. Andrews Bay cannot do the same. As to his statement that oranges will not grow here; that is a mistake. There is a fine grove about a mile from our house, and the finest oranges we have had since we came to Florida my husband bought there, and it is unhajured by the freeze. We shall plant a grove in spite of the grumblers. They all speak of the houses in the old town, but do not say anything about the new town, which consists of quite a number of cottages, and a good sized hotel. There are also two saw-mills on the bay, and a lumber yard supplied from Pensacola, where you can get sash, doors, and dressed lumber. The climate is delightful, and the water very pure, and plenty of it. Our nearest neighbors are from Kansas. Like ourselves they have taken homesteads, and as they are busy getting their crops in, they have not taken the trouble to build houses, but are living in tents, so you must know it is not very cold.

Hoping this will satisfy people that St. Andrews Bay is not the worst place in the world, I will close with good wi[illegible] to JOURNAL.

MRS. WM. GLOVER.

Public Entertainment.

All who attended the entertainment given by the teachers and pupils in our public schools at the close of last term, will be pleased to learn that another of the kind will be given at the close of the present term. The entertainment will be at Opera Hall, Wednesday evening, March 24.

Every department will have some part to perform, and we may say nearly every pupil will contribute to the entertainment. Pains has been taken in the arrangement of every part. Those in charge think they have improved upon their last effort.

The desire is that this entertainment shall net enough to finish paying for the organ that is now in use with so much of satisfaction and pleasure to the students.

We feel sure that it is not necessary to say, Come out and give them a crowded house, but think it more necessary to caution all to secure a seat early lest you be unable to get one at all.

The term examinations will take place Wednesday, Thursday and Friday. The spring term opens Monday, April 5th.

The Congregational Church.

At Horton's Bay last Sabbath, Rev. VanAuken preached in the evening, after which he baptized three adults, and the pastor then received six new members into fellowship.

At the Susan Lake school house in Hayes, Rev. VanAuken preached Saturday afternoon and conducted a business meeting for the election of officers, and this church starts out with bright prospects for the coming year.

The prayer meetings in Charlevoix are very good. Sabbath school is increasing in numbers and interest, and the congregations at preaching service were never better. One week ago last Sunday evening, three were baptized and seven received into the church.

The announcements for the coming week are: Temperance lecture in M. E. church at Ironton on Friday evening by Rev. VanAuken. Mr. Strang was announced for this lecture, but found it impossible to fulfill his engagement.

Usual morning service and Sunday school in Charlevoix on the Sabbath. At the evening service the fourth lecture to the young people will be delivered by the pastor,—this one with special reference to the young ladies.

Card of Thanks.

On the part of the Congregational Society, we desire to extend thanks to Dr. and Mrs. Carlstein, for their generous hospitality in throwing open their home, and sparing no pains to make it pleasant for all; to the band boys, for their serenade; and to all, through whose gifts and patronage our "old tyme" social was made a grand a success.

MARRIED.

COSS—SINE—On March 17th, 1886, by Rev. G. W Clowe, of Norwood, Mr. Joseph J Coss and Miss Minnie Sine, both of Charlevoix.

LOVE'S MINISTRY.

BY WM. HAUGHTON.

I care not that upon thy brow
The light of beauty glows,
I only feel the comfort now
Thy tender love bestows—
A love like tidne though passionless
Hath more than passion's power;
Its sheltering holy tenderness
Can measure this sad hour.

The pressure of thy gentle hand,
Thy silent sympathy,
The troubled heart can understand
Though voiceless it may be.
I thought, of all things fair on earth
The fairest, best, wer't thou—
But never, never knew thy worth
Till I have proved thee now.

O love, that soothes the sufferer's bed;
That seeks the lone and lost;
That lifts the lamp when hope hath fled,
And shields the tempest-tost,
'Tis thine to soothe life's sad unrest,
To heal the broken heart;
We know thee and we prize thee best
When "comforter" thou art.

I deemed thee made for summer's bloom—
A thing of joy and mirth,
But found thee godlike, midst the gloom,
An angel by the hearth.
The sorrow must be sore indeed,
The cross must heavy be,
And sad the heart and deep the need
That cannot lean on thee.

ELMER HAZEN'S ENEMY.

BY C. LEON MEREDITH.

Well back in the forest of Minnesota, twenty-four years ago, there stood a lone cabin occupied by three individuals.

Why these three chose to dwell in such complete seclusion no one could tell.

Not infrequently did hunters call at the isolated habitation, and on certain occasions had partaken of food at the woodman's table.

The cabin had stood there and been occupied for more than two years, and a knoll of several acres, destitute of timber, furnished at once garden and field, where vegetables and grain grew luxuriantly.

Elmer Hazen was the name of the cabin's owner, and his family companions were his wife and a little girl of five years.

At the time we visit this secluded spot, the Sioux Indians were making their bloody raids upon the settlers of that region of Minnesota.

Consternation and ruin had been spread broadcast wherever the banded warriors had seen fit to go with firebrand and rifle.

The news of the terrible slaughter of the whites had reached the cabin of the recluse, and no little concern was felt by the family, for the red men knew very well of the hidden-home in the forest wilds.

One evening, as darkness settled over the lonely abode, Elmer Hazen and his wife showed in their features uncommon concern.

Fresh news had come to them of the savages' devastating waste. Both felt a heavy weight about the heart, and their ears were constantly on the alert for any uncommon sound.

The windows and single door of the cabin were securely fastened as soon as it had become entirely dark, and the couple sat down at the hearthstone, where smoldered a neglected fire, and mused for a time in silence.

There was but a single apartment in the cabin, and but few articles of furniture.

A curly maple-stocked rifle hung upon pins driven into the logs, and nicely dressed furs hanging about the room told that the man who had dared inhabit that region alone was no inferior hunter.

The wife at length broke the silence:

"To-night, Elmer, I almost regret our leaving a civilized home to come into this life of deprivation and danger."

"Deprivations are not pleasant, to be sure," the woodman returned, "but as to danger, we are safer here than there."

"You think so?"

"Yes. The lives of ourselves or little Edie are no more sacred to that Spaniard, Morales, than to the Sioux. The hunting down of the red men is only for a season, and they will become friends, but the Spaniard's search will be perpetual and murderous.

"Would not the arm of the law be something of a shield there? It certainly cannot be exercised here."

"The law is of no value to a dead man, Eliza; Morales sought my life and drove me hither. He made a vow, and one he intended to keep. His bond to keep the peace was no protection to me or hindrance to him. He is a desperate man, more venomous than the serpent, more subtle than the adder, and more artful than the savage."

"But the reign of terror in Minnesota is terrible, Elmer," the wife said, a shadow of pain crossing her features, as she drew little Edie closer to her heart.

"I can fight a Sioux in ambush or hand to hand, but I cannot contend against a villain who stabs in the dark or administers poison. I feel safer here than in the old home."

The good wife felt really as did her husband, so she dropped the argument, and both again watched the glow of the dying embers in silence.

Three years before Elmer Hazen had been a resident of New Orleans and in easy circumstances.

One evening he found an old man in the clutches of a villain, and he boldly interfered and warned the old man of his danger.

The name of the blackleg was Morales, and he became enraged, and muttered curses from between his gritting teeth. Hazen paid no other attention to this at the time.

The aged gentleman, who had taken the name and number of his protector, called upon Elmer Hazen the next day to express his thanks more fully than he had done under the excitement of the evening before.

At this interview some facts were revealed that put more importance upon the matter than Mr. Hazen had at first thought of.

On the day that the sharper was found with the veteran, the latter had arrived by boat from San Francisco, where he had been a lucky speculator, and amassed a small fortune, which he carried in currency upon his person.

Morales had met him upon the boat, and, in a friendly and most affable manner, volunteered to aid the new-comer, as he was employed by the city, he said, to protect travelers of wealth who did not know the wicked ways of the place.

"It is not safe for you to carry so much money upon your person," Mr. Hazen had said, after hearing the veteran's story. "That scoundrel is well known, and, by some device, will get possession of it. He is not too good to take life."

"No danger," was the confident reply; "I have placed the money in a bank, and have taken a certificate of deposit."

The certificate was shown, made payable to the order of Anson Gale.

Mr. Hazen was gratified at this, as the money was beyond the reach of Morales. He expressed his pleasure, and the old man departed.

The next day Mr. Gale called again, looking pale and agitated.

"I am sick," he said, feebly, "and I fear my days are numbered. A strange feeling has taken possession of my heart, and I know the grim monster is at work there."

An hour later a physician called, left a sedative, and said the patient would be better in the morning.

Elmer Hazen remained with the sick man until a late hour.

"I have not a blood relative in all the wide world that I know of," the old man said, "and you are the Good Samaritan, the only friend I have in New Orleans. Should I die I must leave what I have to you."

"You must not think of dying," the benefactor returned; "long years may be before you. I hope so, and the doctor says you will be better in the morning."

"He don't know as well as I," the sick man said, feebly. "Bring me a pen and ink, then go to your rest."

The next morning Anson Gale was found dead in his bed, but the large pocketbook that had held his papers was gone.

Believing that Morales had poisoned the old man the day before and robbed him at night, Hazen had the villain arrested, but through the lack of evidence he was acquitted.

Twice Elmer Hazen came near losing his life at the hand of a masked assassin, and once his whole family came near dying through poison that had been mysteriously introduced into their food.

Through the earnest solicitations of his wife and friends, Mr. Hazen converted his property into money and went to Chicago, but scarcely had he reached that city when a detective informed him that Morales had followed.

The next move was to a town on the Upper Mississippi.

A few days after reaching that place the burning eyes of the Spaniard were believed to have been seen peering through a window upon Hazen.

Procuring a teamster, he bought a few articles for pioneer housekeeping, and was driven away across the country, far to the west, where lies the broad, wooded belt.

These facts, briefly told, were the thoughts of the exile family as they sat in the lone cabin the night I have mentioned.

The hands upon the little brass clock over the fireplace moved on and on until they indicated the hour of midnight.

Still the couple did not retire. Little Edie lay upon her rude cot all unmindful of danger, but father and mother were in no mood for sleep.

The silence had been long at the fireside when it was suddenly broken.

Both man and wife started to their feet at the same instant, and stood gazing into each other's faces with apprehensive stare.

A heavy footfall had been heard from without. The tread came nearer and nearer, and finally ceased at the doorstone. A loud, quick rap on the thick planks followed.

"Who can it be?" the wife whispered.

"Heaven only knows! It may be the Spaniard; an Indian would not come in that way."

The rap was repeated, but louder than before.

"Who's there?" the woodman demanded.

"A friend from up the Yellow Medicine," was the reply.

"What you here for?"

"I have come to aid you; let me in."

"I guess not. We are not sure that you are not a white renegade with a pack of human bloodhounds at your heels."

"Friend or foe, it will make it no worse for you to open the door."

"Suppose I refuse?"

"Then I shall have to talk to you from the outside. I have come half a score of miles to save you and your family, and shall not leave until you believe me a friend and act accordingly."

"I think the man is honest, Eliza; it certainly ain't the Spaniard's voice," said the cabin owner, turning to his wife. "I've a mind to open the door, anyhow."

"It may be best," the wife returned, at the same time taking down the rifle that hung upon the wall.

The recluse did not propose to allow any advantage on the part of the visitor, so seizing an ax he placed the blade between the planks of the floor, and lifted one of the solid puncheons at the threshold end, and placed a stool beneath it, thus forming a brace so that the door could be opened only far enough to admit the body of a single person at one time.

The bar was then removed, and the wooden latch lifted.

"Come in!" rang out in a clear tone.

The door opened, and the face of a white man appeared.

It was an honest face, and the first glance at the kind blue eyes convinced the settlers that they had no cause for fear.

"Shut the door; there are none to follow," the new-comer said, in an assuring way; "but I have no time to spare. My name is Alfred Waters, and I am connected with the Indian agency. To-day intelligence came to me that a party of five Sioux were coming down the river so as to reach your cabin about the hour of dawn, for the purpose of murder and plunder. There being no one to send, I came myself."

"Thanks, friend Waters," Hazen said, extending his hand; "but I don't see how I can better fortify my cabin. I arranged for what might come as soon as I heard of the outbreak. What would you advise in the case?"

"That you make preparations to leave the cabin as soon as convenient; at least, before the hour of daylight."

"But we will be trailed if we leave, and doubtless overtaken at a spot where we cannot defend ourselves as here."

"You have not heard all of my plans yet. On Quick Water Bottom there are half a dozen trappers located. I will go for them and return at once."

"But it is a good five miles to that place."

"Yes; ten miles there and back, every rod of it; but it can be traversed in four hours."

"Four hours from now will be the time of dawn."

"I will try and be here then."

"But if you fail?"

"Then we will meet you. When you are ready to leave follow down the left bank of the Yellow Medicine; but do not attempt to get far away from the cabin, for it is here we must meet the Sioux."

"We will follow your directions."

"And I will away."

The Indian agent moved quickly to the door, then turned back again.

"I see a tin dinner-horn there upon the shelf; allow me to take that, and I will signal you by one sharp blonst, occasinally."

The man and wife gave their approval, and taking the horn Alfred Waters hastened out into the darkness, and away.

"Our forebodings were not groundless, it appears," the cabin owner said to his wife as he moved about to prepare for leaving the habitation.

Not long did it require for preparation, and then the couple seated themselves again to watch and wait.

Three hours were away, and then little Edie was awakened and the family left the house.

Elmer Hazen set the plank so it would slip down and make an inside brace to the door.

This was to make the marauders believe that the family was within, all unconscious of danger, and in gaining an entrance a delay would be made which might prove of advantage.

To the east of the forest cabin there was an opening, while on the west there was a belt of rugged woodland, and to this they bent their footsteps.

Scarcely had they gained the outskirts of the forest when they were startled by a grating sound.

"It is a canoe rubbing upon the gravel of the creek bottom," Hazen said, as he drew his wife and child into a clump of bushes.

Presently five human forms were seen by the dim starlight moving toward the little log habitation.

They were Sioux, in war-paint and feathers.

"The trappers are not here, Elmer; what is to be done?" Mrs. Hazen whispered.

"Look out for our own safety, I suppose; but I don't like to go and leave all we have in the hands of those red-skinned wretches. I believe that——"

"There's the horn," the wife interrupted.

"I believe I heard it, too, Eliza."

"The sound came from a long way off."

"Yes; fully a mile distant."

"Can they reach us in time to save the cabin?"

"Fifteen minutes will bring the trappers to us, and then it will be nearly daylight. See how it is beaming up in the east now."

The single blast of the horn came to them again, after a little time, and it sounded nearer than before.

Ten minutes of suspense, and then the settlers were awakened to the fact that the Sioux had begun work in good earnest.

A glow of light came from the cabin window, and then a cloud of smoke arose.

"The house is on fire, Eliza!" the woodman exclaimed, leaping from his hiding-place and starting toward the cabin.

A better thought took possession of him very soon, and he turned back.

"I will not leave you here alone; prowlers may be about," he said, seating himself upon a great moss-covered rock.

The wife and child stood beside the bowlder and gazed upon the scene of destruction.

The volume of smoke increased, and then small, forked tongues of flame flashed out.

Just then a volley of firearms broke the quiet of the morning hour, and a yell of anguish followed.

The trappers were armed with rifles and revolvers, and the battle was sharp and decisive.

The savages in their gloatings over the work of the fire-fiend were taken by surprise, and four of them went down at the first onset, the fifth plunged madly, wildly away.

Elmer Hazen was about to go to the aid of the trappers when he saw the figure of a Sioux come bounding directly toward him.

The settler brought his rifle quickly up and fired.

The warrior did not slacken his speed at all, but leaped ahead with a wild, whirling motion.

As he drew near it seemed as if his eyes would bulge from their sockets.

His arms were held aloft and his lips were separated by nervous contraction so as to show a set of pearly white teeth.

It was a grim, horrifying object that came dashing down to them, and somehow those who watched were wonder-struck instead of being intimidated.

A few leaps more and the savage fell at the feet of the trio.

Before the woodman had time to fully comprehend the situation the savage turned his face upward and gurgled out the name:

"Elmer Hazen!"

Husband and wife started.

They would have spoken, but a moan came from the wounded brave and attracted their attention. He was struggling for breath.

With a painful effort he drew from the pocket of his hunting frock a gold snuff-box, and holding it up until he felt it taken from his hand, fell back and lay quiet.

"Open the box, Elmer," the wife exclaimed; "it may contain the Indians' panacea for wounds."

"He is past the aid of earthly remedies," was the reply of Mr. Hazen, taking the red man's hand; "the fellow is dead."

The box, however, was opened, but it contained only a piece of paper, yet that little object made the eyes of the wondering couple open widely.

The slip was a bank certificate made payable to Elmer Hazen and indorsed by Anson Gale. The golden box also contained the name of the old Californian engraved upon the inner side of the cover.

The forester stooped over the prostrate form, and in a few seconds had bared a white breast.

"Morales, the Spaniard!"

The name was pronounced by the woodman in a hoarse whisper.

"He has followed us to his own destruction."

"Then it was really he who killed Anson Gale, but why did he not get the money?" the wife asked.

"He could not. He doubtless intended to make the old Californian indorse the paper to him; but reached the room too late, and now I see his plan in the last move. He has followed me to get the indorsement of myself. With the Indians at his back, he evidently intended to make me assign it to him as a condition for saving my life; but had he succeeded in that, he would have murdered us all to cover up the crime; see, the trappers are coming this way."

The story was soon told to the interested hunters, who surrounded the fallen Spaniard.

Before the sun was far up the bodies of the five who had come to destroy were buried, and the defenders of the exiled family rewarded.

No delay was made in ending the hermitage.

The cloud upon the life of Elmer Hazen was lifted, and he went back to civilization to enjoy the new fortune that had come to him in such a singular manner.—Chicago Ledger.

EMERSON'S PURSE.

The Annoyance That the Philosopher Underwent While in a Vermont Village.

A young man in New York has among his most cherished possessions a letter written nearly twenty-one years ago by Ralph Waldo Emerson. It was sent by the philosoper to the young man's mother under rather singular circumstances.

"I never saw Emerson but once," said the possessor of the letter the other day, "and then I was too young to remember much about him. When I was a child he came to our town in Vermont to lecture, and was invited by my mother to spend the night at our house. An odd thing happened after the lecture. As he was leaving the lecture-hall his pocket-book was either lost or stolen. It contained the amount paid him for the lecture, and some money and other things besides. He came to our house, but said nothing about his loss that night. I remember that I was in the dining-room the next morning when he came in. The impression left on my mind is that he was a wonderfully tall man with a kindly face. He came into the dining-room and took me up in his arms, and, lifting me up as far above his head as he could, he said:

"'Where did you get those big blue eyes?'

"I don't remember whether he ate pie for breakfast. If he did, it was provided especially for him, as that article was never served at that meal in our house. After breakfast Mr. Emerson asked to see my mother alone. Then he explained the misfortune that had befallen him—that he had lost all his money—and apologized for being under the necessity of asking for a small loan. This, of course, was promptly made. The next day or the day after he returned the money loaned. Here is the letter he wrote," and the speaker handed out the following letter, written by Mr. Emerson's own hand:

"DELAVAN HOUSE, ALBANY, Jan. 13, 1854.—DEAR MRS.——: I inclose $10, the sum you so kindly lent me, with my best thanks; but am still vexed with clouding your pure hospitality by sympathy for such an absurd mishap.

"In the bare chance that the wallet should be picked up by an honest finder, I add, what I believe I told you, that there was no name; it was a common purplish one, containing the uncounted bills which Mr. —— had just given me, and perhaps $25 or $28 more, two or three bills being of the Concord (Mass.) Bank, some postage stamps, and a blank check on the Atlantic Bank, Boston. I do not think of any other means of identification, and I am quite sure none will be wanted. But I am sorry I did not say to you that I had rather lose it than have it advertised in any manner.

"I recollect your house and its inhabitants with great pleasure, and I hope I may see you again. If you are in my neighborhood it will give me great pleasure to show you my household. One of these days Willie (one of the lady's sons) will come to see me on his way to Cambridge, I hope, if Cambridge mends its faults and desires the best boys. But the boys of this day, as I told you, seem to me to have a proud future before them. Yours with kindest regard,

R. W. EMERSON.

"Mrs. ——."

The letter was written on heavy linen paper, in an irregular but easily legible hand.

"I never saw Mr. Emerson afterward," the young man continued. "Whether Cambridge mended its ways or not, I did not go there, nor did my brother. Perhaps, though, we were not the 'best boys.' I often thought I should like to go to Concord, recall this occurrence to Mr. Emerson's mind, and introduce myself as the boy whom he lifted in his arms, and whose blue eyes he spoke of. But I never did. And I never heard the lost wallet was recovered."—Boston Globe.

Herr Hager's Game.

Dynamiting is a game that can be worked both ways. Herr Hager, the wealthy German banker, is the most punctual man in the world, and always carries a couple of chronometers about with him. Thanks to this habit, he is a frequent victim to pickpockets, as not a week passes without his losing one of his watches. At first he had recourse to all kinds of safety chains; then one fine morning he took no precaution whatever, and quietly allowed himself to be robbed. At night, on returning from business, he took up the evening paper, when he uttered an exclamation of delight, and at once started off for the police station. This is what he had read: "To-day at two o'clock p. m., a violent explosion took place in a house in B—— street, occupied by Mr. S——, a wealthy townsman. The hands of the victim are shattered, and the left eye gone." The crafty banker had filled the watch case with dynamite, which exploded during the operation of winding. Since that time no more watches have been stolen from Herr Hager.

CROCODILES are represented by alligators. Their tails are used for swimming, and their legs aid in lifting them out of the mud. They build nests of leaves and vegetation before it has begun to decay; a layer of eggs, a layer of vegetation. The heat of the vegetation hatches the eggs. The crocodile differs from the alligator by having no long separation between the nostrils. It has a valve in the throat for keeping out water. The crocodiles of the Nile and of the Ganges are most dangerous. Alligators are called cold-blooded because of their inability to develop heat in their bodies.

And shaving a slice from his chair,

For a moment the Major had nothing to say,
But finally rose to his feet:
"He died at two hundred and four Broadway"—
Then the Judge moseyed up and stood treat.

A Wise Father.

The Crown Prince of Prussia was always a very sensible man in the management of his household, and he is ably seconded by his wife. On one occasion the governor of his children came to him and said:

"Your Highness, I must complain of the little Prince; he refuses to have his face washed in the morning."

"Does he?" answered the Crown Prince. "We'll remedy that. After this let him go unwashed."

"It shall be done," said the governor.

Now the sentries have to salute every member of the royal family—children and all—whenever they pass. The day after, the little four-year-old prince went out for a walk with his governor. As they passed a sentry-box where a grim soldier stood rigid without presenting arms, the little prince—accustomed to universal deference—looked displeased, but said nothing. Presently another sentry was passed. Neither did this one give a sign of recognition. The little prince angrily spoke of it to his old governor, and they passed on. And when the walk was finished, and they had met many soldiers, who none of them saluted the prince, the little fellow dashed in to his father, exclaiming:

"Papa—papa—you must whip every man in your guards! They refuse to salute when I pass!"

"Ah! my son," said the Crown Prince, "they do rightly, for clean soldiers never salute a dirty little prince." After that the boy took a shower bath every morning.—Ingleside.

BETTER THAN A GOLDEN LEG.

"Miss Kilmansegg and her golden leg," will never be forgotten so long as the genius of Thomas Hood, with all his gentle humor and tender pathos is remembered, but it is doubtful if any one will ever envy the heroine of that poem her unique limb, which brought with it so many misfortunes. In this prosaic age a good strong leg of flesh, bone, and muscle is much to be preferred, whether its possessor be a professional pedestrian or a solid unassuming citizen.

It is to this last class that Mr. M. P. Schrock, of 672 West Lake street, Chicago, belongs. Mr. Shrock is a well-known dry goods merchant, and counts himself fortunate in having a pair of good strong legs. For one of his legs he has a peculiar regard, as he came near losing it through rheumatism. Athlophoros saved it for him, however, and for that invaluable remedy he now cherishes an almost equal regard. The story is well told by Mr. Schrock in his own words:

"During the Spring of 1884 I was stricken with rheumatism in its very worst form, and was confined to my bed entirely helpless for about four weeks. My leg pained me so intensely that I could not let it rest on the bed without some support. So I had a pulley attached from the ceiling and to that a sling was fastened. I could rest my leg in this, changing the height, and in that manner I managed to obtain some little relief. During the four weeks I lay in bed I tried many remedies without avail. Finally I made a change and employed physicians. They tried their very best to give me relief, but could not. Instead of getting better, I was growing worse.

"My doctor finally decided that it would be necessary to make an incision in my thigh, and if there was not a marked improvement in my condition from that operation, that amputation of my leg would be required. This, as you may well imagine, discouraged and disheartened me beyond measure. About this time my wife noticed in a Richmond, Ind., paper, for which we subscribe, the name of a personal friend who had been cured by the use of Althophoros. She called my attention to it, and I said at once. 'Get a bottle and try it.' She bought a bottle, the doctor was discharged and we began using it immediately. I experienced great relief in the first few doses. In two days after I began with the medicine I was in my store attending to my business, and I have not been troubled with rheumatism since."

"How much Athlophoros did you use for this remarkable cure, Mr. Schrock?"

"About one and a third bottles. The remaining two-thirds of a bottle is still unused at my house."

"Don't you think it was a very quick cure for so bad a case?" was asked.

"I certainly think it not only quick," answered Mr. Schrock, "but wonderful, and I feel that I cannot say too much for Athlophoros. I never let an opportunity pass when I can recommend it, as it surely did everything for me."

Mr. Schrock is now in the best of health, and considers himself a living example of what Athlophoros can do for those whom rheumatism has brought even to death's door.

She Knew Why She Wept.

Mrs. Beltwhistle's husband had died, and she was crying over the coffin in a most fervid and impassioned manner.

"Poor dear! poor dear!" said the pastor, sympathetically, patting her on the back. "We all have our crosses to bear, sister, and the burden is lightened by the helping hand of our loving Father."

"Boo hoo! boo hoo!" moaned the widow.

"Don't take on so, sister. Be calm."

"Boo hoo! boo hoo!" continued the grief-stricken relict.

"Don't cry; that won't bring him back."

"Boo hoo. I know it. I—I wouldn't be crying if I thought—if I thought it would. I—I—I've got to do something—boo hoo—to keep up appearances. Go away. Let me weep. Boo hoo! boo hoo!"

The pastor, sadly, didn't have any further condolence to offer.—Merchant Traveler.

A Brutal Conductor.

"I can't let this girl travel over this road on that half-fare ticket," said the new conductor to the Widow Flapjack.

"Why not? What is the matter with my little girl?"

"She is no child. She is more than half grown."

"Well, if that don't beat everything then I'll give it up. Here poor little Mamie has been traveling over this road on a child's ticket for the last ten years, and now all at once you say she is no child. That's a new way to worry the traveling public."

She paid full fare, and then the diminutive girl in the corner pulled herself out, so to speak, like a marine telescope.—Texas Siftings.

WE see occasionally reports of tapeworms in nursing infants. These cases are doubtless due to a common notion that it is a good thing for a baby to give it a piece of raw meat to suck and chew on. Not Symptoms, but the Disease.

It would seem to be a truth appreciated by all, and especially by professors of the healing art, that to remove the disease, not to alleviate its symptoms, should be the chief aim of medication. Yet in how many instances do we see this truth admitted in theory, ignored in practice. The reason that Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is successful in so many cases, with which remedies previously tried were inadequate to cope, is attributable to the fact that it is a medicine which reaches and removes the causes of the various maladies to which it is adapted. Indigestion, fever and ague, liver complaint, gout, rheumatism, disorder of the bowels, urinary affections and other maladies are not palliated merely, but rooted out by it. It goes to the fountain head. It is really, not nominally, a radical remedy, and it endows the system with an amount of vigor which is its best protection against disease.

A Beautiful and Curious Old Mexican City.

A correspondent of the San Francisco Chronicle, who has visited Jalapa, writes:

"Few cities in the world are so favorably situated as Jalapa, preserving eternal summer, with little change of atmosphere, from year to year, yet sufficiently elevated to escape the baneful vapors of the tierria caliente (hot lands) which it overlooks. It is par excellence a paradise for the artist, the naturalist, the hunter, and the health-seeker, and is the loveliest of resorts, both for winter and summer. People from the far north come down here to escape the winter's cold; the citizens of Vera Cruz, Cordova, and other fever-haunted districts come up in summer time to enjoy the refreshing breezes and secure immunity from disease, and invalids from all parts of the hemisphere, especially consumptive, are sent here to recuperate at any time of year. In short, the ancient mountain town, where—alike at all seasons—brilliant birds sing litanies and flowers wave perfumed censers, is the quaintest and loveliest spot on the continent. The vanilla bean, with its valuable extract and volatile oil, is indigenous to the locality and thrives in especial luxuriance in these evergreen forests that hide the ancient cities of the Totonaca, who supplied the article to the Aztec kings 400 years ago.

Around the County.

"Taffy and Hypocrisy."

East Jordan, March 15, 1886.

EDITOR JOURNAL,—The great man of the Sentinel has been promising for a long time that he was soon going to make developments,—he was abroad and was going to hatch something big; young peacocks, perhaps. Last week he gave these great developments to the world, partly under the head-line "Taffy and Hypocrisy," but he did not develop, and does not argue,—he cannot come down to such small business. He is still aloft and gives us Brutus and Cæsar, and Othello and Iago. He probably intends to vote them. Read what he says:

"If East Jordan stood by us in our county seat fights it was the old story of Brutus and Cæsar—not that they loved Cæsar less, but that they loved Rome more. Not that they hated Charlevoix less, but that they hated Boyne City more!

In every way possible East Jordan has been arrayed against Charlevoix. Our chagrin has been their glory—our gain has been their disappointment; and in matters which concerned our good far more than that of the county seat, East Jordan has been, is now, and ever will be the "Iago" to our "Othello," and Charlevoix people know it too well to take in any of the taffy that is offered."

Now don't you see the force and strength of the great man's argument, and how directly it is to the point? Just put his style in practice. You meet a man on the street and say "how about the county seat; why should it be moved to Boyne City?" and he at once throws himself into a "Smithy" attitude and with much solemnity, says "Not that I love Cæsar less but Rory O'Moore." Such an argument would be overwhelming, and you would go immediately and vote for the removal. But the great man is fairly awake and in dead earnest, so he gives us much more of the same sort. Just read the following which he considers so good that he has it stand alone:

"Some say East Jordan twice stood by Charlevoix, therefore the service should be returned. It is also said that satan was once in paradise, but it is pretty generally conceded that satan is not now an angel."

Don't you see the point,—and the exact application and bearing? Oh, but he is an able man. Yet it is in still another paragraph that he reaches the climax, when he says "It is not a pent up Utica." Just think of that, now. What a burst of combined eloquence and philosophy!

In view of the fact that such deep reasoning must be very exhausting, even to such an intellectual giant as he of the Sentinel, would it be anything more than justice for those friends who have him on their hands, to chip in immediately after election and start him up in a taffy shop, so that he may rest his tired brain? A most befitting sign-board might be prepared by painting the words "Taffy and Hypocrisy" in a circle and placing the great man's photograph in the center. B.

What Next.

Ironton, March 15, 1886.

EDITOR JOURNAL,—When the Boyne City people came out and guaranteed us offices, court room, and jail, free of expense to the county. I thought I would vote for the removal of the county seat to Boyne City, and thus help to end the struggle; and when they came down here and offered to build us a bridge and that offer was backed up by a pledge signed by nine supervisors that they would see that it was built at the expense of county, provided Eveline rolled up a good majority for Boyne City in the coming election, that settled the question with me; and I went to work with a will electioneering my neighbors in favor of Boyne City, and most all of them concluded that it was just what we wanted, and we would go in "body and breeches" for removal. But the dose they gave us at Advance (a railroad), backed up by such a looking surveying party and outfit on the following Tuesday, was a bigger dose than we could swallow, and we have all of us, I think to a man, lost entire confidence in the integrity of the Boyne City people, and especially their pledge of county building, and have concluded that it is best to go slow, and vote for leaving the county seat where it is, for a time at least, and thereby save any further expense and taxation. "A bird in the hand is worth two in the bush." East Jordan has come to the front and done all that she has agreed to do, but we have no guarantee that Boyne City will do the same. On the contrary we have very serious doubts on the subject, as she is too much on the sell.

FARMER J.

Marion.

Marion, March 16, 1886.

EDITOR JOURNAL,—I wish you would, through the columns of your paper, enlighten us "mossbacks," as we are called, a little more on this county seat question. In our neighborhood we hardly know how to vote, as the Boyne City people are starting so many schemes to win votes for removal, and every scheme they start proves to be a sham and explodes. I used to take the Sentinel, but since it has turned over and is talking just the opposite from what it did a year ago (evidently under pay of Boyne City), I have got disgusted with it and dropped it, as I know a good many others are going to do, and take your paper. Is there any truth to this railroad yarn? And if so, might there not be some better point on the proposed route for county seat, if we vote to leave it where it is at present? Can the supervisors build a bridge across the Arm without a vote of the people? Are those parties who guarantee county buildings, free of cost to the county, all responsible parties? And would not such a guarantee, supposing the parties are good, be outlawed in less than ten years?

AN INQUIRING MOSS BACK.

Ironton.

The social and oyster supper at Mr. T. C. Bird's residence, Tuesday evening, under the management of the M. E. Church, was a success.

The Ironton teamsters could successfully compete with a fire company, in their expeditious manner of harnessing. From the time the signal was given, "Turn out," until the first team was away for a load of wood just 45 seconds elapsed, and in one minute and a quarter the long procession was filing away to the woods.

Indisposition seems to be contageous. Two weeks ago we expected a lecture on temperance by Rev. VanAuken. He, being sick, sent Mr. Strang to fill his appointment, who left an appointment for Friday night of this week; and now report comes that he will be obliged to have Rev. VanAuken fill his appointment.

A doctor, with whom it was a settled principle never to speak to a liquor seller, was sent for to visit a saloon-keeper's wife. He paid no attention to the summons, although it was three times repeated. The man then sent word that his wife was as much opposed to his business as the doctor himself, and begged him to come; assuring him he would keep out of sight. The doctor went with alacrity, and the patient was "on her feet again" after two or three visits. The liquor seller waited long for his bill, but none came. Then he sent for it repeatedly, but with no result. One day as the doctor was about to step into his "sulky" a young man thrust a ten dollar bill into his hand, explaining that the liquor seller wished him to keep it all. "Such a look of horror came into the doctor's face," said the young man, "that to this day I feel as if somebody was murdered right there and I helped to do it."

"I can't touch it—there is blood on it!" cried the doctor, as he threw it away. And yet he was in particular need of money just then for temperance work.

The young man said that the doctor must have been a mile away before he recovered himself enough to search for the bill, and when he found it he took it carefully between his thumb and finger, unable to resist the impression that it was dripping with human blood. In a little over a year the liquor seller closed his store forever. Years afterwards as they lay under the stars one night, the liquor dealer told the doctor that from the day he sent that bill he never took in a piece of money large or small that the words "There's BLOOD on it," did not ring in his ears.

STOCK GROWERS

All agree that for general use in their business no powder is better calculated to give satisfactory results than those prepared by E. M. Parmelee, because they really contain the valuable remedies claimed, and do not fail to act quickly and effectively in coughs, colds, epizootic, bad blood, stoppage of water, poor digestion etc. in horses. For cattle, hogs, sheep, and poultry, they are invaluable. Full pounds only 35 cents.

Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

Cure for Piles.

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he has some affection of the kidneys or neighboring organs. At times, symptoms of indigestion are present, flatulency, uneasiness of the stomach, etc. A moisture, like perspiration, producing a very disagreeable itching, after getting warm, is a common attendant. Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Bosanko's Pile Remedy, which acts directly upon the parts affected, absorbing the Tumors, allaying the intense itching, and effecting a permanent cure. Price 50 cents. Sold by Geo. W. Crouter. 152

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage, made and executed by J. Willo Eaton and Ellen J. Eaton, his wife, of Charlevoix, Michigan, to Mary J. McGlashan, dated February fourth, A. D. 1882, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, for the county of Charlevoix, and State of Michigan, on the fourth day of February, A. D. 1882, in liber "4" of Mortgages, on page 477, on which mortgage there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of Two Thousand Four Hundred and Fifty-eight and 53-100 Dollars, ($2,458.53), principal and interest and no suit or proceedings at law having been instituted to recover the moneys secured by said mortgage or any part thereof: Now, therefore, by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and the statute in such case made and provided. Notice is hereby given that on Thursday the twenty-second day of April, A. D. 1886, at one o'clock in the afternoon, I shall sell at public auction to the highest bidder, at the front door of the Town Hall, in South Arm township, located in the village of South Lake, commonly called East Jordan, in said county of Charlevoix, (that being the place and building in which the Circuit Court for Charlevoix County is holden), the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the amount due on said mortgage, with interest at ten per cent, and all legal costs, including such attorney fee provided for in said mortgage as is allowed by the statute in such case made and provided, to wit: All those certain pieces or parcels of land situate in the township of Charlevoix, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, and described as follows, to wit: Commencing at the quarter post between sections twenty six (26) and thirty-five (35), in township thirty-four (34) north of range eight (8) west; thence due south twelve (12) and 25-100 chains; thence east to the shore of Pine Lake; thence north along the shore of Pine Lake, to the section line between sections twenty-six (26) and thirty-five (35); thence west along said section line to the place of beginning, containing eight and 58-(8 58) acres, more or less. Also the north half of the north east quarter of the north west quarter, all of which is contained in section thirty-five (35) in township thirty-four (34) north of range eight (8) west, containing twenty-eight and ... acres, more or less, together with the hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto belonging or in any wise appertaining.

MORTGAGE SALE.

WHEREAS, default has been made in the payment of the money secured by a mortgage, dated the fourth day of September, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty four, executed by Henning Feizell to the Pine Lake Iron Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, and doing business in the County of Charlevoix, in the State of Michigan, which mortgage was recorded in the office of the register of deeds of the said County of Charlevoix, in Liber 11 of mortgages, at page 11, on the 16th day of April, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-five, at one o'clock in the afternoon, and the same is now owned by the said Pine Lake Iron Company. And whereas the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice is the sum of Forty-Five Dollars and Twenty-two cents, principal and interest, which sum is a part of the purchase price of the premises hereinafter described, and a further sum of fifteen dollars provided by law as an attorney's fee in the foreclosure of said mortgage, which is the whole amount claimed to be due and unpaid on said mortgage, and no suit or proceedings at law or in chancery having been instituted to recover the debt now remaining secured by the said mortgage or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained in the said mortgage has become operative.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises herein described at public auction to the highest bidder, at the front door of the Town Hall, in the township of South Arm, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, which is the place of holding the circuit court for said county, on Friday, the 20 day of April next, at twelve o'clock meridian, which premises are described in the said mortgage as follows, to wit: Lots twenty (20) and twenty-one (21) in block number twelve (12) in the Pine Lake Iron Co.'s plat of Ironton, town of Eveline, county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan.

Dated December 30th, A. D. 1885.

Default having been made in the condition of a certain mortgage, made by Mary Blackburd to John A. Bacot, dated October 2d, A. D. 1884, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, for the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, on the 3d day of October, A. D. 1884, in liber 8 of mortgages, on page 522, which said mortgage was, on the 22d day of December, 1884, assigned by said John A. Bacot to Frederick W. Mayne, said assignment being recorded in the Registers office for Charlevoix county, in liber 10 of mortgages, on page 610, and on the 11th day of December 1885, was assigned by said Frederick W. Mayne to Hugh Miller, said assignment being recorded in the Registers office for Charlevoix county, in liber 13 of mortgages, on page 116, on which mortgage there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of Two hundred dollars, and sixty-five cents, as principal and interest, and no suit or proceedings at law having been instituted to recover the moneys secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof. Now, therefore, by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and the statute in such case made and provided, notice is hereby given that on Saturday, the 24th day of June A. D. 1886, at one o'clock in the afternoon, I shall sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door of the town hall in the village of East Jordan, (that being the place where the Circuit Court for Charlevoix County is holden,) the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the amount due on said mortgage, with ten per cent interest, and all legal costs, together with an attorney's fee of fifteen dollars, covenanted for therein, the premises being described in said mortgage as all that parcel of land, situate in the township of Hayes, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, and known and described as follows: The south west quarter (¼) of the south west quarter (¼) of section thirty-six (36) township thirty four (34) north of range seven (7) west, containing forty acres according to the United States survey.

Dated Charlevoix, Mich., March 15, 1886.

CHANCERY SALE.

In pursuance and by virtue of an order and decree of the circuit court, for the county of Charlevoix, in Chancery, in the state of Michigan, made and dated on the 28th day of May, in the year A. D. 1885, in a certain cause therein pending, wherein John A. Bacot is complainant, and Abraham Shequaw-yaw and Mary Shequaw-yaw, are defendants.

Notice is hereby given that I shall sell at public auction to the highest bidder at the front door of the town hall, in the township of South Arm, in said county and state, which hall is the place for holding the circuit court for said county, on Wednesday the 7th day of April, A. D. 1886, at eleven (11) o'clock in the forenoon, all or so much thereof as may be necessary to raise the amount due, to the said complainant, for principal, interest and costs in this cause, of the following described land to-wit: The south east quarter (¼) of the south west quarter (¼) of section twenty-five (25), in township thirty-four (34) north of range seven (7) west, containing forty acres of land according to the United States survey thereof, being in the township of Hayes, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan.

Dated February 26th, A. D. 1886.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Whereas, default has been made in the payment of the money secured by a mortgage dated the 12th day of November, in the year A. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-one, executed by Mary A. Thomas to John Frenz, which mortgage was recorded in the office of the register of deeds, of the county of Charlevoix, in the state of Michigan, in liber 8 of mortgages at page 491, on the 29th day of November, in the year A. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-one, at two o'clock in the afternoon of said day. And whereas, the said mortgage has been duly assigned by the said John Frenz, to Daniel Head, by instrument of assignment bearing date the 10th day of May, in the year A. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-two, and recorded in the office of the register of deeds of said county of Charlevoix, on the 14th day of July in the year A. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-three, at two o'clock in the afternoon of said day, in liber 9 of mortgages, at page 101, and the same is now owned by the said Daniel Head. And whereas the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice, is the sum of Thirteen Hundred and seventy two dollars and, seventy cents ($1,372.70), principal and interest, and a further sum of thirty dollars ($30), provided by law as an attorney fee in the foreclosure of said mortgage which is the whole amount claimed to be due and unpaid on said mortgage, and no suit or proceeding at law or in equity having been instituted to recover the debt now remaining secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described, at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door of the Town Hall, in the township of South Arm, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, which is the place of holding the circuit court for said county, on Wednesday, the 19th day of May, 1886, at twelve o'clock in the forenoon, which premises are described in the said mortgage as follows, to wit: Lot three (3) and the south one-half (½) of the south-west one-quarter (¼) of section seventeen (17), in township thirty three (33) north, range seven (7) west, in the county of Charlevoix and state of Michigan, and containing in all one hundred and forty-five and twenty-five one-hundredths acres of land, according to the United States survey thereof, excepting, however, the north one-half (½) of the south west one-quarter (¼) of the south west one-quarter (¼) of said section seventeen (17), and also excepting lots number two (2), three (3), four (4), five (5), six (6), seven (7), eight (8), and fifteen (15), in Scheffler's addition to the village of Ironton, according to the recorded plat thereof, which have been released from said mortgage by the assignee thereof.

Dated February 11th, A. D. 1886.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the payment of the money secured by a certain mortgage, dated the thirtieth day of October, 1885, executed by Benjamin Walker and Maria Walker, his wife, of Charlevoix county, Michigan, to Josiah E. Harding, of Allegan county, Michigan, which said mortgage was recorded in the office of the register of deeds of Charlevoix county, in liber 9 of mortgages, on page 163, on the 31st day of October, A. D. 1885, and whereas the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice is the sum of Three hundred and forty-six dollars, and no suit or proceeding having been instituted at law, or in equity, to recover the debt now remaining secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof, and whereas, in and by the conditions of said mortgage it is provided that, should any default be made in the payment of the interest due thereon, or any part thereof, on any day whereon the same is made payable and should the same remain unpaid and in arrears for the space of thirty days, the principal sum together with all arrearages of interest thereon shall at the option of the said mortgagee or his assigns become due and payable immediately thereafter, and whereas, default has been made in the payment of the interest due on the principal sum on the day whereon the same became due and whereas said interest does remained unpaid and in arrears for the space of over thirty days; the said Josiah E. Harding has elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole amount of said mortgage, principal and interest, due and payable, whereby the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative. Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described, at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door of the Town Hall, in the village of East Jordan, in the county of Charlevoix, Michigan, (that being the place where the Circuit Court is holden in said county), on the 27th day of April, 1886, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon of that day, which said premises are described in said mortgage as follows: The west half of the south east quarter of section seventeen, in township thirty three north, of range seven west, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan.

A Trip to the Tropics.

VI.

Before leaving Jamaica let us travel together in the character of leisurely sannterers with Blue Mountain Peak as our objective point. At Port Antonio this does not seem like a difficult undertaking as the mountains seem to hover directly over us and in the distance, which loses from sight the intervening valleys. The path to the summit seems but a holliday excursion up the blue slopes midst the sunshine and shadows, which the clouds floating below the summit are ever varying, giving endless variety and additional enchantment to "the everlasting peaks around which delight to anchor islands of the sky." But as we start on our journey we soon find that like the mirage of the desert the goal ever recedes as we approach, although only fifteen miles away "as the crow flies." Forty miles of coast travel, twenty miles into the interior on horseback, eighteen more over mountain paths on a mule's back, and finally almost two miles of perpendicular climbing must be traversed before our ambition is satisfied and we arrive at the summit. Seated in a phaeton of American manufacture, behind a span of Jamaica thoroughbreds, we set out for Port Morant, forty miles away. Our road extending for the most part along the shore, now driving on the very edge of the sea, and again winding in semi circles high up in the hills—commanding delightful prospects of the surrounding valleys; sometimes our road is built in the mountain sides with the hills above and the ocean far below. These dug-ways would be perilous but for the walls of coral and cement that guard them. The road beds are also of coral formation and as smooth and well cared for as a boulevard. Every hundred rods or thereabouts we cross mountain streams fifteen or twenty feet wide the water as clear as crystal. When these brooks, or rivers as they are called, are in deep ravines, there are good bridges; but where the bed is smooth and there are no bridges, we drive through at full speed, dashing the water over the horses and sprinkling ourselves delightfully. These are the favorite resorts of the dusky washerwomen who in exceedingly contracted garments may be seen washing the clothes by placing them on one stone and beating them with another. The country through which we pass is divided into estates of about one thousand acres each. These estates bear such pleasant names as "Fairy Hill," "Golden Vale," "Castle Villa," "Elmwood," "Fair Prospect," "Mulatto River," "Happy Grove," etc. On every estate is built the mansion or "great house," sugar buildings, coffee barbecues, windmills, small chapels and the twenty or thirty woven bamboo, palm thatched huts of the negroes. Passing through these villages we are greeted with "curtsys" from the "picknys" and from their elders a respectful "Howdy, Massa Buckra," with "I beg yon quattie, sah," usually added; but if we demand an equivalent for our quattie (three cents), they cheerfully climb a tree for a supply of "water cocoanuts" or a dozen sweet oranges; climbing a cocoanut tree, which is usually fifty feet high with no branches save the tuft on the top, is not an easy undertaking and only a negro can do it gracefully. There are over a hundred varieties of palm trees on the island—the cocoanut being the most numerous and the prickly palm the most curious, the trunk being smallest at the base, increasing to twice its size at the center and then tapering to the top. When, in a drive of forty miles, not a blade of vegetation is familiar, it follows that much that is curious and interesting is to be seen. In the lowlands the mangrove or wild fig is numerous. Like the banyan, it sends down shoots from its branches that form other trees until hundreds of acres appear to be the outgrowth of a single tree. One of the most beautiful flowering trees is the "Otaheite apple." More fragrant than any other is the pimento, or allspice, and the frangypany. The latter are very numerous along the coast; the flower resembles the tube rose, and is much used in making perfumery. The familiar oleander or south sea rose is everywhere seen. The cattle pens and highways are hedged with many varieties of cacus blooming with beautiful flowers, while the sharp thorns discount barbed wire. Some of the pasture lands along the way are blue tinged with the flower of a plant, which, we are told, is a very bad weed. On examination we find it is the sensitive plant so treasured in the north. As we pass through the fields its leaves close and it wilts to the ground only to revive when rid of our blighting presence. Many trees are of this nature, one (a tree that grows to an enormous size and has a beautiful fern-like foliage) folds its leaves every evening at four o'clock, opening at sun-rise. The largest tree on the island is the cottonwood. They grow to an immense size, and are chiefly used in making "dugouts," or canoes. There are many trees of which the wood is very valuable, as mahogany, ebony, lignum vitæ, rosewood, sandal wood, etc. From the trunks of many trees grow the most beautiful orchids, while such favorite houseplants as the "Wandering Jew" twine about them in wild confusion. Crossing Muirton river, and zigzaging up "Quan" hill from which hight can be seen one of the most beautiful views on the island; on our left and far below us is Holland Bay, and the lighthouse at the eastern extremity of the island; on our right are high mountains, while directly in front, on the plains beneath us, are thousands of acres of perfectly level land waving with sugar cane. Here are many estates, as "Amity Hall," "Duckenfield," and "Golden Grove," in full operation and apparently prosperous. The mills grinding, the darkies cutting and drawing cane, or with three, four, and even five yokes of oxen drawing sugar to Port Morant, from where it is shipped to England. Arriving at Port Morant, which is the terminus of our forty-mile drive, we accept the hospitality of "Bowden Great House," which, as a sample of the old residences, deserves mention. Built on an eminence two hundred feet above and overlooking the sea and harbor, and so substantially built, that, although 300 years old, it is in good repair; one story high, standing on a basement built like a fortress, with loop holes all around through which to fire at an approaching foe. We first come upon the broad, pleasant veranda with its hammocks and adjustable chairs; passing through double doors into the hall or promenade, 110 feet long with floor of stone flagging; entering again through folding doors into the spacious rooms with floors polished like glass; mahogany finishings and furniture; the walls and partitions two feet thick and of stone. In these comfortable quarters, which are occupied by a half dozen New England boys engaged in shipping fruit from this port, we refresh ourselves and prepare for a fresh start toward the Peak.

The annual report of the bureau of labor and industrial statistics is now on our desk. Part I gives the report of the secretary of the national convention of chiefs of labor held at Boston in July, 1885. Part II relates to the various strikes that have occurred in the state during the past year. Mr. Pond, the commissioner of the bureau concludes that the great remedy for differences between employer and employee is not strikes but arbitration. Part III is a very instructive chapter containing the testimony of wage-workes of vital importance to them. Part IV contains a comparison of wages paid in Michigan, for various kinds of labor with those paid in various foreign countries. We are sure this report will do good, in bringing this fund of information before the people.

Five employes of the Union Pacific road at Omaha rezed a Missouri Pacific freight train about to start, put the engine back in the roundhouse, and blockaded the track with box-cars.

The Knights of Labor at Akron, Ohio, persuaded the boarding-houses in that city to stop entertaining employes of S. F. Sieberling's factories. Ferdinand Schumacher, the oatmeal king, thereupon threw open his two hotels to the homeless workers.

A St. Louis dispatch says: "Not a car of freight has crossed the St. Louis bridge for a week, and there is every prospect that the strike on the Gould system of railroads in the Southwest will last for some time longer, although the Texas and Pacific is reported to be open from end to end. A switchman who went to work for the Missouri Pacific was assaulted by a number of the strikers and quite seriously injured. A suburban train was side-tracked outside the city limits, and the passengers were obliged to walk four miles before they reached the street-cars. The yardmen and switchmen employed in East St. Louis, to the number of about 1,200, representing more than half a dozen railroads, have demanded an advance of 50 cents a day."

A bill has been introduced in the Maryland Legislature which, if passed, will prohibit the sale of Western dressed meat in Baltimore. It provides for an inspector, to be named by the Governor and paid by the corporations, who shall inspect all live stock intended for slaughter; and all meat offered for sale in Baltimore City or within five miles of the city must be inspected prior to slaughter.

WASHINGTON.

J. Harris Rogers testified in the telephone investigation at Washington that he gave $10,000 in Pan-Electric stock to Richard Winter Smith. At a meeting at which Senator Harris, Gen. Johnston, Mr. Young and witness were present, Mr. Young said that a number of members of Congress wanted to become interested in the Pan-Electric Company, and had frequently importuned him on the subject. It was proposed that members of Congress should give $20, but Young suggested that that was too much. Witness testified that an effort was made in 1883, or the beginning of 1884, to have him appointed Electrician of the House of Representatives, and Senators Harris and Garland had gone to see Architect Clark. Witness expected to take advantage of the engines, dynamos, and other machinery to carry on experiments which would benefit both his associates and the Government. General Johnston went to see the Speaker in his behalf. Witness was questioned as to the date of the interview in which Mr. Young stated that Attorney General Garland had promised to bring suit, and fixed the date at some time early in July. In reply to a question put by the Chairman, witness said that Pan-Electric stock was given to his associates for three reasons—because they held official positions and were widely known, because they were lawyers, and because he was satisfied that they would do business honorably.

The Holman committee, appointed to inquire into the expenditure of public moneys in the Indian service, have made their report to the House. One recommendation was to the effect that hereafter the money appropriated for the education of Indian children shall be used for the establishment and support of industrial schools; also that the number of agencies be reduced. The minority report recommends the abolishment of the reservation system, and the allotment to each redskin of a tract of land in severalty, the remainder to be sold to actual settlers.

Dr. J. W. Rogers testified before the Telephone Investigating Committee at Washington, March 17, that there was no intention of deriving any advantage from the official positions of the men to whom Pan-Electric stock was donated. The object was to bank on their names and reputation. Witness wished to secure the co-operation of men of integrity and of national reputations. Without the names of such men the stock could not be sold. The incorporators of the Pan-Electric Construction Company paid nothing for their stock. Two meetings were held in the rooms of the Senate Judiciary Committee for the organization of the telephone company. There were Money, Rogers, Jr., Senators Harris and Garland, and Gen. Johnston. At the first meeting a general agreement was reached. Senator Garland prepared the papers and submitted them at the second meeting. A charter for a telephone company was obtained in Tennessee, and one for a telegraph company was obtained in New York. There never was any Pan-Electric stock issued. Witness declared that he had no idea when the company was organized that Mr. Garland would be Attorney General; but he had done his best to make him Attorney General after Cleveland's election. He had dedicated a book to Attorney General Garland, and predicted that Cleveland would select the wisest, purest man in the country to elevate the judiciary of the country. On May 21 he had sent a letter to Attorney General Garland asking him to institute a suit against the Bell company, but received no reply.

Proceedings to disbar Dewitt C. Jones, recently appointed Postmaster at Columbus, Ohio, by the President, for unprofessional conduct as an attorney, were begun before the Circuit Court at Columbus. The confirmation of Mr. Jones by the Senate has been delayed pending an inquiry into the charges.

The statement comes from Cincinnati that the Democratic majority in the Ohio Senate will show its sympathy with President Cleveland by refusing to confirm appointments to State offices by Gov. Foraker. It will be remembered that Senator Sherman recently caused the confirmation of DeWitt C. Jones as Postmaster at Columbus to be set aside.

President Cleveland last week sent to the Senate the following nominations: William L. Trenholm, to be Comptroller of the Currency; John H. Oberly and Charles Lyman, to be members of the Civil-Service Commission.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The winter wheat crop, according to special reports in the Chicago Times, will only reach an average, even with favorable weather for the next thirty days. About 30 per cent. of the acreage was sown late, from fear of the Hessian fly, and this portion has recently suffered from the weather. The greatest falling off in acreage is in the States of Illinois, Kansas, and Missouri. For no period longer than twenty days has the growing crop been protected throughout the winter wheat belt. The outlook is the most encouraging on the Pacific slope.

New York dispatch: "The British Steamer Oregon, formerly of the Guion and latterly of the Cunard line, from Liverpool and New York, was run into by a schooner between 3 and 4 o'clock while east of Fire Island, having two holes stove in her. Part of her passengers were transferred to a pilot-boat and part to a schooner and subsequently all were transferred to the steamer Fulda. The Oregon was entirely abandoned and sunk. All of the passengers and crew were saved."

Mr. Van Horne, Vice President of the Canadian Pacific Road, states that the track will early next month be ready for traffic to the Pacific coast, and that a line of steamships to China and Australia will shortly be established.

Vice President Hoxie, of the Missouri Pacific, refused to hold a conference with the executive committee of the Knights of Labor. Sixty-seven men have returned to work in the shops of the Texas and Pacific Road at Marshall, Texas, and sufficient hands are at work at three other points to meet present wants. A St. Louis dispatch of the 16th says: "Strikers came in contact with a Sheriff's posse at a suburban station, and several shots were fired during the melee. No one was hurt, however. The general situation remains unchanged, all efforts to run other than mail trains over the Gould lines proving futile. The demand of the yardmen and switchmen of East St. Louis for an increase of pay has been acceded to by four of the railroad companies, and it is thought the others will come to terms."

LATER NEWS ITEMS.

Dr. J. W. Rogers testified in the telephone inquiry at Washington, March 18, that he never sold any stock to a member of Congress. He had applied for a consular place, and had written to Attorney General Garland about it. Money had also seen the Attorney General in furtherance of the application. Witness said that he had no hard feelings against Mr. Garland, although he thought the Attorney General acted meanly. When asked if he had not written satirical poetry directed against the Attorney General, he replied, drawing out a pamphlet: "Just got it this morning from Baltimore. Here it is; want to see it?" The cover of the pamphlet bore the following inscription: "The Great Mugwump; Canto 1. Pan-Electric Sale of Government Property; To Be Followed by Parthenon; Congressional Whitewash and the Last of the Dog-Catcher. By J. W. Rogers of Parthenon Heights. Published by Puck & Bottom, Parthenon Heights, Bladensburg, Md.; 1880." Dr. Rogers besought Mr. Oates to read the pamphlet, but several members threw up their hands in eloquent protest.

A special agent of the Treasury Department reports that extensive frauds are perpetrated upon the customs revenues by sending Texas calves into Mexico to fatten and be returned free of duty.

A Washington dispatch says the President celebrated his 49th birthday on the night of March 18 by attending a performance of the "Mikado" with Misses Cleveland and Van Vechten and Colonel and Mrs. Lamont. The party was warmly applauded as it entered its box.

They do not ask for increased wages, but demand that the contract system be abolished. Nearly fifteen hundred men and boys employed in the National Tube Works, at McKeesport, Pa., struck for an advance of 15 per cent. in wages. A strike of the street car employes at Columbus, Ohio, was begun on the 18th inst.

When the Duskin resolutions came up in the Senate on the 16th of March, Mr. Van Wyck moved that these words be added to them: "And in all such cases of removal the matter of confirmation shall be considered in open session of the Senate." Mr. Brown, of Georgia, opposed the resolutions and made a long argument to show that the power of removals is vested by the Constitution in the President alone. Mr. Spooner, of Wisconsin, followed Senator Brown with a long argument in support of the resolutions. The power claimed by the President would enable him, at his will, to shut out the smallest of investigation from the public offices. He did not think that because papers were written by private citizens they were therefore private papers. Their contents determined their character. The Senate passed without debate the bill providing for a commission of five persons to investigate the alcoholic-liquor traffic, its relations to revenue and taxation, and its general, economic, criminal, moral, and scientific aspects; also the bill providing for the study in the schools of the Territories and the District of Columbia of the nature of alcoholic stimulants and narcotics. In the House, the Committee on Ways and Means made a favorable report on a bill to authorize the establishment of factories for the manufacture of tobacco exclusively for exportation.

CONGRESSIONAL.

The Work of the Senate and House of Representatives.

A bill to forfeit certain lands in Iowa was passed by the Senate on the 13th. The session was mainly devoted to the speech by Mr. Kenna in opposition to the Edmunds resolutions. The executive session was devoted to the confirmation of a large number of minor nominations, mostly Postmasters. There was no contest over any of the cases considered. Secretary Manning has communicated to the Ways and Means Committee of the House his approval of a bill extending the draw-back system to all exported articles manufactured of imported materials. A bill granting a pension of $2,000 per annum to the widow of General Hancock was favorably reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions. Representative Weaver, of Nebraska, asked leave to offer the following preamble and resolution: "Whereas, nearly every Congress embraces at least one crank; and whereas, the present Congress is no exception to this rule; and whereas, it should not be in the power of an idiot, insane man, or crank to prevent the consideration of any measure; therefore, Resolved, That the rules of this House be so amended that it shall require at least two members to object to the consideration of a bill." The reading of the resolution was greeted with applause, but Mr. Springer, of Illinois, objected to it on the ground that it was not respectful to the House. At the evening session forty-five pension bills were passed.

A number of petitions from local assemblies of Knights of Labor throughout the country, favoring the building of the Hennepin Canal, were presented in the Senate on March 15. Also memorials of the Knights of Labor protesting against the denial of the extra pay which had been provided for by law for workingmen in the Government service who worked more than eight hours per day. In presenting one of these memorials, Mr. Ingalls said the complaint was a just one, and the nation had been disgraced by the violation of the law complained of in the memorial. Mr. Ingalls presented a joint resolution proposing a constitutional amendment providing that the 15th of April shall be the day for the beginning of the successive administrations of the Government hereafter instead of the 4th of March. The Senate adopted, by a vote of 25 to 22, an amendment of the widows' pension bill offered by Senator Van Wyck, providing that the pensions of children who are idiotic or insane shall continue during the existence of such idiocy or insanity.

The bill to increase the pensions of soldiers' widows and dependent relatives from $8 to $12 a month passed the Senate on the 16th inst., just as it came from the House. Senators Morrill, Cullom, Maxey, and Dolph addressed the Senate on the Duskin resolutions. Senator Morrill supported the resolutions in a very brief speech. Senator Cullom made a long argument in support of the resolutions. The refusal of the Attorney General to furnish the papers called for by the Senate, he said, was a denial of the right of the Senate to inquire into the management of a public officer. Senator Maxey opposed the resolutions. However much the issue might be disguised, he said, the real object was to ascertain the President's reasons for suspensions or removals of officers. Complaint, he said, was made in that majority report that 643 suspensions had been made under this administration. The complaint made by the people, Mr. Maxey said, was that there had not been ten times 643 removals. Bills or resolutions were introduced in the House to pay to Mrs. Thomas A. Hendricks the salary of the Vice President for one year, to establish postoffice savings banks, to provide for a conference of American nations on a common standard silver coin, and for a commission to investigate the war claims of loyal citizens of the border States. The House passed, under a suspension of the rules, a bill for the closing of the business of the Alabama Claims Court; also the Senate bill authorizing the Comptroller of the Currency to permit the receiver of a national bank to use the trust funds for the purchase of property upon which the bank holds a mortgage or other evidence of indebtedness.

Mr. Van Wyck offered the following resolution in the Senate March 17: "Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be directed to examine the nature and extent of the alleged use and destruction of timber on the public lands adjoining the line of the Southern Pacific Railroad, particularly by the Mont ag Improvement Company, and report what, if any, additional legislation is necessary to protect timber on the public domain, and that the committee have power to send for persons and papers." The resolution was agreed to. The Chair laid before the Senate the new electoral count bill. Mr. Hoar addressed the Senate on the bill, and at the conclusion of his remarks the bill was passed without division. Mr. Dolph addressed the Senate in support of the Edmunds resolution. Mr. Coke and Mr. Wilson, of Maryland, spoke upon the resolution, and then Mr. Beck took the floor in opposition and he and Mr. Edmunds had quite a wrangle upon a question of order, during which Mr. Edmunds moved an executive session. In secret session a motion was entered to reconsider the vote by which R. S. Dement was confirmed as Surveyor General of Utah. In the House Mr. Barnes, of Missouri, reported back the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, with Senate amendments. Concurrence was recommended in some amendments, and nonconcurrence in others. The report was agreed to. Mr. Dargan, of South Carolina, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill to replace unserviceable ordnance issued to the militia of States and Territories. Mr. Peel, of Arkansas, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back a Senate bill granting the right of way through the Choctaw and Chickasaw lands to the St. Louis and San Francisco Railroad Company.

Fine Strings of Pearls.

The increased favor given by fashion to low-necked evening dress has encouraged the jewelers to put together some very beautiful and costly necklaces. Three strings of pearls recently shown in this city were valued at $3,200, $2,200 and $1,500, respectively, without the pretty diamond clasps which fastened them. The pearls were graduated, and of beautiful color and shape, but as one must be a poet to love Spenser, one must be accustomed to jewels to appreciate the refined beauty of pearls, and half the women who saw the three necklaces and some rival diamonds which blazed near them in, another necklace would have chosen the diamonds if not informed of their comparative cheapness. The cost of this pretty bauble was $750, and it was a pretty band of stones in a light gold setting, but it had a star pendant, with a great sapphire in the center, which added two-thirds more to its price, and was a beautiful ornament by itself. The combinations of diamonds and colored stones are also very fine this season, not only in pendants but also in rings. One of the latter, in which a turquoise as big as a hummingbird's egg is surrounded by diamond sparks, is pretty enough to figure in one of Mrs. Spofford's stories.—Boston Transcript.

The Plant for Banks.

Experience on French railways has shown that the double poppy is the best plant at present known for consolidating, by the interlacing of its roots, the loose soil of an embankment. The usual grasses and clovers develop slowly, but the double poppy grows enough in two weeks to give some protection to the slope, and within three or four months its roots, ten or twelve inches long, retain the earth far more firmly than those of any other grass or grain.

EDMUNDS AND BECK FALL OUT.

The Vermont Senator Questions the Kentuckian's Honor and the Latter Retorts Savagely.

[U. S. Senate proceedings.]

Mr. Beck did not wonder that Duskin was not here for himself. Everybody knew, Mr. Beck said, that Duskin was nominated in March, 1881, and the Senate did not see fit to confirm. He was again appointed after the adjournment of the session, and nominated at the October term of the same year, and the Senator from Vermont (Mr. Edmunds) had not felt justified in even reporting him to the Senate for confirmation.

Mr. Edmunds rose, as a matter of duty, to a question of order. The Senator from Kentucky, he said, was violating the duty of a Senator in respect to proceedings in executive session.

Mr. Beck denied this. The records and the public papers, he said, showed three nominations of Duskin, and it was because the Senator from Vermont knew that he was unworthy that the papers were asked for—because he expected to open up the department.

Mr. Edmunds insisted that the Senator from Kentucky was out of order, and asked the Chair to decide the question.

The Chair stated that the Senator from Kentucky had an undoubted right to refer to public facts, but——

Mr. Beck (interposing) remarked that he had, and that to-morrow he would prove the public facts by the press of the country, and also prove by the records of the House of Representatives, which were public, that Duskin was an utterly unfit man to hold the place from which he was removed—among other reasons, because of his connection with Fishback, the Marshal, and the Senator from Vermont himself knew the facts. And Mr. Beck thought he would produce the records from the Attorney General's office—the Republican Attorney General, Brewster, verifying the fact stated by him. He hoped also in executive session to get a vote of the Senate to compel the Senator from Vermont to produce evidence which he had before his own committee to show Duskin's unfitness. He hoped to prove that this effort to make an issue in regard to Duskin was because the Senator from Vermont believed Duskin's case so bad that the Democratic administration would be glad to prove how bad he was; and then the Senator would claim it as a precedent in good cases. "And I hope to prove," continued Mr. Beck, "that this move, not made with such a flourish of trumpets as—I will not say what I expect to prove, for I could not do it, perhaps, in parliamentary language."

Mr. Edmunds said he would have to leave entirely in silence what the Senator from Kentucky had stated in regard to affairs in executive session.

"I feel bound in honor," he said, "not to make any allusion to any such subjects. The ideas of Senatorial honor, under the rules, of the Senator from Kentucky, and my own, are entirely different. Every Senator is sworn to a faithful performance of his duty as Senator, according to regulations of the Senate that are passed under the Constitution. If the Senator from Kentucky thinks it is honorable to garble and misstate the existence of circumstances in closed doors, of course I have no criticism to make upon his sense of what is honorable and right. I can not make any reference to what has taken place under any circumstances, when, under the rules of the Senate and by oath, the doors are closed. Therefore, I can make no reply to what the Senator from Kentucky has said on the subject to which he has alluded as in executive session. As to Mr. Beck's reference to the reports in the Attorney General's office about Duskin and what they would show——"

Mr. Beck said his reference had been to the Committee on the Judiciary, of which the Senator from Vermont was Chairman.

Mr. Edmunds reminded Mr. Beck that he had referred to papers in the office of Attorney General Garland and what they would show. He (Mr. Edmunds) could not allude to what the Judiciary Committee had or had not until he should have permission. "I shall not violate my oath or my honor," Mr. Edmunds said, "by doing it now, whatever other gentlemen may choose to do." If there were reports in the Attorney General's office concerning Duskin they were precisely what the Senate desired when it passed the resolution calling for the papers.

"It appears," Mr. Edmunds continued, "that the Senator from Kentucky can get at what the Attorney General and the President of the United States consider to be confidential and private communications when the Senate of the United States cannot; and that is the advantage that the Senator has over the body of which he is a member; and that is an advantage which the administration considers to be, as all the Democratic Senators do, I presume, an undoubted advantage. But what the Senator from Kentucky gets it appears the Senate cannot get. If it were true," Mr. Edmunds continued, "that Duskin had been a bad officer, it was of the highest importance not only that the Senate, but the House of Representatives should know it, and what his misconduct had been."

Senator Beck said he had not seen any paper in the Attorney General's office relating to Duskin, nor had he ever asked to see one; nor had he ever spoken to the President in regard to Duskin. "And as to my honor and oath," continued Mr. Beck, "I hope it is as sacred as that of the Senator from Vermont. If it was not at least as good as his I would not have as much regard for myself as I have now. I propose to stand upon my integrity as a man and a Senator; and I say that a tory-parson power would not do justice to much of the hypocrisy that is now presented to the Senate in pretenses of a desire to establish public justice."

Duskin, Mr. Beck said, was known to be an unfit man for the place he occupied, and nobody knew it better than the Senator from Vermont. The Senator from Vermont spoke of his honor and oath and integrity, and compared them with his (Mr. Beck's), and Mr. Beck was willing to stand by the comparison. "Thank God," said he, "whatever I am—and I say boldly and openly, I mean what I say. I do not stand on the corners of streets and thank God I am not as other men, and pray aloud to make men believe that I have all the virtue and all the integrity and all the godliness extant. When I see a great public question I meet it—I meet it fairly. I may make blunders and I may make mistakes, but I have more respect for the man who meets his enemy in the open field and either knocks him down or takes a fair knock-down himself than I have for the man who stabs his brother under the fifth rib while shaking him by the hand and asking him, 'How is it with you, my brother?' I do not believe in secret vows; I do not believe in pharisceism; I do not believe in hypocrisy; I do not believe in circumventing anybody. I will move now, in order to see whether I am telling what is true or not—and if I cannot move it now I will do so the first opportunity—that all the proceedings in March, 1881, October, 1881, and December, 1881, and all the papers filed with the Judiciary Committee and all the proceedings had before the committee in the case of the nomination of Duskin, shall be made public, so that the country can judge whether what I say is true or not. If I have falsified anything I will take it back, and if I have not I want a chance to prove it, since comparisons are made between the oath and the honor of the Senator from Vermont and myself. I make that motion now and will let it lie over until to-morrow morning, or I will do it in the first executive session if it is not in order to do it now."

The Chair decided that the motion was not in order now.

Mr. Edmunds—I shall undoubtedly agree with the Senator from Kentucky as I do in a large part of what he has said. When he at least says that he is not better than other men, I am bound to agree with him. When he tells us that he compares honor, I agree with him about that. He has his own views of what is honorable, and I have mine. I suppose both being Democrats [laughter], we are both entitled to opinions as to what is honorable. I supposed that all I said was in reference to a plain, manifested—I will not say intended—violation of the rules and orders of the Senate in the Senator's references to reports of committees in executive session. Perhaps the Senator is not yet conscious that he has violated the rule about that. I doubt if he is, because I believe the Senator to be a man who means to do the right thing in the right way. But he did that, and it was in respect to that that I called the attention of the Chair to his remarks.

Mr. Beck inquired where Mr. Edmunds had got the Thurman matter that he read the other day.

Mr. Edmunds replied: "From the committee minute-book, upon an order of the Senate withdrawing secrecy from it. Perhaps the Senator from Kentucky can see the distinction."

"I can see a barn," replied Mr. Beck, "but I can not see a fly on the barn-door without seeing the barn."

Mr. Edmunds—Undoubtedly; and the Senator has seen a good many barns undoubtedly. I am inclined to think he has not seen much of anything else. [Laughter.]

Mr. Beck—I have not seen the fly.

Mr. Edmunds—No, the Senator never takes anything on the fly. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. Beck—Nor on the lie, either. [Uproarious laughter on the floor and in the galleries.]

Mr. Edmunds admitted this. No Senator from Kentucky, he said, regarded the resolution, as he had now discovered, as a device to entrap the President and the Attorney General into reporting the official facts on file, which showed Duskin to be an improper officer, in order that they might be compelled to report in other cases where they had slaughtered a man upon charges, on the invitation of the Postmaster General or somebody else, that were false and fabricated. The point was, therefore, that the administration was going to be unveiled before the people by being entrapped into telling the truth about a bad officer, and so be led to tell the truth about a good officer. That certainly, Mr. Edmunds said, was an amazing attitude for the administration to occupy—and he took it that the Senator from Kentucky represented the administration in the matter. We were asked to assist in removing an officer, and because we asked for official information in order to be able to act in that matter, we were not to get the information for fear that in another instance where an accused officer had been accused falsely, and by invited perjury, of offenses that he had never committed, the conduct of the administration had been brought into reproach. "I will leave the position just there," concluded Mr. Edmunds, who then moved an executive session.

When the galleries had been cleared and the doors closed Mr. Beck offered the resolution which he gave notice of. He said that he did not wish to rest under the imputation passed upon his honor by the Senator from Vermont, and wished to show the public that he had good grounds for all he had asserted.

Mr. Edmunds disavowed all intention to cast any aspersions upon the honor of the Senator from Kentucky, whom he held in the highest esteem.

Mr. Conger proposed an amendment to the resolution of the Senator from Kentucky, providing that the resolution should not take effect until the Attorney General or the President should have sent in the papers in the case.

Thereupon the resolution and the amendment were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

LOSS OF THE OREGON.

The Affair Shrouded in Mystery—Dark Hints that Dynamite Was Used.

[New York telegram.]

Rumors are afloat that the Oregon did not collide with a schooner at all, or any other craft, but that the holes were made in her by some powerful explosive. The Herald says in an editorial:

There is a mystery about the details of the great calamity which it seems difficult to clear up. And the greatest mystery is that there should be any mystery at all.

In another place the same paper publishes the following:

Along the water-front, where maritime people most resort, explanations of the disaster take a mysterious turn. "What do I think of the collision?" asked a brown-faced man with the prefix of Captain to his name. "Only this—there wasn't any. Why, what is there to show that a schooner or any other kind of a craft smashed into the Oregon? Who saw her? Not a soul, so far as I have heard. The first officer saw a light; some one else dreamed they saw some letters on a bow whisking past a cabin window. This is simply bosh. I was close enough to the ocean myself at the hour of the disaster to know what kind of a night it was. I've rarely seen a clearer one. You could notice a vessel's sails away off. She couldn't come afoul of you without being under your eye for ever so long. I don't think there was any schooner at all. It was either some obstruction of a nature no one has guessed, or else it was a torpedo, or dynamite, or some other deviltry."

THE SECRET OF THE OREGON.

To the question: Could a schooner sink the Oregon? experienced seamen answer both yes and no. One says it must have been a coaler without bowsprit or spars, because the Oregon was not scratched much above the water-line, and no spars were left floating by the mysterious vessel. One even goes so far as to suggest that it was the work of some submarine vessel of war similar to the "Nautilus" described by Jules Verne. So far about 140 of the 600 bags of mail have been recovered. Most of the remaining bags are on deck, and if the vessel is right side up it can be nearly all recovered by divers. Large sums of money and securities are known to have been in the registered pouches, and numerous inquiries have already been received at the Postoffice about it for bankers here and in other cities. The fact is, that the losers can recover nothing, as neither England nor the United States undertakes to insure registered matter. The Cunard Company is compromising as fast as it can with the immigrant passengers on the Oregon by settling them to their destinations. Many of the claims of cabin-passengers are large and will not be settled so readily. Mrs. E. D. Morgan claims to have lost $30,000 worth of diamonds, and it is said her lawyers will base their case on the ground that the accident could not have happened except through negligence. The first officer of the steamer Dorset, of the Bristol Line, which arrived in port to-day, and three Sandy Hook pilots talked with, do not believe, after a careful perusal of the published accounts of the collision, that the Oregon was struck by a schooner.

"OLD SORREL" DEAD.

Stonewall Jackson's Old War-Horse Goes the Way of All Flesh—Will Be Stuffed.

[Richmond (Va.) telegram.]

The old Confederate battle-flag at the Southern Soldiers' Home was at half-mast to-day out of respect to "Old Sorrel," Stonewall Jackson's war-horse, who died yesterday. Many of the old soldiers watched him tenderly during the night, and were with him when he died. "Old Sorrell" was 32 years of age; was wounded twice during the war, and was the last surviving horse of the Confederate army. A taxidermist was at once set to work upon him, and will stuff and mount the horse, which will be placed in the Soldiers' Home. The animal after Jackson's death was placed at the Virginia Military Institute, and no one was allowed to ride him. He was taken to the New Orleans Exposition, and although kindly cared for by the soldiers of the home, it is alleged that the trip fatally injured him.

THE entire collection of Mrs. Morgan's pictures, etchings, engravings, books, and art treasures sold at auction in New York brought $1,207,052.

EVERY American Indian costs the United States Government $3,000 a year, estimating the Indian population at 260,000 and the appropriation at $7,000,000.

SMITTEN AT HIS POST.

Murder of an Express Messenger by Masked Train-Robbers.

The Assassins Capture Thirty Thousand Dollars in Money and Jewelry.

[Chicago telegram.]

A train-robbery which equals in its daring and exceeds in brutality most of the robberies common a few years ago on Southwestern roads was committed early yesterday morning between Joliet and Morris, on the Rock Island Road. None of the so-called Jesse James gangs ever went to work more coolly and deliberately to plunder, and, if necessary, to kill, than did the robbers who murdered Kellogg Nichols, messenger of the United States Express Company, and robbed his safe of $21,000 in money and several packages of jewelry, supposed to be worth at least $5,500.

Kellogg Nichols, an old employe of the United States Express Company, was in charge of the express car of the night train from Chicago for Davenport and the West, and N. H. Watts, a man about 25 years old, was baggage master for the trip.

When the train arrived at Morris the conductor of the train, F. L. Wagner, jumped onto the depot platform, and at the same moment, Watts, the baggageman, jumped off, his face deathly pale, and with tremor in every motion. When asked what was the matter he could not for a moment explain, so great was his terror and excitement. The agent at Morris, on going to the express car, was surprised to find the door of the car locked. Heretofore he had always found Nichols standing at the door ready to receive or deliver packages. After waiting a few minutes he knocked at the door, and, getting no response, opened it with his key and jumped in the car. After calling out for Nichols and looking around the car he was struck with horror to see the express messenger lying covered with blood and battered to death in a corner of the car. A glance into the car next in the rear showed him that the safe in the adjoining compartment had been opened and most of its contents, in the shape of papers, packages, and envelopes, scattered near and around it. By this time Watts, the baggageman, had recovered enough composure to tell his story.

He said: "I was sitting in the car; the chains were up on the door which went back to the train, but the door in the front part of the car was not locked, as the car ahead was the one in which was the messenger. He was checking up his runs. I sat on a trunk, and just after they had whistled for Minooka I heard a sort of scraping sound on the floor, but not much—just as though some one had rubbed his foot on the floor. Before I could turn around a big gun was poked over my shoulder, and a man said: 'You open your mouth or move a muscle, and I'll blow your brains out.' I could only see the lower part of his face; it was covered with some cloth or paper. I sat looking toward the back part of the car toward the rear of the train, when I heard some one at the safe, which was behind me, and could hear the rustling and tearing of papers. This went on for a while, and the man who stood over me said to me, 'If you move or stir hand or foot before the train stops at Morris that man up there will blow the top of your head off.' I rolled my eyes up, and there was a man's hand stuck through the ventilator with a gun in it. In about five minutes, as it seemed to me, the train slowed up for Morris, and I looked up. The hand was gone, and I jumped out of the car. I heard no noise, nor any shooting. The first I heard was, as I said, the man speaking to me, and at the same time putting the gun over my shoulder. They must have gotten into Nichols' car first, and got the key to the safe before they came in to me."

"Why didn't you jump and get out of range?" was asked Watts. "The motion of the train would make his aim unsteady, anyway, even if he had fired."

"O, the outlook was too dangerous, and, besides, I did not suspect anything horrible would have been committed if I kept quiet."

As soon as Watts had told his story Conductor Wagner went forward to the engineer, C. Woods, telling him that Nichols had been murdered. The engineer grabbed a wrench and together they went into the car where Nichols lay. In a statement made at Davenport, Engineer Woods said:

"The distance from my place in the cab to the spot where the dead messenger lay was about twenty feet. There was a door in the end of the car next the engine, but that end was piled full of goods, which would serve to deaden the sound of the shooting, if any occurred. There was a strong wind blowing from the west, and besides we were running pretty fast. From the looks of the car a desperate and bloody battle had been fought. Nichols, the messenger, was dead, but his hands were not cold. He had evidently tried to reach the automatic valve on the south side of the car at the right hand of the door facing outward, and by this means stop the train. There was a chair at the farther end of the car. Nichols lay on his back, the head toward the engine, his feet tangled in the chair, and his face and body cut all to pieces. There was a bent piece of iron a foot long and seven-eighths of an inch thick. From appearances he had been beaten with this and cut with some sharp instrument like a hatchet. He was horribly mutilated. He might have been shot, but of this I am not sure.

"As to the night and speed of running," the engineer continued, "it was snowing a little and the night was very dark. It is mostly a prairie country from Joliet to Morris, but west of Morris there is a heavy belt of timber. From Minooka to Morris is down, so I could run fast, and I did so. I came into Morris at a high rate of speed, and when the train stopped it simply stopped. I do not believe any person could have left the train a block from the point of stopping with safety."

According to Engineer Woods computation the robbers did not have more than forty-two minutes to do their work.

THE LIME-KILN CLUB.

A Professor's Discomfiture and a Bad Man from Harvard.

[From the Detroit Free Press.]

When the meeting opened in due form Brother Gardner announced that Hon. Profile Livermore of Arkansas was in the ante-room and waiting to address the meeting. The subject of his address was: "Has the White Man Passed His Zenith?" If there were no objections he would be brought in.

Prof. Wintergreen Davis didn't propose to object, but he would like to be informed of the meaning of the word zenith. He had attended twenty-one different ward caucuses and had clerked in a wood-yard for three weeks, but he had never met with the word before.

There was a deep silence as he settled down, and Brother Gardner scratched his bald pate until as if the friction would start a fire.

"Zenith," he finally said, "why, I ar' mo' dan surprised at your ignerence. Ebery cull'd pusson in dis kentry orter know all about zenith."

"Yes, sah, but the word breaks me up."

"Zenith am a dreffulleasy word," continued the President, as he looked up and down the hall in a nervous manner. "You didn't git zenith and zither all mixed up, did you?"

"No, sah."

"When anybody says dat Samuel Shin, fur instance, has passed his zenith, dey can't be tooken up for slander. It means—it means——"

He waited so long that the Rev. Penstock arose and said:

"Misser President, it means dat he has passed his best pint. Zenith am de highest pitch."

"Grudder Penstock, sot right down dis minit!" exclaimed the President, as he used his gavel in a vigorous manner. "Who axed you to riz up an' 'splain 'bont zenith? When dis chair can't stan' on one leg an' 'splain any word in common use he will confess his ignorance an' call for help! I shall fine you $2,000 fur disturbin' dis meetin', and Professor Davis will now be brung in."

It was evident to all as soon as he entered the room that the Professor was "off." He grinned, and bowed, and scraped, and finally took a chair near the stove. When Giveadam Jones went over to him and asked if he was ill, he replied:

"Shay! I'll fight you two rounds for twenty-five shents!"

He was drunk! As soon as Brother Gardner realized this fact he ordered him removed from the lodge. The stranger was assisted down stairs into the alley, and hasn't been seen in Detroit since. From the splashes of mud on the right board fence and the distance between his tracks it is believed that he left in a hurry.

"Dis am but another proof," said Brother Gardner, as he took his seat. "dat when you pit brains agin whisky, common sense agin gin, or intellect agin lager beer, de liquids am bound to go under de wire a length ahead."

Sir Isaac Walpole then moved to take from the table the case of the keeper of the museum, who was last week suspended from office and fined $8,000. Sir Isaac had carefully inquired into all the facts in the case and believed them to be as follows: The keeper desired to run down to the Postoffice to mail a letter to his father-in-law. There was present in the museum a colored man who claimed to be a professor of botany at Harvard, and he was asked to remain until the keeper's return. The time occupied was only twelve minutes, but when the keeper returned he found the stranger had departed, taking with him an eight-day clock once owned by Napoleon I. The keeper was to blame, and yet he was not. If everybody coming along here and claiming to be a professor at Harvard was to be suspected and watched, the whole police force would be kept busy. The clock was probably gone beyond recovery, but the loss was not irreparable. Sir Isaac had in his possession a clock which Napoleon wanted to buy, but didn't have money enough. He would turn this in to the museum in case the keeper was reinstated and his fine remitted. It would take him 400 years, the very best he could do, to pay the fine, and he hadn't secured two hours' sleep since being suspended.

"Bein' dat dis matter has been tooken up an' considered by sich a distinguished member," said the President, "I shall not hesitate to comply wid de request, though I want de keeper of de museum to fully realize dat he has had a powerful close shave."

On one occasion when General Grant was visiting Boston, a well-known gentleman was entertaining him, and their talk one day while out driving turned upon the Hon. Charles Sumner, of whom the Bostonian was not an admirer. After citing a number of incidents to show the objectionable traits of the lamented Senator, the Bostonian answered: "And, do you know that, with all his conspicuous championship of morals and humanity, he doesn't believe in the inspiration of the Bible?" While speaking he looked steadily at Grant, expecting, perhaps, some exclamation as an evidence of surprise. There was, however, no especial sign. The General took a long puff at his cigar, blew the smoke away deliberately from his lips, and quietly remarked: "I am not at all surprised. He didn't write it, you know."

The Dog.

The dog is, of all animals, the companion of man par excellence. Let him be treated comfortably, given a good place to sleep, just enough food, a collar with his registered number, and a receipt for his tax each year, and he will continue to be what he always has been; the truest animal friend of man.—Hartford Post.

ILLINOIS AFFAIRS.

—There is some talk of boring for coal at Lexington.

—S. H. Dalsen, general merchant at Sandoval, has made an assignment.

—John Larrain, an old citizen of Galena has been adjudged insane at St. Louis, where he was sojourning with his daughter.

—E. Deimel & Bros., the great furniture manufacturers at 311 and 313 Wabash avenue, Chicago, were burned out the other night.

—Fred Warmouth, brother of ex-Gov. Warmouth, of Louisiana, died recently at the residence of his father, Col. I. S. Warmouth, at Salem.

—F. S. Winston, Corporation Counsel of Chicago, has tendered his resignation, to become counsel of the Michigan Central Railroad Company, much to the regret of Mayor Harrison.

—Charles Burrett, a wealthy resident of Rockford, was found dead in bed the other morning. Mr. Burrett had retired as well as usual. He was seventy-five years of age.

—Fire broke out in the factory of the Rockford Steam Bakery Company the other night and destroyed the works. The origin of the fire is unknown, but is thought it caught from sparks from Keeney's paper-mill.

—Samuel I. Church, one of the earliest residents of Rockford, and widely known throughout that section as the Sheriff who hanged the only man ever executed in that county, died suddenly the other night, aged 77.

—The total income of the village of Normal for the financial year ended March 1 was $3,745.59; expenditures, $3,264.69; balance on hand, $480.90. The bonded indebtedness of the corporation is $5,761.85, which bears 7 per cent. interest.

—Mrs. Gummow, the demented wife of William Gummow, a prosperous farmer of Scales Mound, recently set fire to the bed clothes in her sleeping apartment and deliberately stepped into the flames. Her husband entered the house in time to save the building from destruction, but found his wife dead.

—A. H. Fisher, who has figured for several years as one of the leading jewelers of Springfield, but whose business is in the hands of a receiver at present, was taken home the other day suffering from a pistol-shot wound over the right temple. Mr. Fisher says that as he was on his way home from the Chicago and Alton depot, he was assaulted by three men and shot by them.

—At Van Ulreck's well, No. 9, Litchfield, a flow of gas was struck at a depth of 640 feet, a somewhat weaker flow having been met at a depth of 510 feet. The last flow is nearly as strong as those of the largest wells there, having a pressure of 120 pounds to the square inch. When lighted the flames extended a distance of about fifty feet from the mouth of the pipe, and it took an hour and five minutes for the pressure to go down. The company has five miles of pipe laid through the city. The gas has already been in use for six months both for heating and lighting.

—A novel plan was taken to prevent Samuel McEwen, who a month ago was convicted at Salem of manslaughter and sentenced to Chester for five years, from undergoing the imprisonment. A new trial was asked for and overruled, and the Judge allowed thirty days in which to obtain a supersedeas. Instead of doing this a petition for McEwen's pardon was circulated and quite generally signed. The members of the Salem bar and many jurors signed it. The reputation of Stevens, the murdered man, as a desperado, and McEwen's general good character are the reasons for which executive clemency is asked.

—In compliance with a call issued some time ago, a meeting of breeders of thoroughbred horses was held at Springfield the other day. Gen. Rowett was made Chairman, and Chas. F. Mills Secretary. It was resolved to form an organization to be known as the Thoroughbred Horse-Breeders' Association of Illinois, and officers were elected as follows: President, Gen. R. Rowett, of Carlinville; Vice President, J. M. Simpson, of Palmer; Secretary, J. S. McCullough, of Champaign; Treasurer, L. H. Jones, of Springfield; Executive Committee, Theron Powers of Decatur, Maj. Whitten of Wilmington, A. A. Watts of Farmingdale, Matt Ashlock of Carrollton, and J. H. Sumner of Gibson. The Secretary was authorized to announce the following stakes, the entries to close Saturday, May 15, 1886, entrance $25, forfeit $10, and that $5 entrance be required on futurity stakes: Stake for 2-year-olds, stake for 3-year-olds, stallion stake for colts got by any stallion owned in Illinois. Colts eligible to the stakes must have been foaled by the property of a member of this association, and the dam owned by a member at the time of service. The State Board of Agriculture was requested to change the stake now advertised for thoroughbred stallions making the season of 1886 so as to include the stallion's get. James M. Simpson of Palmer, A. B. Watts of Farmingdale, and J. S. McCullough of Champaign were appointed a committee to prepare an address to the breeders of thoroughbred horses residing in Illinois, calling attention to the organization. The membership fee was placed at $5. The convention adjourned subject to the call of the Chairman.

The County Seat Question.

In answer to the question of our Marion correspondent last week as to the responsibility of the parties who guarantee free county buildings, we will say we have little faith in the pledge. If they really intended to furnish free county offices, they would have begun to erect a good substantial town hall last summer just as soon as the resolution submitting the removal to the people was passed; and would have it now completed, so as to say to the voters: Here is a building, gentlemen, sufficient for your use for several years; come and occupy it if you will, free of cost. Such a course would have gained them two or three hundred votes, and it would have been something tangible,—a guarantee of itself. There is good reason to believe that they will not furnish a building, for if they get the county seat without, they can say: The county sent is where you put it yourselves; now furnish your own buildings. And when it comes to building county buildings, who will build them? The last board of supervisors equalized the assessed valuation of the six western townships of Charlevoix, Eveline, Hayes, Marion, Norwood, and South Arm at $1,380,150, and the eight eastern town (supposed to be most benefited by a removal to Boyne City) at $889,092,—assuming that Wilson is neutral, being equally accommodated at either location. The committee on apportionment recommended a tax for county purposes on the six western townships of $6,900.06; while for the eight eastern townships it was only $4,195.45 Of this tax the amounts returned delinquent become an important consideration, as showing who pay the burdens of taxation, and who let them go by default. We have not the figures for this year, but for last year the eight eastern towns returned $4,867.99, while the six western towns returned only $2,068.68. Those who pay the taxes to support the county should consider these things, and determine if they are now ready to settle the question of permanent location and begin the erection of buildings.

The JOURNAL has not changed its mind, as stated in the last Statesman. After the positive denial from president Hugart, as published in the Sentinel last fall, we were loth to believe the company were now beginning bona fide operations for the speedy building of the road. We have satisfactory assurance that the agreement mentioned last November was entered into just as we stated, although denied by president Hughart; and we would be very glad to believe that this survey (?) was the beginning of that contract. When convinced that it is, we shall be glad to publish the evidence.

One of the reasons advanced for removing the county seat to Boyne City is that East Jordan is a lively commercial rival of Charlevix, while Boyne City is not, and never can be. So that whatever of prestige the county seat carries is to be taken away from an already lively town, and given to another town where it can never grow to such proportions as to become dangerous to Charlevoix. Pretty thin reasoning.

The Sentinel devotes a column and a quarter to an evasion of the question whether or not it left out of its copy of president Hughart's letter a very important paragraph. Say Smith, why don't you come out like a little man, and own up though your paper, as you admit to your friends, that you made a mistake,—first in publishing with such a flourish president Hughart's denial last fall, and second in leaving out a portion of his last letter.

A gentleman from Boyne City, a lawyer by profession, and a persistent and determined agitator of the removal of the county seat, has said that this is his last campaign. If not carried this year, the cause is hopeless, and he will pack his books and go to East Jordan, so as to live at the county seat.

Gnawing the Nubbin.

Among the innumerable things one notices while traveling, none are queerer than the sight of Americans eating their far-famed native vegetable. At one hotel table we saw a red-faced man of heavy frame and features, with shaggy eyebrows and grizzled moustache, ferociously attack an ear of corn, as if it was a premeditated act of vengeance. Holding it in both hands, he rapidly ate from end to end of the ear without a pause, beginning over again on the next row until the whole was methodically and effectually finished. His nose, chin, jaws, moustache and eyebrows vigorously worked in unison like a piece of connected, patent machinery, warranted to crush a large amount of kernels in a short space of time. He was very conspicuous, yet unconscious of the ridiculous spectacle presented, like hundreds of others who adopt the same voracious method. The most surprising part of the picture was his beautiful wife, whose personal appearance and elegant table manners indicated extreme refinement and delicacy. With her reddish gold hair coiled high on her head, her pretty features and complexion, her dress of pale lilac India silk under a polonaise of real and rare white lace, diamonds blazing at her ears, and on her white neck and hands, she was a striking contrast to the man who sat beside her, fiercely grinding corn and piling up layers of cobs on the table cover. If this, with many other table offenses he naturally perpetrated as the meal proceeded, disturbed the sensibilities of the lady, she concealed any outward sign of it beneath a cool composure and apparent indifference that showed a remarkable power of self-command. Such women are capable of heroisms if their capacities were directed into higher channels. But would any number of Paris dresses, any amount of real lace and diamonds, induce you, Helen, to spend your life with a man who ate corn on the cob like that? I think not, even if he lavished Kohinoors and steam-yachts upon you beside.—Hartford Times.

STOCK GROWERS

All agree that for general use in their business no powder is better calculated to give satisfactory results than those prepared by E. M. Parmelee, because they really contain the valuable remedies claimed, and do not fail to act quickly and effectively in coughs, colds, epizootic, bad blood, stoppage of water, poor digestion etc. in horses. For cattle, hogs, sheep, and poultry, they are invaluable. Full pounds only 35 cents.

Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

Cure for Piles.

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he has some affection of the kidneys or neighboring organs. At times, symptoms of indigestion are present, flatulency, uneasiness of the stomach, etc. A moisture, like perspiration, producing a very disagreeable itching. After getting warm, is a common attendant. Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Bosanko's Pile Remedy, which acts directly upon the parts affected, absorbing the Tumors, allaying the intense itching, and effecting a permanent cure. Price 50 cents. Sold by Geo. W. Crouter. 152

Guizot's France

CELEBRATED HISTORY OF FRANCE from the Earliest Times to 1848. By M. GUIZOT, Prime Minister of France, continued from his notes, by his daughter, MME. GUIZOT DE WITT. Complete in 8 vols., large 12mo., bound elegantly in fine cloth, gilt tops. A new edition just issued, reduced in price to $6.00, including postage. This is much the best edition published of this magnificent work, which is known as the best popular history of France. The cost of the imported edition, with substantially the same illustrations is $36.00, while this is certainly the best in form, and the most desirable for the library. "THE MATCHLESS BRILLIANCY of Guizot's style, his graphic descriptions of men and events, his painstaking minuteness of detail, the lucidity and ease of his style and the admirable philosophic reflections, all combine to render it worthy of the description it bears as the most popular history of France. It is as fascinating as a novel, and as life-like as a theatrical representation of the events and personages it describes. How the set can be sold for that price remains, after much reflection, a mystery, for the work is not sham work, it is well done; altogether it is a marvel of cheapness. Mr. Alden has done much for the cause of good literature, but nothing better than this."—Daily Times, Buffalo, N.Y.

"What VICTOR HUGO is in fiction, Cousin in philosophy, Guizot is in history. Among Frenchmen he had but few peers."—Christian Leader, Boston, Mass. "IT IS FAR THE best history of France that has been written. It is a wonder of cheapness."—Christian Advocate, Richmond, Va. "SUCH A HISTORY, by such a writer, and at such a price, should gain readers by the thousand."—Churchman, Richmond, Va. "IN STYLE of cover, firmness of binding, quality of letter-press, affluence of illustration, and lowness of price, this edition of one of the noblest historical works in existence, is one of the most remarkable publications now offered to the public."—Morning Star, Dover, N. Local Notes and News.

CLEMENT J. STRANG, Editor.

Navigation is open.

The ice went out this morning.

The Kalamazoo Telegraph is out with a new dress.

Read the notices of registration and election, on last page.

The subject of Rev. VanAuken's sermon next Sunday is repentance.

Pat O'Neil put in his nets yesterday morning,—the first to get them in the water this season.

The gross receipts of the Charlevoix minstrels at Boyne City was $32.45, and at East Jordan $56.00.

Rev. Parmenter still continues his revival work at the Hilton school house, and is much encouraged with the results.

The scholars who took part in the recent school entertainment acquitted themselves admirably. The entertainment netted $44.

That supply of new goods Miss Spaulding advertised as being on the road, is now on the shelves and in the show cases. "And still there's more to follow."

The Congregationalists of Ironton hold communion service next Sunday, at the usual preaching hour. Rev. VanAuken will receive five new members into the church.

Frank Hines has presented the Boys' Band this week a set of folios as a token of his appreciation of their efforts, for which the boys' wish to express their thanks.

The ladies of the Congregational church are watching for the first new maple sugar that comes to town, with a view to give a sugar social some evening the early part of next week.

We are prepared to print election tickets with neatness, accuracy, and dispatch. Be careful to give us the full name legibly written. Election slips, neat and cheap at the JOURNAL office.

Geo. C. Wagar has sold his cigar store to Loftus Cook, who took possession Monday. Mr. Wagar is undecided as to his future business, but will remain here until navigation opens.

On account of the severe storm, the few members of the historical society who met at W. A. Smith's, adjourned for one week to meet at the same place, and present the same program.

Dr. N. J. Perry dentist, will be in his office the remainder of this week, and every alternate week thereafter until further notice; and will be pleased to see any in need of work in his line.

We are in receipt of the report of the Commissioner of Patents, our old friend M. V. Montgomery, for the year 1885. The ability of the commissioner is everywhere manifest in his report.

Those new lock boxes just put into the postoffice by Heath & Francis, are only another proof of the excellent work those gentlemen are prepared to always turn out. They have received unlimited praise.

The team on the Boyne City stage, went through the ice on Monday, and both horses were drowed. The mail was secured without damage. Miss Sadie Cady was the only passenger, and she walked clear to Ironton and gave the alarm.

Mrs. Rose, of the Petoskey Democrat, is solving the question whether a woman can successfully run a newspaper, and to all outward appearances the proof is that she can. However, there is chance for still greater improvement.

G. E. Sweetland, who recently purchased the Swallow estate, so beautifully located upon the terrace, is making extensive repairs upon the same. When he has finished these repairs, it will be one of the pleasantest residences in the village.

Joseph L. Sherman is canvassing Charlevoix for a beautiful book entitled "Queenly Women, Crowned and Uncrowned." A glance at the book is sufficient to convince one of its merits. Ably written and beautifully bound, it is a treasure for the library or parlor table.

Chas. S. Hampton, Jay L. Newberry, C. J. Pailthorp, and J. C. Bontecou, of Petoskey, were here on Tuesday, as a committee to secure the co-operation of Charlevoix in a scheme to advertise the material resources of Emmet and Charlevoix counties.

Prof. Enos desires us to express the gratitude of the principal and teachers of the school, to the scholars for their part in making the recent entertainment a success; and to the parents and citizens for their liberal patronage, by which means so large a portion of the debt upon the organ can be canceled.

The schools close to morrow for a week's vacation. A thorough system of records has been adopted, and all pupils who are present at this examination, and pass creditably, will be enrolled in the higher grades, to which they will belong for the next school year. It is therefore important, that they be present, and obtain their standing so as to avoid special examination upon entering at a later date.

With the coming of spring, Geo. W. Miller, clothier, is making large additions to his already complete stock of gents' furnishing goods. He is determined to lead the clothing trade of this county, if honest goods and fair prices will do it. Our experience has been that clothing from this house wears longer and keeps color better for the same priced goods than any other we ever had; and this is the experience of others. No person in want of clothing of any kind should fail to give George a call before buying.

"Our Esteemed Contemporary."

That half of the editorial staff of our contemporary who has "all his conscience and one eye askew," ventures to climb a tree and look at the JOURNAL office, and when we ventured to suggest the propriety of looking toward home, you ought to have seen him writhe and wriggle, reminding one again of the saying, "the hurt bird flutters." All we have to say is, Never mind the "clerical appendix." There is no danger of its being blown from its foundation by a little wind. As to sticking to the truth, of course we don't expect that of you,—we limit our demands to your capacity. When you say, "The JOURNAL asserts that Mr. G. F. Beardsley is at the bottom of this deviltry," (we never hinted that it was deviltry), you make a prevarication which we can spell with three letters. And, at the same time, you admit what you falsely say we assert,—and yet we do not call you an "egregious idiot," it isn't necessary.

For the same reason we do not expect you to be consistent. We expect you to tell how things look "to a man up a tree" one week, and the next week say "We never heard such a thought suggested." Or again, "we would not belittle ourselves by so grossly insulting an editorial frater,"—admitting that what you ached to say would be a gross insult, hence admitting that when you did say the same thing in substance the week before, you did insult us. But we didn't notice it; for, as we said before, we limit our expectations to your capacity. Neither do we expect you to be a gentleman; for, to be severe, as you think you must, and yet be a gentleman, is impossible with you. "It is hard to make a whistle out of a pig's tail."

The Belvedere House Burned.

About eleven o'clock on Monday, fire was discovered in the Belvedere House, on the Kalamazoo Resort. The fire company was not long in getting a stream on the seething flames, while a company of over 200 men soon emptied the lower story of its contents. By the valliant offorts of the firemen, the sheds, out buildings, and a large pile of wood were saved; and, best of all, the adjacent cottages escaped unharmed. The building was well insured, but the furniture stored in closets in the upper story for safety was a total loss. Mr. Chas. Kelley, the warden, loses nearly everything, and deserves the sympathy of the whole community. We shall look for something pretty nice in the form of a new hotel on the grounds of our Kalamazoo friends.

Card of Thanks.

The Charlevoix Minstrels return thanks for the liberal patronage extended them at Boyne City and East Jordan. Although under the disadvantage of inclement weather, both villages responded liberally, and at the same time showed the most clever treatment.

The latter place deserves especial praise for the grand band reception, the hearty welcome, the free use of town hall, and their still more liberal donation of sustaining our expenses while in their city.

To these, and for all this, as well as to all those who have done us a favor, be it ever so small, we return our most sincere thanks and everlasting appreciation.

Respectfully,
THE CHARLEVOIX MINSTRELS.

M. E. Church.

Sermon next Sunday at the morning hour by the Pastor.

Young people's meeting at the usual hour; to be led by a member of the society.

At 7 o,clock the Sunday school will give an entertainment, to this all, and especially the parents, are invited, all the members of the Sunday school are requested to be present.

Rev. J. T. Iddings will preach at Black's school house next Sunday at 3 o'clock.

The opinions expressed by our correspondents "around the county" are not necessarily the opinions of the editor. In the probable rush of communications likely to occur next week, we ask that all having any arguments to present, will condense the same into the smallest possible space consistent with clearness.

GRAND WIND UP!

Our recent Special Sales have far exceeded our expectations. The people know that We Live up to our Promises every time, and when we advertise an article below its value, we are not conveniently out of it. Deception does not pay! Now we have to say that, owing to a contemplated

CHANGE IN OUR BUSINESS

Recently decided upon, we are compelled to close out our entire stock immediately, and in order to save time and expense we have determined to limit the sale to sixty days. The first loss is the best, and so Everything goes

REGARDLESS OF VALUE.

Our stock is now the largest and best in Charlevoix, with a full line of Staple Goods, and nothing is reserved.

We Have a Fine Assortment

Of Foreign and Domestic Dry Goods, Silks, etc. Cottons of all kinds, Underwear, Hosiery, Gloves, Flannels, Shawls, Cloths, Trimmings, etc. Besides a Complete assortment of Crockery, Glassware, Lamps and Lamp Goods.

An Immense stock of GROCERIES,

Of Every Description.

Flour, Feed, Meal and Provisions, Etc.

Come early, before any assortments are broken and we will show you a picnic.

THE NORTHERN LIGHTS.

Lemstrom's Conclusions—Aurora Borealis Manufactured by Man.

But let us leave the domain of theory and see what has been found in the realm of facts regarding this strange and beautiful display. It may seem singular to say that the northern lights have been manufactured by man—made to order, so to speak—but such is really the case, or, at least, claimed by Professor Lemstrom, in charge of the Finnish International Meteorological Station, at Sodunkyla, Finland. A copper wire mounted on telegraph poles was wound around the apex of a small hill, covering about 3,000 square yards, from top to bottom, in a spiral course as it ascended the hillside grade, points like those on a lightning-rod pointing upward being fastened to the wire every foot and a half, one end being connected with a conducting metallic disk sunk in the earth. Many interesting experiments were made with this singular apparatus, but the most startling was when it was used by nature itself and, the air seemingly overcharged with electrical force, an auroral glow sprang into the air from the multitude of points, which light, analyzed by the spectrum, was identical with that of the northern lights. From this fact, indeed, Lemstrom very naturally concluded that the aurora borealis was a terrestrial display, or very near the surface of the earth, but in these claims he has been stoutly contested by others, many of whom claim that the distance to the auroral ares has been measured to a considerable degree of accuracy, and they all agree that it is quite high, supra-atmospheric, supposing the air to be forty-six miles deep.

It is too much within the domain of dry mathematics to discuss at length the different methods employed by different observers to determine the height, but the results attained would be interesting, no doubt. Lemstrom, as I have said, thought it might reach to the ground, and has produced it in an artificial way therefrom. Sir John Ross, I believe it was, who said that he and some companions distinctly saw a brilliant ray of the aurora pass between him and a high snow-covered hill not many miles distant. Sir John Franklin's measurements in North America show it to be seven miles high. The French at Bossekop, Norway, as early as 1838-9, got it up to between 60 and 120 miles. Tromholt puts it at about 70, and he has made more measurements and studied this part of the subject closer than most physicists. Nordenskjold, the Arctic explorer, puts it 118 miles, which Professor Fearnley follows closely at 125, and Newton gets but 5 miles more, or 130, as a result of his deductions. Somewhere in the vicinity of the numbers given above will probably be found true values, if they are ever determined, and it may be that all are within the true limits, for, like the clouds, as one of the above authors remarks, the auroral displays may be found to have wide limits in their heights. Bergman does not rest contented, however, until he has published the height at 486 miles, Mairan 485 and Boscovich at 825. I have not given all authorities, but probably the most reliable and the greatest extremes.

The extent of the auroral displays over the world is not uniform, the United States being the most favored, while Siberia, opposite to us across the pole, but much further north, is the least. New York City has about the same frequency of auroral displays as St. Petersburg and London, and also as Siberia, more than half way up the Behring Sea coast, fully 1,500 to 2,000 miles nearer the pole. They are seen as far south as Cuba, Yucatan, Central Mexico and Cape St. Lucas on the American Continent, while in Asia they are unknown in Pekin, and almost so in the Japanese Islands, Southern Europe, on the latitude of New York city, being just within the limits of visibility. In general, it is seen about 1,400 miles further south on the Western Continent side than it is on the Eastern, or just the distance the magnetic pole is from the true or geographical one, pulled over the same side, so to speak, it being just north of our continent. It thus plainly shows that the magnetic pole is a central point from which the auroral force in some unknown way is dependent. The magnetic pole, approximately speaking, is on longitude 100 degrees west from Greenwich, and on that meridian the displays are more frequent than other points of the same latitude.—Lieutenant Fred Schwatka, in New York Times.

The Origin of the Metaphysical Society.

In the autumn of 1868 Mr. Tennyson and the Rev. Charles Pritchard—Savilian Professor of Astronomy—were guests together in my house.

A good deal of talk arose on speculative subjects, especially theology, and in the course of it the idea was suggested of founding a Theological Society, to discuss such questions after the manner and with the freedom of an ordinary scientific society.

I volunteered to endeavor to bring such a body together if Mr. Tennyson and Mr. Pritchard would promise to belong to it, and I then consulted other friends, beginning with Dean Stanley, Dean Alford, Archbishop Manning, the Rev. James Martineau, the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol, Dr. Ward of the "Dublin Review," Mr. R. H. Hutton of the "Spectator," and one or two more, finding them all willing to join. I next went to "the opposition," and, explaining our plan, found Professor Huxley, Professor Tyndall, Mr. Froude, Mr. Walter Bagehot, Sir John Lubbock, and others, equally ready to cooperate.

The originally intended name of Theological Society was dropped in favor of "Metaphysical Society," under which full discussion of the largest range of topics from all points of view could be better insured, and on the 21st of April, 1869, we held our first meeting at Willis's Rooms.

I remember Mr. Froude—who was among our first members—saying that, if we hung together for twelve months, it would be one of the most remarkable facts in history. But we "hung together" for nearly twelve years, meeting once a month, usually at an hotel, where, after dining together, a paper was read by some member, and afterward discussed. Mr. Tennyson's remark at an early meeting seemed always borne in mind—that "modern science ought, at any rate, to have taught us one thing—how to separate light from heat."—From "The Metaphysical Society: A Reminiscence," by R. H. Hutton, in Popular Science Monthly for October.

An odd coffee machine has been patented in London. A lamp beneath boils the water for infusion, and at the same time roasts the berries, which, as roasted, are automatically emptied into a hopper, and ground by a mill attached. Thus the whole process of roasting the green coffee berries, grinding and infusing the same, is simultaneously performed within about fifteen minutes.

Caucus.

A caucus will be held at the town hall in the village of Norwood on Tuesday, the 30th day of March, at 8 o'clock p. m. for the purpose of nominating township officers for the ensuing year.

WILLIAM HARRIS,
Committee.

INCIPIENT CONSUMPTION, Coughs, colds, bronchitis, &c., are all the results of neglect or exposure, and must have prompt and active remedies to remove them. Croup and whooping cough cause great suffering because an effective remedy is not at hand. Why, then, leave yourself and children exposed to danger and death, when HAMILTON'S COUGH BALSAM will relieve all of these and prevent diseases, such as pneumonia, inflammation of lungs, and consumption. All lung difficulties are removed by this remedy. Price 25 and 50 cts. per bottle.

Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

Proper Treatment for Coughs.

That the reader may fully understand what constitutes a good Cough and Lung Syrup, we will say that Tar and Wild Cherry is the basis of best remedies yet discovered. These ingredients with several others equally as efficacious, enter largely into Dr. Bosanko's Cough and Lung Syrup, thus making it one of the most reliable now on the market. Price 50 cts. and $1.00. Samples free. Sold by G. W. Crouter. 2

LOVE'S LESSON.

BY MIRIAM MERRIMAC.

Oh! yesternight, in a willful mood,
Young Love came o'er the hill;
The folded flowers in Dame Nature's wood
Lay silvery white and still.

The gates were closed, but the wall was low,
So Love sprang lightly o'er;
And slyly shook from his wings of snow
A hundred darts or more.

"I'll take them prisoner, every one!"
He whispered, with roguish glee;
"And you, proud Rose, ere the morrow's sun,
Shall yield your heart to me."

"I hear you laughed at the Wind's embrace,
And baffled the Sun's hot flame,
And shrugged up your leaves, with a dainty grace,
When the pleading Raindrops came.

"And even scoffed at the power of Love!"
He picked up his bow and darts,
And right and left, ere one could move,
Took aim, and pierced their hearts.

And then, in a dimpling, careless way,
He tightened his trusty bow,
And knelt to the Rose, while a starlit ray
Danced over his wings of snow.

A moment more, and the arrow sped.
"Ha, ha! Sweet love, dost yield?
Rest on my heart thy drooping head,
And know the power I wield.

"Love conquers all." But there he stopped,
For on his thrilling breast
The fallen Rose's heart-blood dropped!
What need to tell the rest?

Of how Love came to reign a King,
Of how a slave he lives;
But this he's heard to softly sing,
"Love asketh not—but gives."

"POT-BOILERS."

CHAPTER I.

Blind!

Nothing else would have mattered much, but he was blind—hopelessly blind.

He was an artist, and had caught cold while out sketching. Inflammation had set in—gone to his eyes; and it was as if a dead wall had been built right across his path of life.

Ten years later it might have mattered less, for the children would have been "out of hand;" but now, with six of them—the eldest but nineteen and only a girl; the youngest seven—and no provision, it was a black look-out, indeed.

For Charles Lloyd was not a genius. He had not even audacity, which does almost as well. He painted very nice pictures, true to nature; but who on earth is satisfied with nature? One might as well offer people uncooked meat.

Christmas came, and the ready money was gone. There were some pictures in the studio, but not any finished; however, finished or not, they must go. They packed them up, and sent them to Mr. Lloyd's picture dealer, with a note to say they would be willing to take a low price, as the pictures were unfinished, and they were the last they would ever be able to send—a touch of tragedy Janet thought they would feel. She added she would be happy to send some of her own drawings for their approval; and awaited their orders with the calm confidence of one who has not the faintest idea of the struggle for existence.

Incredible! impossible! It couldn't be true!

"Messrs. Pink & Son are returning the 'Woodland Scene' and the 'Morning Walk,' by Mr. Charles Lloyd, as they are sorry to say the pictures are unsalable in their present condition. They also beg to inform Miss Lloyd that they are unable at present to send her an order, as trade is very bad, and they have a large stock on hand."

Janet sat stupefied, with the letter in her hand. "Mother, the pictures are coming back! Pinks won't have them. What in the world are we to do?"

"Won't have them! Whatever do they mean?"

"I don't know; oh, I don't know—it's dreadful—it's dreadful to think of!" and she started up distracted.

Jack was kneeling on a chair, his elbows well on the table, and a newspaper before him. "Don't run away, Jenny; stop a minute. There's something here. Listen. 'To Artists—Wanted: Pictures for exportation. Price must be moderate. Apply, Moses & Co., Borough.'"

"Oh, Jack, let me see—how providential! What a magnificant opening! Why, they'll want dozens. Let's write at once; or perhaps we had better go, and then we can see them and get to know all about it, and buy the canvases and things." The reaction was tremendous. Janet felt abundantly happy.

"But, my dear, it's hardly the thing."

"Oh! with Jack it will be all right, mother; besides, we shall really not have to mind 'the thing' any more."

So Janet and Jack went, and they found "the Borough;" then they turned out of that, and up a court found "Moses & Co."

Talk about the improvement of taste! Whoever will buy all the tea trays, wax flowers, gorgeous time-pieces which those warehouses contain is a puzzle.

They were ushered into a little back office to interview the buyer.

"Pictures?" said he shortly. "Yes; well, I'll just look at them. I can tell at a glance whether they will do for us." He seemed very rude and abrupt; but if they had only known how tired the poor man was of pictures!

"There," said Janet, picking out two of her father's, and putting them up with some pride—they were so infinitely better than those in the room.

They all looked at them—a minute—the man doubtless lost in admiration. At last the girl looked round smiling, but there was no admiration to be seen; the man merely screwed up his lips and shook his head.

Presently he took up one of her own sketches—the worst a long way. "This might do; only it would want a deal more work in it."

"Certainly," she said anxiously. "I could put any amount of work into it. I don't mind work."

"Don't you? Then I dare say we shall come to terms. You must throw a bridge across the river."

"But there wasn't one."

"That doesn't matter; and you must put an old woman in a scarlet cloak in the foreground. Our customers like a bit of life; and the canvas wants covering. There's too much sky; they like it well filled up—plenty for the money. You might put a range of mountains in the background; it would be a great improvement, would—a mountain or two. What's your price?"

"I thought three guineas," she said, not liking to ask too much.

The man shook his head. "Forty-eight shillings is our price, and we never give a penny more to anybody."

The sister and brother looked anxiously at each other, but forty-eight shillings was better than nothing; it was rather a queer price, though.

"You find your own canvases?" said the man sharply.

"Of course."

"You had better sign them—not your own name, of course; besides, a lady's name wouldn't do. Sign them—er—let me see, our last man signed himself Montague White; suppose you call yourself Matthew—no, Mark Black; no, perhaps Black would hardly do just after White. Say—er—er—Barrett—Mark Barrett. Don't forget, and bring 'em in next week; forty-eight shillings, and find your own canvases."

"You want more than one, then? It is hardly the thing to do the same subject twice."

The man looked horrified at such unbusiness-like ideas. "It's a dozen I'm ordering, just for a sample—forty-eight shillings a dozen! and if I like them, you'll have to do dozens and dozens all alike."

"Oh!"

CHAPTER II.

March. Haverstock Hill. "Show day" among the artists. Carriages, critics, and well-dressed people going from studio to studio.

A rising young A. R. A., Mark Barrett, was looking at his own pictures before the arrival of his visitors, with that "divine discontent" which, unfortunately, is not very common among inflated young artists.

Some ladies came in—people he knew quite well and had sent cards to, but he couldn't for the life of him remember their names. He tried to make up for it in "gush." "So glad to see you. How kind of you to come!"

"Not at all; delighted! Dear, dear, how very nice!" and the elder lady put up her glasses. "What a very fine picture. Worthy of Millais, I declare!"

Mark Barrett went red, not with gratification—it was a portrait of a provincial mayor, and he had not put his best work into it, as he ought to have done.

More people came in; among others, some friends of the mayor. "How do you do, Mr. Barrett? Very happy to meet you again, sir. Saw you last in our council chamber. You remember me; Mr. Alderman Whitley, sir. Now let's have a look at our worthy mayor. Very good, very good; just like him, isn't it, my dear?" turning to his wife. "Eh?"

"Well, it's like him in the face," said the little woman, doubtfully; "but I think myself that the waistcoat buttons are a trifle too small."

"So they are, so they are. Trust a woman for telling you your faults, Mr. Barrett, eh?"

A city man came up to him. "I could have picked up one of your pictures for an old song the other day, Mr. Barrett," in a loud, cheerful voice, as if it was a good joke that all the room would like to hear—and perhaps they did.

"Indeed! what was it?"

"River scene; bridge, mountains, old woman in scarlet cloak. I should have bought it, being yours, only the frame was such a gimcrack affair."

"You are mistaken. I never did such a thing in my life."

"It had your name on it, I'm perfectly certain."

"What were they asking for it?"

"Five-and-twenty shillings."

"You must be mistaken," in deep disgust.

"Very well; if you don't believe me you can look for yourself. I have the address in my pocket."

Mark was so much annoyed that the very next day he made a pilgrimage to the city. He determined to get to the bottom of the mystery. Most likely it was a name that was something like his; but it might be a forgery, in which case he would have the fellow punished. He found the picture-dealer's—at least, it wasn't a picture-dealer's, it was a draper's—and there, sure enough, among oleographs and rubbish of all sorts, were three pictures, fearful things, signed "Mark Barrett."

However, the shopman directed him to Moses & Co., Borough.

He hurried on there; it was dinner-time, between twelve and one; only a boy in charge.

That was fortunate; he got the address without any trouble: Miss Janet Lloyd, Ivy Cottage, Hoxton, Surrey.

"A woman, after all. What pests those women are!"

CHAPTER III.

"Now, Jack, I'll put in the bridges while you follow with the old woman. We must hurry along. If we don't get these off tonight we shall be in a fix for money tomorrow."

"Well, never mind, Jinney; don't let's worry more than we can help. Do you think this old woman will do?"

"Ye—es; put plenty of color on and smooth it down well. Whatever would the public do without 'Mark Barrett's' works of art? I do hate calling myself 'Mark Barrett,'" signing the name in a corner as the door opened.

She didn't turn round—she was too busy—until their little servant said, "Mr. Mark Barrett, please, miss."

Poor, white, over-strung Jane dropped her palette "butter-side" down on the only decent carpet in the house as she turned, horror-struck, to face a gentleman—a Mark Barrett in the flesh. Curly-haired and blue-eyed certainly, but ferocious. She simply could not speak for a moment.

Even Jack was speechless; he turned very red and tried to stand in front of the pictures with the name on, but as there was a whole row of them all alike, the feat was beyond his powers.

Mark had come straight down from London in a furious rage. Every "pot-boiler" he had seen of poor Janet's only made him more angry.

He marched into the house as soon as the door was opened; it was quite possible such a person as that might lock him out; however, the little servant was evidently not up to it, and most fortunately showed him into the very room where the forgeries were going on.

There was the fictitious "Mark Barrett" herself—caught red-handed, literally red-handed; she had been signing the name in vermilion, and the palette in falling had smeared her hands. Mark was rather taken aback as he looked at the pale, trembling culprit, with her great horror-struck dark eyes. He looked at the row of wretched daubs, twelve of them all alike, and at Jack's red face, seedy trousers, and shrunken jacket, and his agonized attempts to hide the twelve sparing "Mark Barrets."

But it wouldn't do to give way to sentiment and have his judgment warped by a pretty face, like a British juryman in a breach of promise case. The very thought made him stern.

"I will not apologize for my intrusion," he said; "for I have no doubt you have some idea of the cause of my visit."

Janet, who would have broken down at a kind word, resented this unjust harshness.

"Perhaps you will be good enough to explain. I am not aware that I have done anything so very wrong."

Jack felt very angry. He was longing to defend his sister, but couldn't think of a telling speech. "Oh! to be a man—a cool, self-possessed man."

"Not done anything wrong, do you say, madam? Are you, then, so ignorant of right and wrong as not to know that you have committed the grossest forgery? Don't you know that it is actionable?"

The sister and brother looked at each other, not very clear as to what "actionable" meant. An idea flashed upon Jack. "You don't mean to say you are going to send my sister to prison, because it wasn't her that did it; it was me," he said, eagerly.

"No, no, Jack; that won't do. It was I, sir," turning proudly and contemptuously to Mark, "if you refer to my having signed what I suppose is your name. It is fortunate that I did not happen to sign 'John Brown,' or I might have had a hundred gentlemen threatening me instead of one."

"If you had signed your pictures"—sarcastic emphasis and wave of the hand toward the twelve—"'John Brown' it would have mattered very little, as that is not a well-known name."

"Indeed!"

"In the art world, I was about to add," furiously; "but it so happens that my name is rather well known, as no doubt you are aware."

"Indeed! I never had the pleasure of hearing it before."

"Indeed?" He really was surprised, and not much flattered.

"No, really, isn't it surprising? said Jack rudely—his clumsy way of defending his sister.

Mark colored up, but he was obliged to accept the extinguisher. He couldn't explain what a great man he was, from an artist's point of view.

"Well," said he, willing to be magnanimous, "since the offense has been committed in ignorance, I will not prosecute this time, on condition that you immediately obliterate all these"—pointing to the twelve names—"and call in all the—er—pictures you can possibly get hold of and re-sign them."

Jack whistled. "Think of Moses!" he suggested.

"I don't suppose the people who buy them will like that," said Janet. "They've got a trade for 'Mark Barretts', they say. I don't know what to do. Whatever shall we do, Jack?"

There was a despairing ring about the voice that struck Mark. She turned to him again. "If you would just let us send off this dozen it would give us time."

"Not another picture! You have done me incalculable injury already."

"I'm very sorry. Will you wait just a minute? I should like to consult my father. He was a painter himself, but last winter he became blind. That's the reason we have had to do all this," she said simply.

"Is it so?" sharply. This little key gave a clue to the whole situation, but he could hardly believe it yet, it was so different from his idea. He rose and opened the door for her, and was left alone with Jack.

Then there was an awkward pause. Jack, with his hands in his pockets, looked out of the window. He had no intention of being civil to this "brute." Mark looked at the pictures.

"Does your sister do many of these things?"

"A dozen or two a week."

"You don't say so. Why, she must work night and day."

"She does, pretty nearly."

"You shouldn't let her work so hard. She'll kill herself."

"Can't be helped. We've nothing else to live on," and he whistled to keep down tears unbecoming in a man.

More and more shocked and distressed, Mark ventured to hope they got a good price.

"Four shillings each, and find our own stuff."

A howl in the passage. "It's only the children," explained Jack.

"Are there some children?"

"Six of us, and father and mother. I say, I think you might have left 'Mark Barrett' alone. Perhaps you would if you knew everything."

"I am very sorry—very sorry, indeed! I didn't know all this, you see. Of course, I cannot possibly let your sister go on using my name; but if you will tell me all, perhaps I can help you a little."

But Janet came back into the room very grave and sad. Mark's heart smote him painfully. He vowed he wouldn't lose sight of this poor family. Janet apologized humbly for the mistake she had made, said how sorry her father was to hear of it, and he would like to see Mr. Barrett for a few minutes.

A few weeks later, when the Academy was getting stale, the town hot and wearisome, Mark Barrett felt it was really his duty to get a little country sketching before the spring tints quite faded away.

A day or two later, and he found himself looking out of a farm-house window not far from Ivy Cottage, and wondering if he might venture to call. The country is rather dull without any one to speak to—"a healthy grave," Sidney Smith called it. So not many days—in fact, only a few hours—elapsed before he was chatting comfortably with Mr. Lloyd, talking art, nay, "shop," soul-refreshing to the ex-artist, although so tedious to the "Philistine."

Mr. Lloyd was so delighted to meet with a brother of the brush again that he became quite confidential, told him about his own unfinished work, and what a pity it was. "You know Janet can paint in a fashion, but she can't do good enough work for that; besides, I am afraid the wretched things she seems to be doing now won't have improved her style. You've seen them, of course? Tell me, as an artist, are they really so very bad?"

"Those I saw were certainly rather—rather—crude, but perhaps she has something better in hand now. I should like to see what she is doing, if you think I might venture. Perhaps I could give her a few hints, you know."

"Thank you very much. I am sure we are grateful, and devoted to you for your clearance altogether; but come into the next room and I'll tell you what you think of their work."

Mark was surprised to find his heart beat strangely at this mild remark. "It must be a touch of indigestion," he impatiently assured himself; but he couldn't help feeling it was a moment that would stand out in his life when he held Janet's nervous hand in his for a second, and she glanced up at him with proud shame.

For ranged along the wall were twelve more pictures, exactly like the others—twelve ranges of mountains, twelve bridges, now in course of construction, and twelve old women awaiting their scarlet cloaks.

"Still busy, I see, Miss Lloyd."

"She's always busy," said her father, with a sigh. "I do wish she could get out a little more—not only for the sake of the fresh air, but I am sure if she does not get more sketching from nature her work will deteriorate."

"Mr. Barrett will tell you that that is impossible, father," said Janet, half in fun, half in sarcasm.

Mark colored a little. He could not deny that it was impossible for anything in the painting line to be much worse; but he caught a faint little sigh from Janet, and Jack looked out of the window with longing eyes.

"It's a jolly afternoon," he said. "I say, Jenny, don't you think we might drop it for once? There'll be such a breeze on Ripley Head."

Janet gave him a look. "We'll see when we have done our work, Jack."

Sighing not a little, but prodigiously, Jack took up the brush again. "That means 'never!'" he said. "These beasts will take hours."

Mark hesitated a minute before he descended to the bottom of the professional ladder. "If you will allow me to help you," he said presently, "I think we might finish in time for a walk before dusk. I am very anxious to see Ripley Head myself, and your father was kind enough to say you would show me the way," looking at Jack, "If Miss Lloyd would allow me the pleasure of accompanying you," looking at Janet.

"We shall be most happy," she said; "but I cannot think of troubling you with these. I dare say Jack and I can finish in two or three hours."

"But I enjoy painting, and I have nothing in the world to do this afternoon. Here, Jack, lend me a palette. I'll go on with the trees."

A month or two ago Mark wouldn't have believed it if he had seen himself now, diligently working in trees by the dozen, trying to ingratiate himself with an overgrown boy and maneuvering for a look from a "brazen forgerer."

The little maid brought them in some tea, and they worked away cheerily—Mr. Lloyd looking in now and then, enjoying the fresh life in the house.

When the sun was beginning visibly to sink, and the last old woman was fitted with her red cloak, the young people got ready for their walk.

Janet, from some undefinable instinct, put on her most becoming, though by no means her newest, hat, and plucked some scarlet geraniums for her neck, which burned bright against her black dress and pale face.

But not so pale. As they stood on Ripley Head, watching the sun quickly sinking on the horizon, long out of sight from the valleys, the reflection of the red and golden clouds wrapped the girl in a halo of glory. "What a wonderfully beautiful creature!" thought the artist, entranced with the "effect." She was by no means beautiful, but he thought her so, which was enough. It was sunrise for Janet, not sunset.

Jack had many a time helped his sister down the steep side of Ripley Head. He was going to do so now, of course (even the biggest of brothers are not very "sharp" where their sisters are concerned); but Mr. Barrett happened to be nearer, and offered his hand, and, though Jack was a dear boy, there was, strange to say, something firmer, and warmer, and closer in this grasp.

The mother, dulled perhaps by her troubles, was vexed with her daughter about this time. She was so unreasonable. She actually cried—not openly, but quietly and unseen, as she hoped—because she could not have a new gown, and Janet was foolish enough to spend a shilling on ribbons, which might have been much more profitably spent on stockings.

But Janet's instinct was right. Though nothing on earth will sunder souls that are fast and firmly knit, the merest trifle will turn aside the first inclination. Besides, to attract is a natural, healthy instinct, and to be attracted—why, no one would if they didn't like it.

One day it dawned even upon Jack's brotherly understanding that Janet was different somehow, and it wasn't only the geranium in her dress and ribbon at her waist.

They were painting as usual, and, as was now not unusual, Mr. Barrett was helping them, when the bungling, well-meaning brother struck in:

"You've been an awfully good friend to us, Mr. Barrett, especially to Janet and me—getting us orders and all that; but there's one thing you've done that I don't believe anybody's noticed but me, and that is, you've made a great alteration in Jenny."

"Nonsense, Jack, nothing of the kind!" she burst in, horrified as to what he would say next, her face almost as red as the geraniums.

Mark, standing by her, looked down on her, bit his lip, and began to wish Jack would go out of the room.

"I know what I'm talking about," said Jack, with the calm confidence of ignorance, and blundering like a big bluebottle fly; "she's as happy and cheerful as anything now, and I know it's you, because she's so disappointed when you don't come."

"Jack, be quiet—it's all nonsense. Don't be silly!"

"She was very down at first about the name, you know, and Moses was very mad with her because she wouldn't sign 'Mark Barrett' any more."

"Of course not! I shouldn't think of such a thing," she burst in passionately, "after all you said," turning to Mark. "You may be sure I shall never make use of your name again."

"Won't you?" he returned. "Do you know, I was rather beginning to hope you would."

In great surprise Janet looked at him, but something in his eyes made her drop hers.

"With a little addition," he said, in a lower tone.

"Oh, my!" struck up Jack, enlightened at last. "I never thought of that. Here, I'll go and get some dinner—tea, I mean. You can come when you're ready."

PROF. ROBERTSON says that if a man were to start an iron rod whirling on one of its ends in a dark room, slowly at first, and gradually increasing in speed until it attained 400,000,000,000 revolutions a second, a dim light becomes visible in the gloom, changing into a yellow, a green, a blue, and, last of all, a violet, and the heat becomes intense. This seems like a very interesting experiment, but unless a man has his house fully insured he should not try it. The intense heat might set fire to the building.—Norristown Herald.

A Son to Be Proud Of.

A woman who lives near Hartford was left years ago a widow with two young children and almost nothing to live on. She had to give a mortgage of $500 before she could become the owner of the little house they occupied. In order to get money for daily expenses she had to take in washing. One of her boys has lately become 21 years old. About ten years ago a friend gave him $5, which he put in the Pratt Street Bank. The boy himself has been working for years past in a mill. He has dressed neatly at his own expense, and has regularly paid his mother for his board. Besides this he has laid away his savings in the Pratt Street Bank until the $5 has become $400, and he has paid $50 for insurance on his life. He has also in the course of these years let his mother have about $200 in money, and now, being of age, he is about to assume the mortgage of $500, which has been a burden to her.—Hartford Courant.

THE HAPPINESS OF ELYSIUM.

Elysium was the name given by the ancient Greeks to the resting place of the righteous dead, where they should enjoy eternal peace and happiness. None but the pure in heart, the truthful and generous could tread the asphodel meadows of the Elysian fields, and it was a land of everlasting delight. When, therefore, Mrs. Kate Sherman, of Strentor, Ill., said recently that she had been in Elysium, though of course she spoke figuratively, it argued that some great good fortune and joy had come to her. And such, indeed, was the truth. Mrs. Sherman tells how it was in this way:

"I have suffered from inflammatory rheumatism for more than thirty years. Heretofore the pain would succumb to the application of hot wet flannel, but at my last attack circumstances had conspired to aggravate the disease, and I became helpless. My hands and feet were swollen enormously, and I suffered almost mortal agony. My physician bought me a bottle of Athlophoros. After taking the third dose I was in Elysium, and was free from pain. By the time I had taken a bottle and a half I felt so wonderfully improved that I discontinued the medicine. I have an ungovernable dislike to all medicine, but I will say that Athlophoros probably saved my life, as I was running down rapidly, and could not have endured the pain much longer. It afforded me the only relief I ever experienced except from hot water, and that had failed me."

The Rev. Samuel Porter, of Crete, Ill., says of the effect of Athlophoros upon his wife:

"Mrs. Porter was very much benefited by the first bottle. Before she commenced taking it she could not walk, she was so badly afflicted with rheumatism, but she was soon able to walk. She sleeps well. Mr. John Hews, our neighbor, was very badly off with the rheumatism last winter, and was not able to work or even to get out of his room. One bottle of Athlophoros cured him, but he has to keep it by him to take when he feels his old difficulties."

Another clergyman, the Rev. C. Hartley, of Huntley, Ill., gives this as his experience with the remedy:

"For six months I suffered severely from an attack of rheumatism. A friend sent me a notice of several reliable cures effected by Athlophoros. I procured the medicine, and less than one bottle completely cured me, and I have not had the least indication of a return of the painful disease. I have recommended it to others, and results similar to those in my own case have followed. I regard Athlophoros as invaluable."

A. M. Blakney, who lives at the corner of Union and Green streets, Decatur, Ill., only confirms the general testimony to the value of Athlophoros when he says:

"During the past winter I was stricken with a very severe attack of rheumatism—a disease with which I had been afflicted for several years—and was rendered almost helpless, and confined to my bed. I tried various medicines, and was prescribed for by physicians with no avail. Finally I was induced by my druggist to try Athlophoros. I was relieved and cured so quickly that words could not tell my surprise. I do not hesitate in recommending it to any one suffering with that most painful complaint, rheumatism."

If you can not get ATHLOPHOROS of your druggist we will send it, express paid, on receipt of regular price—one dollar per bottle. We prefer that you buy it from your druggist, but if he haven't it, do not be persuaded to try something else, but order at once from us, as directed. ATHLOPHOROS Co., 112 Wall street, New York.

Uses of Coal Ashes.

A friend of mine, years ago, had some currant bushes from which he was able to harvest scarcely any fruit. The borer was the destroyer. His neighbors had long before given up their bushes, as they deemed it impossible to grow a crop. My friend conceived the idea of spreading coal ashes about the bushes, and the results surprised none more than himself, for, from that day to this, have the borers left him coldly alone, and every season his bushes bear fruit in plenty. Our own currant and gooseberry bushes have similar treatment, and we grow fruit most successfully. We have found coal ashes equally effective as a preventive against borers in other cases. A plentiful mixture of ashes with soil has kept the radish maggot from our radish bed, so that we have an abundance of good vegetables.

Another excellent place where coal ashes may be well used is on the dirt walk. Few unstoned walks are better than the well-made ash walk, for it is solid and retains its form under most trying circumstances. Where coal ashes are spread on the walk we have found less weeds to grow, and a better path as a result. In between cobblestones placed for paving ashes make a fine packing.

As a fertilizer coal ashes practically have no value.

YES, Laura, you can excel in newspaper work. A girl makes just as good a reporter as a man. A great deal better, in fact. But then you will labor under some disadvantage, being a girl. When you are writing up a county fair, for instance, you can't smoke in the eyes of the good old lady who peeps over your shoulder to see what you are saying about her canned pears and home-made bread, and you can't very well prod a class superintendent in the ribs with a pencil and call him Say, and you can't sit on the parapet of the grand stand and let your feet hang over during the races. And you can't play billiards and drink beer. Oh, you can? Well, then, you'd better forget how, if you're going to be a reporter, else you'll never have time to do anything else.—E. J. Burdette.

Important.

When you visit or leave New York City, save baggage, expressage, and $3 carriage hire, and stop at the Grand Union Hotel, opposite Grand Central Depot.

G13 rooms, fitted up at a cost of one million dollars, $1 and upwards per day. European plan. Elevator. Restaurant supplied with the best. Horse cars, stages, and elevated railroad to all depots. Families can live better for less money at the Grand Union Hotel than at any other first-class hotel in the city.

No Boon That Science Has Conferred

Has been fraught with greater blessings than that which has accrued to the inhabitants of malaria-ridden portions of the United States and the Tropics from the use of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. The experience of many years has but too clearly demonstrated the inefficiency of quinine and other drugs to effectually combat the progress of intermittent, congestive, and bilious remittent fevers; while, on the other hand, it has been no less clearly shown that the use of the Bitters—a medicine congenial to the frailest constitution, and derived from purely botanic sources—affords a reliable safeguard against malarial disease, and arrests it when developed. For disorders of the stomach, liver, and bowels, for general debility and renal inactivity, it is also a most efficient remedy. Appetite and sleep are improved by it; it expels rheumatic humors from the blood, and enriches a circulation impoverished by mal-assimilation.

Fashionable Bonnets.

"My dear," said Mrs. Squildig, "I want a new bonnet."

"Of course you do," said Squildig; "but isn't the one you have good yet?"

"It's good enough of its kind, but I want a felt bonnet. They are coming into style again."

"Oh, that's certainly a mistake."

"Why is it a mistake? What do you know about the fashion in bonnets?"

"Why, I know that ladies object to having their bonnets felt. They'd rather have them seen."

Then Mrs. Squildig laughed a diplomatic little laugh and got the money for her bonnet.—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

DONN PIATT is writing an interesting series of "Tales of Labor" in John Swinton's Paper. Speaking of the sudden death of a Senator he writes: "The remote cause of his death was attributed to Washington malaria that is said to float over the national capital and kill the Solons. The fact is that the fatal malaria did not float at all. It is in perpetual solution, and well bottled. It is composed of cheap champagne and doctored whisky, and kills on sight."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

The Great German Physician.

The remarkable phase in the practice of Dr. Peter W. Schmidt (frequently called Dr. Pete) is, he never asked one to describe their disease but tells each one their trouble without asking a question. His success is phenomenal. His practice enormous. He is sought after by hundreds wherever he goes, because he cures when every other physician and remedy have failed. He has allowed his great medicines, Golden Seal Bitters and Lung Fluel for Consumption, to be offered to the suffering, and we assert without fear of successful contradiction that there is no disease they will not cure. Thousands of bottles have been sold. Thousands of broken-down and discouraged invalids saved. Send to Golden Seal Bitters Company, Holland City, Mich., for Facts for the Million! Free.

Rescued from Death.

William J. Coughlin, of Somerville, Mass., says: "In the fall of 1876 I was taken with Bleeding of the Lungs, followed by a severe cough. I lost my appetite and flesh, and was confined to my bed. In 1877 I was admitted to the Hospital. The doctors said I had a hole in my lung as big as a half-dollar. At one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of DR. WILLIAM HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS. I got a bottle, which, to my surprise, I commenced to get better, and to-day I feel better than for three years."

A QUESTION ABOUT Brown's Iron Bitters ANSWERED.

The question has probably been asked thousands of times, "How can Brown's Iron Bitters cure everything?" Well, it doesn't. But it does cure any disease for which a reputable physician would prescribe IRON. Physicians recognize Iron as the best restorative agent known to the profession, and inquiry of any leading chemical firm will substantiate the assertion that there are more preparations of Iron than of any other substance used in medicine. This shows conclusively that Iron is acknowledged to be the most important factor in successful medical practice. It is, however, a remarkable fact, that prior to the discovery of BROWN'S IRON BITTERS no perfectly satisfactory Iron combination had ever been found. BROWN'S IRON BITTERS does not injure the teeth, cause headache, or produce constipation—all other Iron medicines do. BROWN'S IRON BITTERS cures Indigestion, Biliousness, Weakness, Dyspepsia, Malaria, Chills and Fevers, Tired Feeling, General Debility, Pain in the Side, Back or Limbs, Headache and Neuralgia—for all these ailments Iron is prescribed daily. BROWN'S IRON BITTERS, however, does not cure in a minute. Like all other thorough medicines, it acts slowly. When taken by men the first symptom of benefit is renewed energy. The muscles then become firmer, the digestion improves, the bowels are active. In women the effect is usually more rapid and marked. The eyes begin at once to brighten; the skin clears up; healthy color comes to the cheeks; nervousness disappears; functional derangements become regular, and if a nursing mother, abundant sustenance is supplied for the child. Remember Brown's Iron Bitters is the ONLY iron medicine that is not injurious. Physicians and Druggists recommend it.

Around the County.

The Proposed Location Discussed.

East Jordan, March 22, 1886.

EDITOR JOURNAL,—The Sentinel man is as unfortunate in his mapping ability as in his ability to state the truth in any other way on the county seat question. When he writes upon it, he writes much that is either vague hyperbole or naked lie, and his map of Boyne City, published last week, is of the character of his writings, and got up specially to deceive, as any one may learn by examining the plats on record. Boyne City with its additions, or what is officially called South Boyne, extends to nearly the south line of section 35, whereas, lot 1 is bounded on the north by the north line of that section, making nearly a mile as the bird flies and much more by the lake shore. If the Sentinel map means anything, it means that the part colored black is the place where they wish to locate the county building. Now, Mr. Editor, that is in the swamp to the north of the village plat. It has not been platted, as the record will show; nor have the blocks that the Sentinel's map shows to the north and northwest of that been platted. The Sentinel does not say which of these black spots is the spot; it is then perhaps most fair to measure by what is marked out as a street to run between them, and measured by that street it would be nearly seventy rods north of the river, while the center of the village is a long way to the south of it. The facts are that but a very little lot 1 is platted; that there are but few inhabitants upon it, and it is not probable that there will be, because the village has grown southward instead of northward It is owned by a man living in another part of the state who has not identified himself with the interests of this county, but on the contrary, he, with a few others, have been stirring up this county-seat quarrel for years, and trying to create the ill feeling which the Sentinel man hypocritically professes to deplore.

The Sentinel's map has an arrow on it. Arrows on maps invariably point north, as everybody knows; but the Sentinel's points east. Is this more deception or is it stupidity?

But the real question is, why should we move the county seat? It is now nearer the center of population and center of business than it would be if moved to the place shown on the map. Nearly all the official business and litigation arises in the western and southwestern part of the county, which can more easily reach this place than Boyne City. It is now costing the county nothing. It is now in the hands of the people, and they can call up the question at any time and vote upon it when a railroad through the county shall determine where the proper place for the county seat is. Whereas, if moved, it will be in the hands of the supervisors from the sparsely settled eastern end of the county whom the Boyne City managers profess to be carrying around in their vest pockets. B.

Boyne City.

Boyne City, March 22, 1886.

EDITOR JOURNAL,—I observe that there a considerable misunderstanding on the part of many people in Charlevoix county, relative to the eligibility of the site proposed for the county buildings in Boyne City, whenever the county may see fit to build them, should the county seat be removed to this place. The proposed site is on a terrace two and one half blocks distant from the lake, its minimum elevation being six feet above the lake, extending, with a gradual rise to the east, to a maximum elevation of from fifteen to twenty feet. Its drainage is natural and is excelled in this respect by no other site that might be selected for this purpose in the county. Not only is this true, but the two principal streets of the village for business and for residences, are laid out so as to pass parallel between this terrace and the lake, and though much lower than the terrace, are as eligible for building as could be desired. I don't see what's the use of girls signing the pledge and joining temperance societies and such things," said pretty Minnie Proctor the other day, as she tossed back her head and seated herself at the piano. "Girls never drink, anyway; it's only men and rough boys."

"Guess your education's been neglected in that direction, Min," said her brother Harry. "Girls ought to sign the pledge if for nothing else than to help them keep from offering wine to callers on New Year's day! Lots of 'em either drink, or help to make men drink, and I guess they need a pledge as much as men and boys do."

"Oh, well, I suppose some of the rich ones do, where they have wine in the house all the time," returned Minnie, "but we don't have it. What do I want to sign the pledge for?"

"The time may come when you'll need it as much as Harry ever will," said Uncle Fred looking up from his paper. "I am not sure but that women are in almost as much danger now-a-days as men. I've just been reading something to the point in the morning paper. Listen:

"Yesterday morning about 2 o'clock, a drunken women was found half-dead in the refuse race near the gas works. She was under the influence of liquor and had fallen into the ditch while walking about looking for more of the stuff."

"Even though you may never be tempted to drink or to put the cup to the lips of another," continued Uncle Fred, "you ought to put your name to the pledge. It might influence some one else to do the same thing, who would otherwise yield some day to temptation, and get as low as this drunken woman who lay in the ditch yesterday morning. Don't always think of yourself, when such matters come before you. Learn to act for the good of others."

Minnie Proctor's name looked up from the pledge after that day, sending out its influence in favor of total abstinence. Did you ever think, girls, how much it may mean just to have your name written where it will cast great influence for good?—W. N. B. in the Royal Road.

MORTGAGE SALE.

WHEREAS, default has been made in the payment of the money secured by a mortgage, made and dated the tenth day of September, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-four, executed by Henning Frizzell to the Pine Lake Iron Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, and doing business in the County of Charlevoix, in the State of Michigan, which mortgage was recorded in the office of the register of deeds of the said County of Charlevoix, in Liber 11 of mortgages at page 11, on the 18th day of April in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-five, at one o'clock in the afternoon, and the same is now owned by the said Pine Lake Iron Company. And whereas the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice is the sum of Fifty-Five Dollars and Twenty-two cents, principal and interest, which sum is a part of the purchase price of the premises herein described, and a further sum of fifteen dollars provided by law as an attorney's fee in the foreclosure of said mortgage, which is the whole amount claimed to be due and unpaid on said mortgage, and no suit or proceedings at law or in chancery having been instituted to recover the debt now remaining secured by the said mortgage or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained in the said mortgage has become operative.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises herein described at public auction to the highest bidder, at the front door of the Town Hall, in the township of South Arm, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, which is the place of holding the circuit court for said county, on Friday, the 2d day of April next, at twelve o'clock meridian, which premises are described in the said mortgage as follows, to wit: Lots twenty (20) and twenty-one (21) in block number twelve (12) in the Pine Lake Iron Co.'s plat of Ironton, town of Evelue, county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan.

Dated December 30th, A. D. 1885.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the condition of a certain mortgage, made by Mary Blackbird to John A. Bacot, dated October 3d, A. D. 1884, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, for the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, on the 3d day of October, A. D. 1884, in liber 9 of mortgages, on page 522, which said mortgage was on the 22d day of December, 1884, assigned by said John A. Bacot to Frederick W. Mayne, said assignment being on record in the Registers office for Charlevoix county, in liber 10 of mortgages on page 610, and on the 14th day of December 1885, was assigned by said Frederick W. Mayne to Hugh Miller, said assignment being recorded in the Registers office for Charlevoix county, in liber 15 of mortgages, on page 146, on which mortgage there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of Two hundred dollars, and sixty-five cents, as principal and interest, and no suit or proceedings at law having been instituted to recover the moneys secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof. Now, therefore, by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and the statute in such case made and provided, notice is hereby given that on Saturday, the 19th day of June A. D. 1886, at one o'clock in the afternoon, I shall sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door of the town hall in the village of East Jordan, (that being the place where the Circuit Court for Charlevoix County is holden,) the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the amount due on said mortgage, with ten per cent interest, and all legal costs, together with an attorney's fee of fifteen dollars, covenanted for therein, the premises being described in said mortgage as all that parcel of land, situate in the township of Hayes, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, and known and described as follows: The south west quarter (¼) of the south west quarter (¼) of section thirty-six (36) township thirty four (34) north of range seven (7) west, containing forty acres according to the United States survey.

Dated Charlevoix, Mich., March 15, 1886.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Whereas default has been made in the payment of the money secured by a mortgage dated the 12th day of November, in the year A. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-one, executed by Mary A. Thomas to John Frenz, which mortgage was recorded in the office of the register of deeds, of the county of Charlevoix, in the state of Michigan, in liber 6 of mortgages at page 494, on the 29th day of November, in the year A. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-one, at two o'clock in the afternoon of said day. And whereas the said mortgage has been duly assigned by the said John Frenz, to Daniel Head, by instrument of assignment bearing date the 10th day of May, in the year A. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-two, and recorded in the office of the register of deeds of said county of Charlevoix, on the 14th day of July in the year A. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-three, at two o'clock in the afternoon of said day, in liber 9 of mortgages, at page 101, and the same is now owned by the said Daniel Head. And whereas the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice, is the sum of Thirteen Hundred and seventy two dollars and seven y cents ($1,372.70) principal and interest, and a further sum of thirty dollars ($30), provided by law as an attorney fee in the foreclosure of said mortgage which is the whole amount claimed to be due and unpaid on said mortgage, and no suit or proceeding at law or in chancery having been instituted to recover the debt now remaining secured by the said mortgage, or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described at public auction to the highest bidder, at the front door of the Town Hall, in the township of South Arm, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, which is the place of holding the circuit court for said county, on Wednesday, the 19th day of May, 1886, at twelve o'clock meridian, which premises are described in the said mortgage as follows, to wit: Lot three (3), and the south one-half (½) of the south-west one-quarter (¼) of section seventeen (17), in township thirty-three (33) north, range seven (7) west, in the county of Charlevoix and state of Michigan, and containing in all one hundred and forty-five and twenty-five one-hundredths acres of land, according to the United States survey thereof, excepting, however, the north one-half (½) of the southwest one-quarter (¼) of the southwest one-quarter (¼) of said section seventeen (17), and also excepting lots number two (2), three (3), four (4), five (5), six (6), seven (7), eight (8), and fifteen (15), in Schoffen's addition to the village of Ironton, according to the recorded plat thereof, which have been released from said mortgage by the assignee thereof.

Dated February 11th, A. D 1886.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the payment of the money secured by a certain mortgage, dated the thirtieth day of October, 1883, executed by Benjamin Walker and Maria Walker, his wife, of Charlevoix county, Michigan, to Josiah E. Harding, of Allegan county, Michigan, which said mortgage was recorded in the office of the register of deeds of Charlevoix county, in liber 9 of mortgages, on page 164, on the 31st day of October, A. D. 1883, and whereas the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice is the sum of three hundred and forty-six dollars, and no suit or proceeding having been instituted at law, or in equity, to recover the debt now remaining secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof, and whereas, in and by the conditions of said mortgage it is provided that should any default be made in the payment of the interest due thereon, or any part thereof, on any day whereon the same is made payable, and should the same remain unpaid and in arrears for the space of thirty days, the principal sum together with all arrearages of interest thereon shall at the option of the said obligee or his assigns become due and payable immediately thereafter, and whereas, default has been made in the payment of the interest due on the principal sum on the day when the same became due; and whereas said interest has remained unpaid and in arrears for the space of over thirty days; the said Josiah E. Harding, has elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole amount of said mortgage, principal and interest, due and payable, whereby the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative. Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described, at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door of the Town Hall, in village of East Jordan, in the county of Charlevoix, Michigan, (that being the place where the Circuit Court is holden in said county), on the 27th day of April, 1886, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon of that day, which said premises are described in said mortgage as follows: The west half of the southeast quarter of section seventeen, in township thirty-four north, of range seven west, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan.

A Trip to the Tropics.

VII.

In the towns on the coast, as Port Morant, the negro becomes remarkably expert in swimming, and not even his dread of sharks will keep him out of the water. A favorite amusement is to clip the wings of a duck or other water fowl, and giving it a fair start, swim and catch it, which can only be accomplished by diving a long distance from the bird, and taking it unawares from below. Throw a small silver coin in the water and they will dive and secure it before it reaches the bottom. But the crowning amusement is to extend a spar about thirty feet over the water, at an elevation of fifteen feet, the spar is given a coat of grease, and the prize placed at its end, over the water; the gymnastics incident to the attempts to walk the greased pole and the plunges from the pole into the water can be more easily imagined than described.

Putting on our way into the interior on horse back, we arrive at Bath. Here are extensive botanical gardens, with trees and flowers from every tropical country; pilfering a chip from a camphor tree and cutting a rattan switch for our horse, we proceed to the hot springs. Out of a seam in the rock, sulphur water at a temperature of 128° is pouring; and out of the same rock not six feet away, is a spring of clear, cold water. Adjacent to these springs is a sanitarium, much visited as a health resort. There are many caves in this part of the island, some of which are very extensive. The various apartments are designated grottoes, halls, domes, and galleries; and the transparent stalactites and stalagmites formed by the dripping of calcareous water, glittering in the torch-light, impart a magical effect to the scene. Some of these cayerns are the outlets for the interior rivers, and contain lakes of considerable demension; others are infested with "myriads of millions" of bats.

Leaving Bath we ride for many miles through the "Blue mountain valley," one of the most beautiful and fertile districts on the island. Arriving at Trinityville we exchange our horses for the surer footed mules, leave the road and take the bridle paths into the mountains. On our right, Nigger river, with its thousand little cascades formed by immense boulders which have been cast into its bed from the mountains which tower above us; on our left, the sides of these mountains are dotted here and there with coffee plantations. The coffee grown on one of these estates, is considered the best in the world, and is reserved by Queen Victoria. At May Hall we take a lesson in coffee and cinchona planting. Growing cinchona or quinine, is a new industry and an important one. The government offers inducements to planters, and many ambitions, young Johnny Bulls from the mother country have buried themselves in these hills, and are counting the time that must pass before they can send in their invoice of bark and receive the promised ten dollars per pound.

Coffee when picked is first put through the pulping machine, which breaks the parchment around the berry, and separates the kernels. It is allowed to ferment, then washed and spread on the "barbecues" after being thoroughly cured it is put through the grinder, where the parchment skin is taken off, and then through the fanning mill. It is next placed in the sizen, a revolving screen that separates it into four grades, and lastly served out on picking tables where all the deformed berries are removed, placed in sacks of 112 lbs. each, and ready for shipping.

After reaching a height of 3000 or 4000 feet, a sharp turn, and a break in the mountains, discovers the most beautiful view we have ever seen. It is a vast amphitheater, formed by the Port Royal mountains and Delsi Domar 6400 feet high. Thousands of feet below us, is White river and the little hamlet of "Obern Lawn." Rising out of the center of this valley, is a hill about six hundred feet high; near the top of this hill is the old stone mansion of the Arntully coffee estate, and on the pinnical of the hill, which forms a perfect cone, is a beautiful little summer house.

According to the botanists, there are seven hundred varieties of ferns in these mountains they are all around us from the smallest specimen an inch long to the graceful and beautiful fern tree, fifty feet high. Arriving at Farm Hill, cinchona plantation, our path is blocked by an almost perpendicular wall two thousand feet high, covered with a dense growth of tropical vegetation. In this cooler atmosphere we find strawberries and raspberries, together with begonias and other beautiful flowers growing in profusion. In the struggle up this wall known as "Jacob's Ladder," our only comfort is a delicate little instrument called the Android which registers every foot as we ascend, and cheers us as we find we are nearing the summit. At length we see an opening where neither trees nor shrubs are growing. Our weary limbs, broken shoes and tattered clothing is forgotten; for this is the goal of our ambition, which from its exposed position has been swept of all large vegetation leaving an unobstructed view, and a grand view it is; well worth the effort it has cost us. One hundred miles to the westward, extend the Blue, Port Royal, and Cuna Cuna mountain ranges, and forty miles to the eastward over a district, rich with sugar and coffee plantations, can be seen the blue water of the sea. Far away to the north are Cuba and Hayti, and dim clouds in the distance, while below us are numerous rivers winding through the Blue mountain valley until they empty in the bays along the coast.

The True Use of Money.

But very few young people know the true use for the money they earn. It is first to pay for subsistence; second in aid to those needing charity; third, and last, as a source of income or accumulation. To spend money for any other purpose is to waste it. Everything purchased should be of real and substantial value, convertible into other and greater value if possible. No one can afford to give his time and genius to earning money and then expend what he has earned for that which is not substantial. Far better is it to accumulate and hold one's earnings until the time for death comes, and then turn it over to some worthy charity, where it may do good for the unfortunate. Every one can earn enough and more than enough to meet all his wants and needs if they be as moderate as they should be, and if he finds he has a surplus, which he is certain of, he can bestow it upon those who have been unfortunate. In expending money the young man should always ask himself—"do I need this?" He should not ask "do I want this?" Wants are, too often, the children of children. There is nothing manly in giving away to desires and being governed by them. To do so is to become the slave of morbid appetite. How many men, in the evening of their days looking back can see that they have earned millions of dollars, even, and yet have not managed to save to themselves a single hundred. It is this which embitters the close of a life. The man sees that he has been not only less frugal than he should have been, but wasteful. His hard-earned money has slipped out of his hands in driblets as fast as he could earn it. He has spent it for useless things. He has even damaged his health in indulgencies which were poisonous to his physical and mental systems. When a young man secures employment he should firmly resolve—"out of my earnings all necessary expenses shall be paid. The remainder I will rigidly reserve for future uses in the same direction." We aver that all young men will meet a period when $500 would prove the first step to a competence to support them in old age. Then it should be the aim of every mechanic or other industrial to secure that sum. It may take two or three years to secure it. If so, all the more reason for securing it. Money to one so long accumulating such a sum is of far greater value to him than to one who gets it ahead in one year. But, above all, the pursuit of this course makes a better citizen and a better man, in all respects, of the one engaged in it, than does the so-called "liberal and open-hearted generous" life. The latter is the life of a spendthrift who becomes besmirched with all the evils of humanity, and too often ending in wreck, ruin and disgrace. The "popularity" is among his own class, and not worth having.—Albany Press and Knickerbocker

Concise Record of the Week.

EASTERN.

The will of Senator Chaffee, made before the Grant & Ward failure, has been found. It gives $500,000 to Mrs. U. S. Grant, Jr., and $300,000 to other relatives.

One stroke of lightning at Waterton, Conn., demolished a house and instantly killed Sarah and Eliza McGaffey.

Louise Blackman, a school-teacher, of Ocean County, New Jersey, whipped with a birch rod a politician and cranberry raiser by the name of Emson, whom she charged with slandering she.

Neal Dow, the Maine Prohibitionist, celebrated his eighty-second birthday by a family gathering at Portland.

Owing to the loss of the Oregon, the Cunard Company has abandoned the running of fast weekly steamers between Boston and Liverpool.

A huge bald eagle undertook to carry an 8-year-old boy from the farm of Joseph Davis, at Manheim, New York, but was foiled by laborers.

At a meeting of the Presidents of the anthracite coal companies it was unanimously agreed that the total output of coal this year should not exceed 33,500,000 tons.

Ald. Jachne, of New York, has been released from prison on bail.

WESTERN.

A signal service station has been permanently located at Centralia, Ill., which, it is stated, will result in much benefit to fruit-growers and others.

The body of Florence Ruger, the daughter of ex-Senator Ruger, of Chicago, who disappeared some months ago, was found in the Chicago River the other day.

The basis of a settlement of the strike on the Missouri Pacific Road, as drawn up by Governor Marmaduke, of Missouri, and Governor Martin, of Kansas, and accepted by Vice President Hoxie, was rejected by the Knights of Labor of St. Louis. The latter adopted resolutions asserting that the corporations of the country are acting in concert to break down the power of labor organizations, and thereby ruin the country; that the refusal of representatives of corporations to treat with the representatives of labor is a silly subterfuge; and calling on all trades assemblies and labor organizations in the land to unite in a demand for recognition of their representatives and their right to negotiate, treat, and deal with individuals or bodies, as the case may be. The Knights issue a statement to the public, closing as follows:

> But why should we say more? If Mr. Hoxie did not know that he was guilty of gross wrong and injustice why would he refuse to listen to our evidence and hear our appeal for redress? Why would he shelter himself behind subterfuges and technicalities? Why should he refuse to treat with the men he has wronged; and with evasive letters to governors who cannot possibly enter into the merits of the controversy. The truth is simply this: Mr. Hoxie wants trouble. He has provoked it. He is still inciting it, and making an innocent public pay the price of his perfidy. How long will the public consent for Gould and Hoxie thus to rule or ruin? We wait to see.

A Kansas City dispatch says: "At 9 o'clock this morning (22d) a general sounding of locomotive whistles signaled the inauguration of another strike. At that hour the union switchmen in every railroad yard in the city quit work, and freight business generally was stopped. Business at the stock yards is about suspended, and on the Board of Trade wheat dropped two cents in as many seconds. At present the cause of the strike cannot be learned. Some of the men say, 'We had orders from the headquarters of the Knights of Labor.' The switchmen made a general demand for an advance in wages a week ago of the various roads, and it was granted."

Phil Kumler, District Attorney at Cincinnati, acting under orders of Solicitor General Goode, on the 23d of March filed in the Federal Court at Columbus, a suit to test the validity of the Bell telephone patents, citing the defendants to enter appearance by May 1.

Insurance agents claim that the losses by fire in Chicago last year consumed more money than was paid in premiums.

Should the citizens of St. Joseph, Mo., subscribe $200,000 toward the stock of the Chicago, Kansas and Nebraska Road, the Rock Island Company will at once commence the building of four hundred miles of track on its Kansas extension.

No indictment was found against Henry T. Wright, formerly Assistant Postmaster at Racine, who was sentenced to five years' imprisonment in the penitentiary at Chester, Illinois, for embezzling $5,000 of Government funds. Since the decision in the Mackin case by the Federal Supreme Court, steps have been taken to secure Wright's release.

A. M. Billings, of Chicago, is said to have secured absolute control of the St. Louis, Kansas City and Colorado Railroad Company, in the interest of the Atchison and Topeka, which will soon commence work on a northern extension to St. Louis.

The flour output at Minneapolis last week reached 90,000 barrels, against 81,000 barrels the preceding week. The decline in wheat has stopped the free movement of flour.

Near Walker, Iowa, a man named Armstrong rushed in front of a train, placed his head on the rails, and was beheaded by the wheel.

SOUTHERN.

The Fitzgerald boat company of Lincoln, Neb., won the last prize in the firemen's contest at New Orleans.

The party of white men who last fall left New Orleans to work on the Panama Canal have returned, and complain that Consul General Adamson gave them no assistance. Within two weeks nearly twenty-five hundred negroes will be shipped to the Isthmus.

A conflagration at Helena, Ark., originating in the Eagle Block, destroyed the opera house, the postoffice, the dry goods store of S. Seelig, and numerous other establishments. The loss is estimated at $225,000.

The will of Thomas S. Surell, of New Orleans, has just been admitted to probate. It developed the fact that the deceased left a fortune of over $8,000,000 to two daughters, one of them Mrs. Richard D. Kerby. The estate includes some valuable property in Chicago.

A fire in New Orleans destroyed nine residences in the vicinity of Baronne and Washington streets.

Three negroes were lynched at Auburn, Ky., for assaulting the daughter of a prominent citizen of that place.

WASHINGTON.

Ex-Congressman Casey Young, of Tennessee, testified before the telephone investigating committee at Washington that not a word had ever been said about the associates in the Pan-Electric Company using their official influence or taking advantage of their official position to accomplish anything for the company. No man had ever said a word that could be construed into an intention to do anything corrupt or improper. Van Benthuysen had asked witness why he did not get Garland to bring suit against the Bell Company. Witness replied that Garland was a member of his company; its counsel, and witness would not do it. Mr. Young referred to Mr. Rogers' statement of the conversation in which witness was reported as saying that Attorney General Garland had consented to bring suit against the Bell Company. He asserted that the Doctor had been in error as to the conversation. "I am positive that I never told Rogers that Attorney General Garland had agreed to bring suit against the Bell Company to annul their patent," said Mr. Young, emphatically.

The Secretary of the Treasury has issued a call for $10,000,000 three per cent. bonds of 1882.

In his testimony before the telephone investigating committee at Washington, on March 22, ex-Congressman Casey Young, witness, said he never offered to sell or give a share of Pan-Electric stock to a Senator or member of Congress. They (the company) did not dream that Congress would ever have anything to do with the telephone—that legislation would ever result. Mr. Van Benthuysen wrote to witness that he was going to have a government suit brought if he could under the law, whether Mr. Garland belonged to the company or not. He was going to make Mr. Garland bring suit, he said. If Mr. Garland refused to do it he would go to the President about it. Subsequently witness took Mr. Van Benthuysen and his counsel over to introduce them to the Attorney General. One of the counsel told Mr. Garland what they had come for. Mr. Garland said that he was interested in a telephone company and could not talk to them about it. The counsel insisted and Mr. Garland said: "Gentlemen, I cannot talk to you on that subject. I am the attorney of a telephone company and cannot talk to you."—Mr. Van Benthuysen said: "I have a right to have the suit brought. If the law requires you to bring suit I will see that it is brought." Mr. Garland replied, "I cannot talk to you," whereupon they retired. The interview lasted about five minutes and took place some time between July 30 and August 30. Mr. Van Benthuysen said he would go to the White House about it. He did write to the President. He said he was not going to have his rights imperiled by Mr. Garland or anybody else. Witness never wrote a letter to or spoke a word to Mr. Garland about the Government's bringing suit. The company, he said, could never get Mr. Garland to do anything.

In the election conspiracy cases of Mackin and Gallagher, tried in the Federal Court at Chicago, the Supreme Court of the United States holds that their crime was an infamous one within the meaning of the Constitution, and that they could only be tried on presentment or indictment by a Grand Jury. The sentence of two years' imprisonment pronounced against the defendants by Judge Blodgett is therefore void. Markin has no chance to escape confinement for five years at Joliet on the conviction in the State courts for perjury.

Secretary Manning was seized with vertigo while ascending the steps in the Treasury Department. He fell and was taken home in a carriage.

Ward Hunt, a retired Justice of the United States Supreme Court, died in Washington.

The Secretary of the Interior has decided that the Atlantic and Pacific Road has no legal claim to 2,451,200 acres of land along its track between San Francisco and San Buenaventura, and its restoration to the public domain is ordered.

POLITICAL.

In the Hurd vs. Romeis contested seat case, the House Committee on Elections, at Washington have agreed, 8 to 6, to reject Frank Hurd's claim to the seat from the Toledo (Ohio) district.

It is said that Representatives Barbour, Randolph Tucker, Mr. Collins' (Mass.), and Abram S. Hewitt have decided to retire to private life at the close of the present Congress.

A bill has been introduced in the New York Senate providing that at the next general election in New York City fifteen Aldermen shall be elected on a general ticket, to take office the first Monday in January after and hold for one year, and that this board shall constitute the Common Council.

The Indiana Congressmen who called at the Executive Mansion to present a claim of John B. Stoll on the public printing office were informed by the President that he had no intention to make a change in the office during the session of Congress, as public business might be impeded.

The Senate Committee on the District of Columbia has decided by a tie vote to report adversely the nomination of J. C. Matthews (colored) of Albany, N. Y., to be Recorder of Deeds for the District of Columbia.

Governor Stoneman has appointed George Hearst United States Senator from California, vice John F. Miller, deceased.

The Iowa Senate has passed a bill making drunkenness a misdemeanor, punishable with a severe penalty in an increasing ratio to the number of offenses.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Dispatches from St. Louis and Kansas City on the 21th of March reported no change in the strike situation at that date. At the latter place there were over 2,000 cars of freight in the yards. Near Sedalia alleged strikers unbossed the rails, wrecking a freight train, three persons receiving painful injuries. At Atchison a band of masked men entered the round-house and disabled twelve locomotives. An attempt was made at Denison to prevent the departure of a train, but a sheriff's posse, armed with rifles, awed the mob, and the train pulled out. The Knights of Labor at St. Louis announced that they would accept no terms from the company unless offered to them as members of that organization. They forced a call upon the merchants of St. Louis to assist in bringing about a state of affairs which would make possible arbitration between the railway officials and their former employes. At St. Louis the Missouri Pacific Road made an attempt to resume freight traffic in presence of three hundred strikers, but coupling-pins were pulled and switches thrown until the locomotive was ordered back to the shops. All the inside operators in dress and cloak making at New York left work pursuant to the call of the Strike Committee. They number nearly 2,000. Over one thousand morocco-workers at Wilmington, Del., quit work to hold a meeting, leaving $200,000 worth of skins in danger of spoiling. The strike of 4,000 employes of the National Tube Works at McKeesport, Pa., was settled, the advance offered by the General Manager being accepted. About two hundred and fifty laborers in the Detroit and Milwaukee Freight House at Grand Haven struck for an advance in wages to 20 cents an hour.

The Missouri Pacific officials at St. Louis, with the aid of one hundred and twenty-five policemen, sent out a freight train of fifteen cars on the 24th. The performance was witnessed by at least five thousand persons, some of whom killed a pony engine following the train. The departure of the train led to a conflict between the police and the mob, during which several persons were wounded. Attempts to move trains at Atchison and Omaha proved futile, alleged strikers capturing the locomotives and putting out the fires. The Governor of Missouri called out the militia to protect railroad property. The strike of the switchmen at Kansas City has been settled. Mr. Jay Gould says it is his intention to sue the Knights for damages, and may also apply for an injunction restraining the Knights of Labor from contributing to the support of those on the strike. At Washington Congress proposes to take up the strike question. Besides the bill introduced by Mr. Anderson, of Kansas, providing for Government arbitration, three or four other members have put in similar measures, all of which have gone to the House Labor Committee. The furniture manufacturing firm of Bunschke & Bleke, of Chicago, having suffered from a picket maintained by strikers, proposes to ask the Circuit Court for an injunction restraining its former employes from keeping up the nuisance.

Pittsburgh parties have purchased fifty acres of land at Germantown, on which to erect steel-works employing 250 men.

The Sandwich Islands have recently been the scene of terrific volcanic and earthquake convulsions.

In the State of Santander, United States of Colombia, a family of eight persons were slain by six men, one of the victims being a babe which the mother had brought forth during the excitement. The murderers have been arrested, and will be tried by court-martial.

FOREIGN.

Bismarck is accredited with a design to sustain Mexican finance with a view of extending Germany's colonial influence.

Paris advices were to the effect that Russia had refused to join the other Powers in coercing Greece to comply with Turkey's policy in the Balkan states, and that the Roumanian Minister to Russia had been recalled.

Measures are being prepared by the Russian Government to practically restore to the nobles the control of affairs, and to expropriate the wealthier Polish land-owners for the benefit of small tenants.

Hope is almost abandoned in Germany that a reconciliation with France could be effected by peaceful means, and the talk about war is more bitter and earnest than ever. The view entertained appears to be that Germany has nothing to fear while France is isolated from other nations, and the introduction of the espionage bill in the French Chamber of Deputies seems to have added bitterness to the feeling against that people.

Emperor William bore up well under the excitement of his eighty-ninth birthday celebration March 22, and received a large number of notables. Prince Bismarck gave a brilliant diplomatic banquet.

One of M. Pasteur's wolf-bitten Russian patients has died of hydrophobia at Paris.

Mr. Gladstone has practically won over John Bright to his scheme of Irish government.

There is a fresh rupture between France and Madagascar, and heavy fighting is reported.

Mr. Gladstone, it is said, has decided to drop his land purchase scheme and devote himself to the passage of a measure dealing with home rule only.

The French Government has ordered that all the annual autumn maneuvers of the French army foreign officers similar to those formerly permitted to follow the movements of the cavalry.

A revolt in the French prison at Chalons, following complaints by the convicts that their treatment was intolerable, was so desperate that the services of troops were required.

LATER NEWS ITEMS.

"Senator Riddleberger of Virginia, was assaulted in the east corridor of the Senate Chamber by A. W. Jones, one of his constituents," says a Washington special. "Jones was heard to ask Senator Riddleberger for money. The Senator refused, and Jones attempted to strike him. The Senator warded off the blow, whereupon Jones put his hand on his pistol pocket. Senator Riddleberger grappled and firmly held Jones' hand back. A couple of Senate employes came upon the scene and Jones' hand was released. Senator Riddleberger said that the assault was the result of several articles of recent publication in which he (Riddleberger) had done or said something which would subject him to criticism from the Senate. 'But,' he said, 'I am on my guard, and will not be drawn into any such unseemly controversy.' The Senator feels very bitterly toward Senator Hoar."

Ex-Congressman Casey Young testified, March 25, in the telephone investigation at Washington, that the Attorney General never told him that he knew of or that he would bring suit against the Bell Telephone Company. Witness never spoke to Solicitor General Goode about the Attorney General's deportment, and, until he had seen it in the papers, he had not heard that the Attorney General was to leave town in order that Goode might bring the suit. Witness had, at Van Benthuysen's request, written a letter to the President appealing from the action of the Attorney General in refusing to have anything to do with a telephone suit, but before it was delivered Solicitor General Goode had brought suit.

The Republicans of Rhode Island have nominated George Peabody Wetmore, of Newport, for Governor.

The House Elections Committee has decided to go into the merits of the contest in which Page, Democrat, contests the seat of Price, Republican, in the Second Rhode Island District.

SENATOR VOORHEES addressed the Senate March 25 in opposition to the majority report on the Duskin resolutions. He criticised the Senate for dallying with such a subject while great public questions were pressing for attention, and the flesh and blood of men and women were being ground in the massive hoppers of great corporations. Referring to Senator Wilson's characterization of the Democratic party as a "proposition," Senator Voorhees said it was fortunate for the Democracy that the colored people had not been told before election that the Democratic party was a proposition. If, instead of the word itself, the Senator from Iowa had used its definition as given by Webster, "the viscid, nitrogenous material in vegetable cells, by which the process of nutrition and growth goes forward," the speaker's imagination shrank from contemplation of the probable results. (Renewed laughter. It had been understood that the Democratic party was anything like a "non-cellular formation of a vital vegetable substance." Senator Voorhees had not the slightest doubt that that party would have been counted out in New York. Laughter. The Senator from Iowa ought to have denounced the Democratic party as an hypothecuse or a rectangular parallelogram. Laughter.) Senator Evarts addressed the Senate in support of the majority report. The doctrine that the President had the right to say whether the papers called for related to a subject with which Congress had a right to deal was inadmissible, because, under it, the President could refuse papers affecting his own conduct. When the President made announcement that a place was not to be vacated for political reasons, and then asked the Senate to concur in the appointment of the successor of a suspended official, Senator Evarts thought that the Senate ought not to be led in the dark concerning the grounds for the suspension of that official. When the postoffice appropriation bill came up in the House Mr. Dockery, of Missouri, defended the Postmaster General from the attack made upon him by Mr. Burrows, of Michigan. In the course of his speech he declared that when the Democratic party left the control of the Government it left the Republican party in the possession of a splendid merchant-marine, manned by American sailors and carrying American commerce. Mr. Brumm, of Pennsylvania (interrupting)—And you gave us the Alabama and the Shenandoah to drive it from the sea. Mr. Dockery—Oh, I know it hurts. When we come again to our fathers' house we find that only 13 per cent. of the commerce of this great country is carried in American vessels; and these vessels are manned by whom? American seamen? No; 95 per cent. of the sailors that carry your flag, or what is left of your flag, are foreigners. Who is responsible for that? Mr. Brumm—Seamen was not a foreigner. Mr. Dockery—The gentleman from Pennsylvania is one of the most extreme of the leaders who flaunt the bloody shirt. Mr. Brumm—When your party stops brandishing the bloody dagger we will stop waving the bloody shirt. "I know the 'galled jade winces,'" was Mr. Dockery's comment, as he dismissed the subject.

CONGRESS.

What Is Being Done by the National Legislature.

BILLS to establish a national live-stock highway, for the relief of heirs of cavalry recruits killed by guerrillas at Lawrence, Kansas, and to authorize the retirement of Lieutenant William P. Randall, of the navy, as a lieutenant commander, passed the Senate March 19. A bill was introduced to increase to $650,000 the appropriation for a postoffice at Minneapolis. Mr. Spooner, of Wisconsin, continued his speech in support of the Duskin resolution in the Senate. He maintained that the tenure-of-office act is unconstitutional. In discussing the civil-service views of the President he declared that "honest partisanship is honest citizenship." Every man suspended from office, he said, had a right to know why he was suspended. Senator Spooner did not suppose the President meant to submit his fellow citizens to serious injustice, but the system he had adopted in the matter of suspensions inevitably tended to cast a slander on the honor of honest men. Senator Sanlsbury (Del.) opposed the resolutions. The President had suspended, up to the time Congress met, only 613 out of 17,000 officials subject to his control. Notwithstanding this magnanimity, President Cleveland's nominations had been allowed to slumber for now three months without action, because the Republican side of the chamber had set to work deliberately to devise some scheme to prevent the removal of their partisan friends from office. Senator Sanlsbury said the Republicans had converted themselves into an obstruction party, hindering the due exercise of executive power. The House of Representatives passed a bill directing the Secretary of War to grant an honorable discharge to Francis H. Shaw, who was a captain in the Fifty-fifth Illinois Infantry, and was summarily dismissed by General Howard for misbehavior before the enemy. The bill to pension the widow of the late General Hancock came up in the House, and was strongly opposed by Mr. Price of Wisconsin. On the question of passing the bill the vote stood 25 to 1, Messrs. Price, Zach Taylor, Johnson of Indiana, and Winans voting nay. Mr. Price then raised the question of no quorum, but the previous question was ordered on the bill and it went over.

THERE was no session of the Senate on March 20, and the House devoted the day to speech-making on the free-coinage bill.

A RESOLUTION that executive sessions referring to nominations, confirmations, or rejections shall hereafter be held with open doors, was introduced in the Senate by Mr. Logan on March 22. Messrs. Colquitt, of Georgia, and Jackson, of Tennessee, addressed the Senate in opposition to the Edmunds resolutions. Mr. Harris presented petitions from the corporate authorities of the city of Memphis and of the Cotton Exchange of the same city praying for necessary appropriations for the protection of the harbor of that city. Among the bill introduced and appropriately referred was one by Mr. Cockrell, at the instance he said, of the Merchants' Exchange at St. Louis, authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Mississippi River at St. Louis. Senator Logan caused to be read in the executive session of the Senate a letter written to the Postmaster General by John H. Oberly last spring, charging Mr. Palmer, the Postmaster at Chicago, with offensive partisanship, and suggesting his immediate removal. The letter was referred to the Committee on Civil-Service Reform. A sensation was produced in the House of Representatives when the Chaplain devoted his opening prayer to an invocation to God to rid the land of gamesters, whether in cards, dice, chips, stock, wheat, bucket-shops, or boards of trade, and to lead the people to know that money-making other than by the sweat of the face was contrary to His laws. The prayer was ordered to be inserted in the Record. The House passed a bill to give to the widow of General Hancock a pension of $2,000 per annum. A bill was introduced by Mr. Anderson, of Kansas, to create a commission of arbitration for labor strikes. Mr. Lawler presented a resolution requesting the Judiciary Committee to report what legislation is necessary to close any part of the Chicago River.

THE bill confirming public-land entries heretofore made in accordance with the rulings of the Land Office in force at the time the entries were made and the bill pensioning the widow of Gen. Hancock, were passed by the Senate on the 23d of March. Senator George spoke in opposition to the Edmunds resolutions. The Logan army bill came up in the Senate, and Senator Manderson supported the proposition to increase the force to 40,000 enlisted men. He read from testimony given and letters written by Gens. Schofield, Pope, and others, to show the inadequacy of the present force of 25,000. Senator Beck thought that a large standing army was not necessary. He had seen enough volunteer soldiers on Pennsylvania avenue, Washington, when President Cleveland was inaugurated, to carry on an Indian war. There were many persons, he said, who want a large standing army capitalists who had designs upon the people. Senator Logan said he would not use the word despotism in regard to the arguments made in the Senate, but he would repel any insinuation that the increase proposed was for the purpose of using the army against the people. Referring to Senator Hale, who was opposing the bill, Senator Logan said that he found from Maine had been concentrated from the start to make war on this bill. Senator Logan knew where it came from, and before the matter closed he would have something more to say. In the House Mr. Reagan, of Texas, from the Committee on Commerce, favorably reported the Senate bill to establish a national live-stock highway, and promote commerce in live stock between the States. Mr. Anderson's bill, for the forfeiture of unearned land grants in the State of Kansas, was also favorably reported to the House. Mr. Richardson, of Tennessee, on behalf of the Committee on War Claims, called up, and the House passed, the Fourth of July claims bill. The amount involved in the bill is $238,200. Mr. Davis, of Massachusetts, from the same committee, reported a bill to prevent the introduction of contagious and infectious diseases into the United States, and to establish a bureau of public health. Mr. Dockery, of Missouri from the Committee on Postoffices and Post Roads, reported back a bill to extend the system for the immediate delivery of letters. Mr. McRae, of Arkansas, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported a bill to repeal the preemption laws. Mr. Forney, of Alabama from Committee on Militia, reported a bill for the uniform instruction of State militia.

MR. LOGAN explained in the Senate, on the 24th inst., that under the present laws there were but 25,025 effective men in the army, and that under the proposed increase to 30,000 there would probably be only about 27,040 effective men. Mr. Teller opposed the increase. It was claimed by friends of the bill that the increase was needed for a specific purpose—to guard against Indian troubles; but he saw no reason in the Indian question for an increase in the effective force of the army. Mr. Platt favored the proposed increase. He said we had no army. It was a misnomer to call it the present "skeleton" an army. The argument that we had no immediate need for an army was like arguing that because it was not raining to-day it would never rain. The house passed the Indian appropriation bill, and then took up the fortification appropriation measure. Senator Mitchell, of Oregon, addressed the Senate on the Duskin resolutions. While he concurred in the majority report in so far as it asserted that it was the duty of the executive officers to furnish when called upon by the Senate papers relating to the administration of an office, he would not insist, he said, that the presence of such papers in the Senate was absolutely necessary to the discharge by the Senate of its constitutional duty in advising and consenting to proposed removals from office. He believed the Attorney General plainly in error in refusing to furnish the papers called for. But, if called on to vote on the series of the majority resolutions as a whole, he would do so reluctantly and under positive protest. While there was a question as to the admissibility of the papers called for, which he deemed sufficient to warrant the Senate in refusing to act on the nominations, return to the Senate, if sent for, the resolutions, could be considered purely ex parte, and under decided protest, and he would receive the right to be exercised his own judgment as to the confirmation of nominations. He asserted it to be the duty of the Senate to procure its own proper information, whether papers were furnished or not, and in the light of such proof or evidence as it might have before it, or ought be able to obtain. Refer to the speech of Senator Mitchell. Senator Morgan (Ala.) spoke in constitutional argument in support of the majority report. The House proceedings were brief and unimportant.

DR. BURNEITE, the California dentist who filled the teeth of Preller, the victim of the St. Louis trunk mystery, refuses to come to St. Louis to testify at the trial unless he shall be paid $15,000. The Doctor says the London insurance companies have advised him that it will be to his pecuniary interest not to testify at the trial.

THE new headquarters of the Salvation Army, now about completed in Toronto, has a frontage of 106 feet and a depth of 100. The auditorium will seat 2,500 persons, and there are all the conveniences of the modern church. This "Salvation Temple," as it is called, cost $40,000, which has been raised by banquets, special subscriptions, collections, and the like.

SAMUEL J. PIPER and Albert G. Herndon were life prisoners in the Albany Penitentiary for robbing a mail coach in Texas. When the recent epidemic of typus fever broke out in the jail they volunteered as nurses, and both rendered valuable services until Piper himself was taken ill. He is just recovering. Their heroic conduct induced Albany officials to ask for their pardon, and it has been granted.

THE Empress of Austria's taste for field sports is by no means exceptional among ladies of rank in Austria and Hungary. A little while ago the Crown Princess accompanied her husband on a shooting expedition, and proved herself to be an excellent shot. The imperial hunts in Hungary are always frequented by a number of ladies belonging to the higher court circles. As a matter of fact, the predilection of the Empress for hunting is fully shared by the ladies of the Austro-Hungarian aristocracy.

CAPTAIN BOYCOTT, the Irish land agent to the Earl of Erne, and whose fight with his tenantry at the opening of the land war in 1879 gave rise to the word boycott, which has been so extensively adopted in this country as well as in Ireland, has been appointed agent of Lord Waveney's estates in Suffolk. How the English will receive among them a man whose petty tyranny in Ireland set agoing a practice that turned their government upside down remains to be seen.

KING MILAN'S Queen is said to be the most beautiful woman in Servia, and by this charm, together with her decision of character, she has completely established her dominion, not only over her husband's heart, but over his actions likewise. If Queen Nathalie may lay claim to be the handsomest woman in Servia, King Milan is far from being the handsomest man there or anywhere else. His head is round and large—too large for his body—his cheeks flat and wide, with a small nose and a little mouth. When at school at Paris he was thought to resemble Prince Napoleon, and always considered himself flattered by being complimented on the likeness.

SPEAKING of superstitions, a writer says the old notion that there is luck in a horseshoe finds support in one case at least. When Maud S. did her first really fast mile in Cleveland in 2:10¼, Captain Stone, of Cincinnati, who owned her, pulled off her shoes and stored them in his desk, and sold the mare to Vanderbilt for a snug price. He has been making money ever since, and capturing the best things of life. The Captain kept only one of the shoes. He gave one to Mrs. Swain, and she gave it to her larger brother. He hadn't had it a week before he was married to one of the most charming ladies in New York. He has been prospering like a green bay tree ever since.

MOBS in Asia appear not to be dreaded, and apparently are not dreadful. Kings never dream of prohibiting them, and the people are not in the least afraid of them. All over Asia, from Constantinople to Shanghai, vast mobs continually assemble for worship, for jollification, for curiosity, and nobody interferes. The Kings do not apprehend revolt from them, the police do not look for riot, the people do not fear accident. In India, Burmah, Ceylon, Arabia, China, immense crowds continually assemble without disturbance of any kind, without endangering public peace, and without disaster, save when, owing to the consequent breach of sanitary laws, some devastating epidemic is occasionally generated. A true "mob" of a hundred thousand persons is a constant phenomenon in India, and is as little regarded by the magistrates as a crowd of a thousand would be in London.

A BOSTON clergyman was asked recently what he did in his church to break up the habit, so frequent at church sociables, of ladies arranging themselves in rows or clusters, thereby causing the gentlemen to do the same. His answer was that the game of "missionary" was the best and most popular way of doing it, and on being asked for an explanation of the game, gave the following: "We arrange all the ladies about the room, and request a gentleman to stand directly in front of each of them. Then it is announced that the young ladies are to represent 'missionaries' and the young gentlemen 'heathen.' A signal is then given, and the heathen then embraces 'christianity.'"

"LIKE many other public men," says the Philadelphia Telegraph, "John B. Gough made money easily and spent it freely. During his lifetime he earned hundreds of thousands of dollars, but his whole fortune is estimated at less than $75,000. He leaves a house and two hundred acres of valuable ground about six miles from Worcester, Mass. This was his 'farm,' and here he rested during the breathing spells in his busy life. His library is one of the finest in the country. It is valued at $20,000, but it is doubtful whether it would bring that amount at public or private sale. Some of the books were highly prized by the great orator. Among them were original sketches by George Cruikshank, which he could have sold a year ago for several thousand dollars. Besides his farm and library Mr. Gough owned lands and mortgages which yielded a small income." An intimate friend was talking to him about his private affairs recently. Mr. Gough told him that in the event of his death his wife would have an income of about $2,500 from his personal property."

THE Charlotte (N. C.) Observer of recent date published a column interview by its Washington correspondent with Junius Lynch Clemmons, Clerk of the River and Harbor Committee of the House of Representatives, who asserts that he is the original inventor of the electric telegraph. Mr. Clemmons says that he invented the system in 1835, and communicated his discovery to a Mr. Page, who was in the Patent Office, and who had become eminent as an electrician. Page did not answer the letter, and eleven years after took out a patent on the discovery, and associated Morse and Amos Kendall with him. The company applied to Congress for aid to develop the discovery, and the world knows the result. Clemmons claims only the original invention, but gives Morse credit for its development. He concludes the interview as follows: "I would not pluck a single leaf from the laurel that circled Morse's brow, or drop a word that would reflect upon his memory." The letter is published as a vindication of the truth of history.

SOME time since reports reached this country that a new texile had been discovered in France, which was likely to take the place of wool to a large extent. Of course, this report created a good deal of sensation in certain quarters where the wool interests are important. Accordingly, United States Consul Williams, of Rouen, France, was requested to make a complete investigation of the matter and report at his earliest convenience. This report has just arrived at the State Department. He says that the new textile is called berandine, from the name of its inventor, a Maestricht workman named Berande. The French have made very glowing official reports. Mr. Williams says that in the opinion of experts who have since made careful examinations of this textile it is safe to say that it is not likely to take the place of wool, or even the poorest quality of waste wool or cotton. Its presence in a mixture of textile material increases the difficulty of spinning to such an extent that in no instance could it be spun fine. Its use in fabrics of mixed thread diminishes its value by imparting roughness and harshness to the touch. The consul thinks that, while this texture may take a modest place hereafter, it is not at present calculated to diminish the price of wool. Berandine is claimed by experts to be the direct product of certain peat grounds, and is thus cheaper by far than any other known raw textile material. The consul draws the conclusion that the inferiority of the textile surpasses its cheapness, and thus places it low on the list of textiles.

THE RAILROAD STRIKE.

The Missouri Pacific Difficulties Far from Settlement—The Worst to Come.

Knights of Labor Cripple a Man at St. Louis—Business Paralyzed at Kansas City.

At St. Louis.

(St. Louis telegram.)

The strike at St. Louis is apparently as far from a settlement as ever, and it is generally admitted that the attempted arbitration of Gov. Marmaduke of Missouri and Gov. Martin of Kansas has proved a complete failure. The outlook is very serious. A member of the Executive Committee of the Knights of Labor said this morning:

"The worst is yet to come, I dread it, but there is no help for it. If we were to submit now and return to work without having been recognized as Knights of Labor it would be a defeat not only for us but also for the labor unions, the trades assemblies, and for every labor organization in the whole country. We feel that the issue must be met, and now. The present conflict is between us and the railroads only. We will wait three or four days in the hope that some way toward a settlement may be opened, and then, if the situation remains unchanged, every freight train on every road running out of St. Louis and every freight train on every road running out of Chicago will be stopped. We will leave a sufficient force of men upon the roads to run the mail trains and a few accommodation trains, but not a wheel of a single freight car shall be turned until the Knights of Labor are recognized. If this shall fail to force the companies to recognize us, the strike will then be extended to all Eastern and Southern roads, embracing the entire country; and if it comes to the worst, the strike will be made to embrace every large manufactory and every extensive business industry in the country."

An attempt was made by the Missouri Pacific Road yesterday morning to get out a freight train. The train was fired up at the Missouri Pacific shops and moved down to the Nineteenth street yards, where twenty cars of freight were in readiness. The regular fireman jumped off, but the engineer manned his place, and a private detective employed by the road fired the engine. As soon as the engine was coupled to the cars the trouble commenced. Strikers and spectators had gathered to the number of two thousand, and when the engine pulled out only ten cars went with it, and it was found that the train had been uncoupled.

Another start was made, and then it was discovered that a switch had been turned, and the freight train was on the wrong track. Cars were uncoupled, one after another, and finally scattered one by one all over the yards. Some exciting scenes took place when a man advanced from the crowd to pull a pin and a private detective rushed at him with a revolver. The man refused to scare, however, and pulled the pin, the detective not firing, and escaped without arrest. After an hour's attempt the company gave up the job and sent the engine back to the shops.

Business at a Standstill in Kansas City.

There was no change in the strike situation to-day except that the embargo on business began to be more keenly felt. The managers spent the day hobnobbing together informally without arriving at any conclusion.

Grand Master James L. Monaghan, of the Switchmen's Association, reached the city at 9 o'clock and went at once to the hall on Twelfth street, where he addressed the men on the necessity of moderation. He cautioned them against violence, and the men pledged themselves individually to permit none. The switchmen assert that they desire to inconvenience the public as little as possible. President Hill, at the request of Major Jones, gave the Fort Scott permission to set some coal into the water works and detailed a crew to do the switching. He has received no request from the gas company, but says that whenever the company is in need of coal it will be switched to the works.

Mr. Monaghan and Mr. Hill called on several managers for the purpose of ascertaining when an audience could be obtained. Mr. J. F. Barnard, General Manager of the Council Bluffs and Hannibal, refused to treat with them as representatives of the Switchmen's Association. He said that the men had gone out without giving any notification, and were no longer in his employ. He did not hesitate to say that the strike had emanated from the Knights of Labor. This is denied by both Mr. Hill and the Grand Master, who declare that they have nothing to do with the Knights of Labor, and that the men will go back whenever their terms are accepted.

The only attempt to run freight trains was by the Union Pacific this morning. The train got out two or three miles, when the coupling pins were drawn. It was then pushed back into the yards. The Wabash did not run out any trains, though it was intimated that an attempt would be made some time during the night. The Hannibal, the Rock Island, and the Council Bluffs were each permitted to send out an engine and caboose to take train men to their homes. The strikers also took four emigrant stock cars from the Hannibal yards and run them down to the stock yards, so that the stock could be fed. The Wabash officials switched a train brought in Monday night to the freight house, where it was unloaded.

The situation, as it affects business, is hourly becoming more serious. The fears that the packing houses would close were realized. Jacob Dold & Sons shut down at an early hour, retaining only enough men to take care of the meat already dressed. Morris, Butts & Co. and the Allcut Packing Company also shut down, as did the Morrison Packing Company, which employs 300 men. Armour Bros. and Fowler Bros. each run only half a day. Both will kill a few hogs to-morrow.

In the World of Labor.

Two hundred and fifty men employed in the Detroit, Grand Haven and Milwaukee freight house at Grand Haven, Mich., struck for an advance and double pay for Sunday work. They have been getting 15 cents an hour and want 20.

A new secret organization resembling that of the Knights of Labor, and to be known as the Knights of Industry, is in process of incubation at Boston, Mass. It is designed not to antagonize but to supplement the Knights of Labor.

The great strike of the 4,000 workmen at the National Tube Works at McKeesport, Pa., has ended satisfactorily to the strikers. The strikers receive an increase of from 7 to 20 per cent. in their wages.

Work has been resumed in all the Studebaker factories at South Bend, Ind.

A DESPERATE DEED.

A Tough Citizen of Nebraska Murders in Cold Blood His Employer.

The Murderer Takes Refuge in a Barn, and Is Routed in Death by 300 Men.

A terrible tragedy is reported from Burt County, Neb. H. A. Steadman, proprietor of a creamery near the village of Lyons, paid off and discharged one of his employes, Edward Johnson, who thereupon became angry, and after a few words, and without provocation, drew a revolver and shot Steadman in the stomach, the wounded man dying shortly afterward. Johnson mounted a horse and fled, but was followed by a small party of men in charge of Constable Parker, who pursued him twelve miles south, and were rapidly gaining on him. During the chase the murderer turned in his saddle, and with a repeating rifle shot one of his pursuers, C. P. Johnson, in the head, killing him almost instantly. He then shot another man in the hip, inflicting a fatal wound. Constable Parker's horse was shot from under him. The pursuing party, however, kept up the chase, and continued to gain on him, being reinforced by others along the way. Finally Johnson, seeing that capture was inevitable if he continued on horseback, jumped from his horse and ran into a barn, where he held the fort against the entire party. It was thought he was wounded before he sought retreat in the barn, as he had been fired at by his pursuers, who were armed only with revolvers. The barn was surrounded by the party, which by this time had increased to 100 men. A deadly fusillade was commenced. All day the great crowd surged and circled around the barn, but kept out of range of the besieged man. A wagon-load of provisions was forwarded to the camp of the besiegers. The murderer was armed with a revolver and a Winchester rifle, and the cracks between the boards of the structure gave him an opportunity to shoot with an accurate aim. All efforts to dislodge him proved futile. The crowd surrounding his retreat hourly increased, until at least three hundred men were pouring missiles of death into the barn from as many Winchesters, revolvers, and shotguns. Failing to dislodge him by this method, it was decided to burn him out. During the darkness of the night some one in the crowd crept up to a shed adjoining the barn and set fire to it. The caged murderer, seeing that he was doomed, fired twenty shots into the crowd in rapid succession, but hitting no one. The crowd returned the fire from Winchester rifles from all sides of the barn, and the supposition is that the murderer was killed before he could attempt to make his escape. After the fire had subsided his dead body was found in a pile of oats. Both arms and a part of both legs were burned off. Part of his head had been shot away, and his body was completely riddled with bullets. The supposition is that he was wounded in the leg before he ran into the barn, and hence he did not attempt to escape. The desperado's right name was Allen Wright, aged about 28 years. His remains were buried in a cornfield. His revolver had a Texas cow head engraved on it. He had also a Winchester rifle. Eight mules, three horses, three cows, and a large quantity of grain were destroyed with the barn. The total loss is $5,000, which the county will probably pay. Wright killed H. C. Stedman and Charles P. Johnson, and fatally wounded Edgar Everett, whose death will make three killed. Several are slightly wounded; all doing well.

INDUSTRIAL SITUATION.

Commissioner Wright, of the Labor Bureau, Reports One Million Men Idle.

(Washington telegram.)

The first annual report of the Bureau of Labor is completed. It will cover five hundred pages. Under the head "The Industrial Depression in the United States," Commissioner Wright says:

From the observations of the agents of the bureau, and from other sources from which it has been possible to form conclusions, it is undoubtedly true that out of the total number of establishments, such as factories, mines, etc., existing in the country, about 5 per cent. were absolutely idle during 1885, and that perhaps 35 per cent. more were idle a part of the time, or, for business reasons, ran 40 per cent. of the whole number of establishments as were idle, or equivalent to 45 per cent. of the year. Applying the percentage of active last 15 per cent., we obtain a total of 60 per cent. as constituting the best estimate of the unemployed in the United States coming by the unemployed those who, under present circumstances, would be employed, but who in fact were seeking employment—that it has been possible for the bureau to make. It is probably true that this total, as representing the unemployed at any one time in the United States, is fairly representative, even if the laborers thrown out of work through the cessation of railroad building be included. A million of men out of employment means a loss to the consumptive power of the country of at least $1,000,000 per day, or a crippling of the trade of the country of over $300,000,000 per year. The earnings of the people involved in the losses named above would not be far from $600 each per annum, representing total earnings of $7,200,000,000. The wage earnings of the million that should be employed are crippled to the extent of over $300,000,000 per annum, a sum sufficient to cause a reaction in business and a general curtailment of expenses, from which result apprehension and timidity among all classes. It is curious to observe, however, that while the severity of the depression causes a crippling to the extent of several hundred millions of dollars per year of the consuming power of the people, the volume of business transacted is not crippled comparatively to any such extent.

It is shown that just previous to the financial panics of 1857, 1873, and 1882 there was an immense increase in the mileage of railroads constructed in the United States. The results of this in throwing men out of employment have great bearing in producing depressions through the stoppage of consumptive powers. The Commissioner says:

Facts are given to the effect that [illegible] while, as shown, the decline of the existing industrial depression involves a very large [illegible] of the consuming power of the people, the average of business has been fairly well per capita, not crippled to any such extent as many imagine, and by the expenditure of the remaining seven and two-thirds per cent. of the earnings of the people in the form of profits and luxuries have been conducted with little or no change in those engaged and a great lowering of wages in general.

MICHIGAN AFFAIRS.

—A bottling works has been added to the industries of Plymouth.

—Pontiac has voted against the waterworks by a majority of fifty-six.

—The capital stock of the Cheboygan Broom Company has been all taken up.

—Marshall Fisher, aged 50, a pioneer of Jackson County, died at his home in Hanover.

—Two farmers near Parkville recently sold 1,200 pounds of peppermint oil at $3.90 per pound.

—Making maple sugar by steam is a new enterprise which Ben Ranson, of Algansee, Branch County, has started.

—Jackson County marketed 56,252 bushels of wheat in February, being the second county in the State, Branch alone exceeding with 56,317 bushels.

—A. J. Patterson, proprietor of the National Hotel, Owosso, gave $500 toward the $5,000 to be raised to obtain the soldiers' encampment at that city August 28.

—Miss Gracie Whitcomb, of Jackson, niece of Postmaster General Vilas, and daughter of wealthy parents, accompanied friends to the dogpot in that city recently and unaccountably disappeared.

—Hans Peterson, a miner, fell down No. 6 shaft at the Jackson mine, Negaunee, recently, sustaining fatal injuries. He is the second man who has been fatally injured at Jackson by falling down a shaft in the past few months.

—Mr. A. N. Brown, of the Mt. Pleasant Tribune, was not whipped, as recently reported, and as to his "notoriety," he claims that it consists in having all the best citizens of Mt. Pleasant and Isabella County arrayed on his side.

—A Coroner's inquest on the body of Aaron Palmer, found in a swamp near Tecumseh, shows that he perished by his own hand, firing a shot through his head, either in his drunken desperation or fearing the vengeance of the mob after his murderous shooting of the Anderson brothers.

—The construction company of the Cincinnati, Jackson and Mackinaw Railroad held a meeting in Jackson recently, and it was decided to abandon the enterprise. The result of the meeting is undoubtedly for the purpose of inducing the city of Jackson to subscribe $60,000 toward its construction.

—G. W. Wardell, of Sanford, was in West Bay City, where he disposed of a yoke of oxen. Next morning he went to East Saginaw to collect about $1,200 on a logging contract. He intended to return to West Bay City to collect the money for the oxen the same day, but has not since been seen or heard from.

In view of the number of fatal mining accidents that have happened in Marquette County in the past four months there is a strong sentiment among the people in the county in favor of the appointment of a Mine Inspector, whose duties shall be the same as those of the Mine Inspectors appointed in Pennsylvania and other mining States.—Free Press.

—At the Locating Committee for the Michigan State Fair meeting in Jackson representatives from all principal cities in the State were present. Kalamazoo offers to sell the State Fair Society its grounds and buildings for $30,000. Detroit offers to donate the use of the Hamtramck grounds for ten years. Lansing will give its grounds if the society will assume a $10,000 mortgage. Jackson offers to give outright fifty acres and $10,000 in cash.

—At the trial of Father Kolasinski, the contumacious Polish priest, at Detroit, the jury gave a verdict in ejectment in favor of Bishop Borgess. The trial had many exciting incidents. The priest will appeal from the finding of the jury, and, as the case cannot be reached in the Circuit Court for some weeks to come, the situation in St. Albert's parish will remain unchanged.

—The State dentists, recently in session at Ann Arbor, elected the following officers: President, L. L. Davis, Eaton Rapids; First Vice President, H. Cowle, Detroit; Second Vice President, H. C. Coms, Detroit; Secretary, J. B. McGregor, Port Huron; Treasurer, H. K. Lathrop, Jr., Detroit. J. A. Harris, of Pontiac, was re-elected a three-year member of the Board of Censors, and a temporary appointment made to fill a vacancy on the University Visiting and Consulting Committee. The next meeting of the association will be held at same place in the month of March, 1887.

—The famous Mamie-Garland litigation has been settled by a compromise. On July 22, 1880, the steam yacht Mamie, carrying acolytes of Holy Trinity Catholic Church, collided with the ferry steamer Garland, having an excursion party on board. Seven persons were drowned, and suits for damages were begun by relatives against the two boats. During the past six years an immense amount of litigation has been carried on, the matter being fought through the Canadian courts and the State and the United States courts, one suit reaching the Supreme Court. There were in all forty-eight suits pending when a settlement was reached. The surplus of the company, after certain previous obligations are paid, will be paid over to the plaintiffs. The suits in the various courts were discontinued.

The County Seat.

Voters of Charlevoix county, consider well what you are doing in casting your ballots next Monday. The object in designating a place at which the people are to do the official business of the county is that all may know where to go to find the officers with whom the business is to be transacted. All will admit that as yet this county is but partially developed and settled, and the county seat should be located at a place most accessible to the greater number, when the county is fully developed. This is a question which the legislature has left in the hands of the people, if they will exercise it. It has been intimated in the discussions of this question, both private and public that there are nine supervisors of this county who, (being a majority of the board,) have promised to exercise their power to erect bridges, build county buildings and divide townships, if the people will entrust them with the county seat at Boyne City. We must remember that the same nine supervisors who promise these things have the power to retain the county seat at Boyne City no matter what the interests of the majority of the people may demand after the commercial interests of the county are fully developed. Do the people of this county desire to be dictated in this important matter by only nine men of this county, or will they keep this matter in their own hands so that they may control it themselves, and be able to vote upon the question again if their interests demand it. While the county seat remains at East Jordan it may be removed if the people so desire, but if once located at Boyne City, it cannot, for the reason that it takes two-thirds of the supervisors to submit the question to the people and not merely a majority, so that the nine have the power against the whole people.

Most of the people are aware that two or three lines of railroad are pointing toward this locality. That these waters and harbors of ours are being looked upon with a view of, in the future, connecting their lines with boats and the shipping interests of this county. These roads may come from the south or from the east. They may come into the western portion, the eastern portion or the southern portion of the county, and, in either event who can say at the present time what influence it may have upon that portion of the county through which it may pass. Supposing a road should come from the east, crossing the G. R. & I. R. R. at Boyne Falls or at some point between there and Elmira, running from thence to East Jordan (admitted by all to be a very practical route) Ironton, Charlevoix, and Elk Rapids; where then would be the proper location of the county seat? Would the people desire to have nine supervisors dictate them and say they shall go to Boyne City to do their county business? If a road should happen to come to Ironton, Charlevoix, etc., by way of Boyne City, then Boyne City might be easily reached and accessible, (no more so however, than Boyne Falls, Advance, Ironton, or Charlevoix). But supposing the road should come from the southern or western portion of the county, might not the population be so changed that the interests of a greater number of the people be subserved by having the seat of justice at a point further west, than at Boyne City. Or, may not the county so develope that other points on Pine Lake or South Arm not yet thought of be the future metropolis of the county and the interests of the whole people demand the county business to be done there. After considering these points, will you trust this matter to the whole people or to the nine supervisors.

In this issue of the JOURNAL will be found communications on various sides of the removal question,—a feature not found in any other paper in the county. And in permitting their insertion, we do not necessarily endorse the opinions expressed. One of the reasons leading to the establishment of the JOURNAL was that no one could have a fair hearing in opposition to the editor of the Sentinel. To remedy that evil was one of the promises we made to the projectors of the enterprise, and no amount of prosperity will cause us to forget that promise.

And in this connection, it is amusing to see the strange companionship visible on our streets everyday. Men who have for years been political (and even personal), enemies, now go along the street arm in arm.

We print in another column, a communication from Mr. Wm. Harris of Norwood, which is bristling with facts and figures that cannot be disproved. Mr. Harris has evidently given this matter careful study, and his conclusions, based upon his experience and extensive knowledge of the affairs of the county, cannot fail to influence all conscienciens voters. We understand that the substance of the article was sent to the Sentinel last week, and refused publication,—evidently because the conclusions did not correspond with those of the editor. Our neighbor seems afraid to have the whole truth presented to the people, lest they shall in their wisdom, vote against him, and his apparent influence shall be forever destroyed.

"Bro. Strang, of the Charlevoix JOURNAL, is trying to execute the difficult feat of "sitting straddle" on the county-seat question which is tearing up Charlevoix county just now. Bad policy, Bro. Strang; you'll get curses from both sides and make friends of neither."—Petoskey Record. Mistaken again. The JOURNAL is simply carrying out its established policy of considering public questions with fairness, and without prejudice or blackguardism.

"That Circular,"

As printed in the Sentinel, proves nothing beyond the fact that the friends of Boyne City are in desperate straits, and will resort to any falsehood to carry their point. The following affidavits of men charged with circulating the circular have been obtained to prove the falsity of the statement and the complete refutation of the charge could be shown if all the parties mentioned could have been reached in time for this issue.

Having read with some surprise the statement made in the Sentinel of March 24, 1886, charging myself and Mr. Clink with having distributed the certain circulars at Boyne City, and that we carried 1000 copies to that town for distribution and placed them in the hands of Dr. E. F. Allen for that purpose, therefore, for the purpose of denying this falsehood, I, said F. E. Fogg of East Jordan, do solemnly swear that the statement made in the said Sentinel in regard thereto, is not true; that I never carried 1000 copies of said circular or any other number to Boyne City for distribution; that I never placed any copies in Dr. E. F. Allen's hands, or the hands of any other person at Boyne City; that I was in Boyne City with Mr. Clink shortly before the election, but that neither of us to my knowledge had any such circular; neither did I see any in the conveyance.

Douglas C. Loveday, being duly sworn, deposes and says that the statement made in the Sentinel, of March 31st, 1886, in regard to the circulating of the circular "Clark vs Vaization" is a leg falsehood, and that he never circulated any of them, or assisted in any manner whatever in their circulation, and further deponent saith not.

"False in one thing, false in all." It is safe to conclude therefore that all the statements connecting East Jordan with this circular are false.

Another Circular.

While the friends of Boyne City are trying to prove East Jordan's connection with "that circular," they seem to forget another circular, addressed "to the electors of the eastern townships of Charlevoix county," in which appeared the statement that "we have good reason to believe, and do believe that Charlevoix has taken steps to, and will incorporate as a city, thus increasing the number of her supervisors, should the question fail to carry in favor of East Jordan." This circular bears evidence of having been printed in the Statesman office, and is signed by 32 of the business men of Boyne City, including W. A. Norton, P. A. Badour, A. W. Nicholson, T. J. Hill, J. C. McFallin, Z. N. Garbut, H. A Jersey, F. M. Abraham, B. F. Ingalls, W. J. Lewis, E. F. Allen, H. C. Miley, R. L. Corbett, and others. We have a copy of this circular in our possession.

Population Centers.

A writer in the Statesman—the same who has been perambulating certain portions of the county, preaching his peculiar doctrines—in order to show that the eastern portion of the county is rapidly outstripping the western in population, assumes that the only correct way to judge of the future growth of Charlevoix county, is by the percentage of increase in each town. Let us see. He claims that the township of Melrose increased from 1880 to 1884 in the ratio of 283 per cent, while Charlevoix during the same period increased in the ratio of 118 per cent. We shall not attempt to dispute the correctness of his figures, for having "wielded the birch" in a country school, it is not presumable that he can possibly be mistaken. The fallaciousness, however, of taking the per cent of increase as a basis for future population, instead of the actual pro rata increase, will appear by the following comparison: In 1880 the population of Melrose township was 79; in 1884, 303. In 1880, the population of Charlevoix township was 619; in 1884, 1,350. Melrose increased in population 224; Charlevoix 731; a balance in favor of Charlevoix of 507. Melrose, even with its phenomenal increase of ratio during the last four years, which it cannot hope to again attain, will fare badly in the race for population in the future with Charlevoix, whose increase alone during the four years, is almost double the entire population of Melroso.

Early in the campaign Boyne City based her entire claims for the county seat on the proposition that she lacked but a few miles of being the exact geographical center of the county, but it is a fact that should be taken into consideration by those geographically inclined that more than three-fourths of the county seats in this State are not located at the geographical centers, but have been located on the basis of population centers existing at the time, and prospective. The brilliant idea has recently occurred to them that it might be policy to try and make it apparent to the voters of the county, that while they were many miles eastward of the present center of population, they might by some peculiar process of reasoning, and a hocus pocus of figures, demonstrate that the population center was rapidly moving eastward, and that at some time in the near future, Boyne City would be located at the population center of the county. Those pettifogging tactics will fail to catch any great number of voters, for common sense, or human wisdom, no matter how prophetic or far-seeing, cannot reasonably realize that the time will ever come when the eastern portion of the county, with its inland position, can successfully compete in population with the commercial advantages of the western, with its already superior start, and future grand possibilities. It may, as the writer claims, "move steadily eastward" for a short time, but is it not reasonable to suppose that but a few years will now elapse before the population center can be determined with almost absolute certainty? To Prevent Pneumonia.

Says a Boston physician to the Congregationalist—As pneumonia is essentially a congestive disease, the best preventive measures are those which avoid the causes of congestion. Pulmonary congestion is favored by too heavy clothing worn in Winter weather. A serious error is the supposition that a double set of flannels worn next to the skin affords double protection. The fact is that in such a case the inner flannel absorbs all secretions and perspiration, which are there retained by the outer flannel. An almost poultice-like action is thus brought about, softening the skin and rendering it highly susceptible to the slightest exposure. Over-heated, ill-ventilated rooms, and the sudden transition from these to the sharp outer air, are other avoidable predisposing causes of the disease. He who uses a cold sponge-bath with brisk rubbing every morning, who wears the lightest clothing consistent with comfortable protection, and keeps his living rooms well ventilated and at a mean temperature of 68 degrees, is employing the best preventive treatment of pneumonia known to sanitary science.

Michigan's Share.

The river and harbor bill is completed, and the amounts appropriated for Michigan, which are given below, show that Mr. Carleton has done yeoman service for the waterways of his own state, and entitle him to a great deal of credit for his untiring energy in this direction. A quarter of a million dollars for the new Ste. Marie Falls canal is a good leader, to the nearly a million dollars appropriated for Michigan. Here are the figures.

Charlevoix	$10,000
Cheboygan	15,000
Frankfort	7,000
Grand Haven	40,000
Grand Marais	35,000
Ludington	75,000
Manistee	10,000
Black Lake	5,000
Marquette	10,000
Monroe	2,000
Muskegon	25,000
Ontonagon	15,000
Pentwater	10,000
Portage Lake harbor	15,000
St. Jo. for repairs and new work	10,000
Saugatuck	8,000
Sturgeon	5,000
South Haven	10,000
White River	50,000
Detroit River	6,000
Clinton River	10,000
Bay Lake channel	45,000
Saginaw River	25,000
St. Clair Flats ship canal	250,000
Ste. Marie's ship canal

New surveys are ordered on the bar at St. Clair; bar at the mouth of the Black river; bar at the mouth of the Pouchog; bar at mouth of Pigeon river. The total amount of the bill is $15,164,200, including $100,000 for surveys.

The oyster beds on the Hudson, which extend from New York to Sing Sing and which have been productive ever since this country was settled, are likely to be soon annihilated. Increasing population is so polluting the waters of the river that the lower portions of the beds have already been destroyed. From those that remain the young oysters are removed to purer waters, where they can develop their natural size and flavor.

Patti's last wedding will probably occur in the spring. A London newspaper says that nothing now stands in the way of the tenor's union with the most celebrated soprano of the day except the time prescribed by law—ten months after her divorce—which will expire in May next.

Who Redeemed Her.

In some portions of southern Germany, when a woman desires to marry she has to pass a sort of civil service reform examination by the priest, to see if she properly comprehends the nature of the sacred obligation she is anxious to assume. The priest of a Bavarian village was sitting at his desk writing out his sermon, when there came a timid knock at the door.

"Come in," said the pastor, and an unmarried member of his flock, who had survived some thirty summers of single blessedness, entered. The pastor kept on writing. Presently he looked up, and asked what she wished.

"I—um—going—to—be—married," she said, chewing her apron modestly.

Once more the pastor began to write, but remembering the civil service reform examination, to test her knowledge of the plan of salvation, he asked her:

"Molly, who is it that has redeemed you from your lost and hopeless condition?"

"Hans Pickelhaube, your reverence, and he is such a n-i-c-e young man."—Texas Siftings.

An Indiana newspaper says that the lady acting as Sheriff of Greene County has posted the following notice: "No admittance to see prisoners. There is too much responsibility attached to their safe-keeping to permit indiscriminate visiting. I have my household work to do, and have no time to stand guard when parties come to see prisoners. And they do not care to be seen. Please do not intrude. Aurilla C. Quillen."

United States Senator Spooner may not be a statesman, but he is a very able lawyer and an excellent business man. A day or two ago, speaking of railroad demoralization, he said: "My belief, founded on wide experience, is that there is too much individuality in railroad management. Stockholders need protection from managers. Rate wars, which are demoralizing to honest business as well as destructive of railroad properties, are brought about sometimes on the slightest provocation, or even on an imaginary pretext, involving the loss of millions of dollars and bringing about general depression and public distress.

Notes and News.

Speaking of Gov. Swineford's case, the St. Ignace Republican—a stalwart organ of the party from which it takes its name—frankly says that "as acting governor of the territory of Alaska, he has furnished the world more common sense information regarding that far off corner of our domain than we should have known by a strict application to school geography for a long century. Never mind, if A. P. is a democratic 'mistake,' we, his republican friends, consider him a 'success' in his far-away mission, and desire his confirmation by the senate." The St. Ignace paper voices the sentiment of ninety-nine out of every hundred republicans in the upper peninsula, where Gov. Swineford is best known. They know him to be an uncompromising democrat, but a man of broad views, generous impulses, tremendous energy and great executive ability, whose qualities of head and heart admirably fit him for his present trust. The president made no mistake when he named Mr. Swineford governor of Alaska, but the senate will commit a grievous one if it refuses to confirm his appointment.—Mining Journal.

General Manager Mulliken, of the Chicago and West Michigan railroad, is in Boston in conference with the owners of the road. It is understood authoritatively that the purpose of Mr. Mulliken's visit is to arrange for securing funds for the extension of the road from Baldwin, its present terminus, to Traverse City. It is said that in all probability the necessary funds will be forthcoming and that the work of building the extension will commence this summer.—Grand Rapids Eagle.

Gov. A. P. Swineford has written his friends that he will be home from Alaska the first week in April and will at once proceed to Washington, where he will answer the charges brought against his confirmation by the Senate. He says he can satisfactorily explain all the charges brought by Carroll, who was summarily bounced by the State Board of Commissioners to the New Orleans exposition.—Herald.

Wonderful Wheat from Puget Sound.

Mr. Olive Counter, who resides on the northeast quarter of Sec. 32, Township 21 north, Range 4 east, about five miles from the city, brought in some samples of seven-headed wheat, raised this year on his creek-bottom clay loam land. The stalks are the products of two kernels and are six feet high from the root to the top head. The heads are very peculiar, resembling a pine cone, being thick and clumpy. One of the heads of average size was shelled out, and the grains counted from the one head were 161. According to this the one kernel of wheat yielded 966 plump, fat wheat grains, or nearly 1,000 fold. The yield per acre to Mr. Counter of this wheat was eighty-five bushels. On the same kind of soil he has raised red-top clover this year six feet in height. Those who are acquainted with good milling wheat say that this will make a No. 1 quality of flour. One of the heads, which was weighed, tipped the scales at over half an ounce.—Tacoma Evening News.

WASHINGTON'S FAMILY.

Talk About a Queer Old Print That Used To Be Popular.

"Yes, that is a very interesting print and quite old," said John Sartain when questioned in regard to an engraving entitled "Washington's Family Circle," which may be yet seen in some old houses or in out-of-the-way barber shops or old print store. "I can not recall the name of the painter of the original picture," continued Mr. Sartain, trying to jog his memory. "I have such a poor faculty for names I am afraid I shall forget my own. It was painted in 1794 and engraved by David Edwin, a very noted workman—a stipple engraver. At that time he was doing journeyman work for the artist who painted it. Edwin told me an odd story about the original painting. While it was in the study of the painter the yellow fever broke out in this city and the artist and Edwin removed to Burlingtou, N. J., and the picture, which was quite large, was taken up by them on the river in a row-boat. The day was very breezy, and Edward related the very ludicrous difficulty they had to keep from capsizing, the painting catchiug so much wind. They made their journey with much difficulty and only by rowing in the eye of the wind."

The engraving is the first of the series of "Family Circles" of presidents, and represents Washington, Martha Washingtou, young George W. Parke Custis, Eleanor Parke Custis, and William Lee, the colored body servant who has so miraculously survived so long and in so many different places. The scene is an interior looking out to a veranda and the distant Potomac. Young George Custis stands on the left; beside him is a globe. Washington is seated. One of the general's hands is on the boy's shoulder, the other on a table, on which is stretched a map of the future city of Washington. Mrs. Washington sits at the right side of the table, and she is pointing to the map with her fan. Behind the table is Eleanor Custis, and to her left and in rear of Mrs. Washington the colored servant, Lee. Washington is dressed in regimentals with top-boots and spurs on, and is looking benignly toward Martha, who has a sharp, business sort of expression on her face, and at a distance the outspread map appears not unlike a deed, and Mrs. Washington's action with the fan and tout ensemble would seem to say: "George, I won't join in the sale of this property." On one corner of the table is the general's hat, doubled up and resembling very much a huge rat. It and the servant's face are the two conspicuously dark, black objects in the engraving. The young children of the group, as every historical student knows, were Mrs. Washington's, by her first husband.

"Edwin was a noted engraver," said Mr. Sartain. "I wrote a life of him. He did some very good work. That which first brought him into prominence was an engraving of Dr. William Smith, the first provost of the university, or rather academy tuen, from which the university sprang. Dr. Smith was a uoted educationalist and invited out from England by Dr. Benjamin Frauklin and others to take charge of the old academy. Shortly after his introduction here a portrait of him was painted by Stuart; this was engraved by David Edwin, and so favorably impressed Stuart that he thereafter gave him all his work.

"In regard to the Washington family circle engraving, there are two of them; the latter one was engraved by my son from a picture by Prof. Scheussle, to whom he gave a commissiou to paint it. In this painting and engraving the family group is reversed, but contains the same persons and similarly dressed. Mrs. Washington has the same large, white cap on, the general the ruffled shirt and dress, but minus the spurs. The body servant is depicted entering the door in the rear, and the scene does not look out on the river. Prof. Scheussle's painting was an admirable composition, perhaps a little too small. The engraving from this was very popular, and great numbers were sold. This class of subjects, Lincolu's family and Grant's, are very popular. It is not often, however, the original one of the Washington group—either my son's or Edwin's—are met with.

"Napoleon crossing the Alps was a noted engraving done by Edwin. The original of this was painted by David, and was in the collection of Joseph Bonaparte at Bordentown. While there one night it fell from above the mantel where it hung, and was pierced by the arms of several candelabra, which stood on the mantel, and was badly injured. Afterward it was restored. Napoleon in this picture is very slender, as in Hondon's statue. When he was a young man and first consul he was slight and had a hungry, vulpine, but wonderfully powerful expression."—Philadelphia Times.

The oak tree planted by Lord Byron at Newstead abbey is large and flourishing, although the alder on which he cut the names "Byron and Augusta" long since died. The portion of the tree on which the names were carved is preserved among the treasured mementoes of the poet in the abbey. The tree planted by Dr. Livingstone is on the lawn, as well as the one planted by Stanley. The present owner of Newstead was the one white friend and bosom companion of Livingstone during his years of wonderful work in Africa. This Col. Webb, who bought the abbey of Col. Wildman, the wealthy West India planter, who bought it of Lord Byron, is the man who saved Livingstone's life by shooting the lion which, after fearfully mutilating him, still stood over his prostrate body.

Guizot's CELEBRATED HISTORY OF FRANCE from the Earliest Times to 1848. By M. Guizot, Prime Minister of France, continued from his notes, by his daughter, Mme. Guizot De Witt. Complete in 8 vols., large 12mo., bound elegantly in fine cloth, gilt tops. A new edition just issued, reduced in price to $6.00, including postage. This is much the best edition published of this magnificent work, which is known as the best popular history of France. The cost of the imported edition, with substantially the same illustrations is $36.00, while this is certainly the best in form, and the most desirable for the library. "THE MATCHLESS BRILLIANCY of Guizot's style, his graphic descriptions of men and events, his painstaking minuteness of detail, the lucidity and ease of his style and the admirable philosophic reflections, all combine to render it worthy of the description it bears as the most popular history of France. It is as fascinating as a novel, and as life-like as a theatrical representation of the events and personages it describes. How the set can be sold for that price remains, after much reflection, a mystery, for the work is not sham work, it is well done; altogether it is a marvel of cheapness. Mr. Alden has done much for the cause of good literature, but nothing better than this."—Daily Times, Buffalo, N.Y. "What VICTOR HUGO is in fiction, Cousin in philosophy, Guizot is in history. Among Frenchmen he had but few peers."—Christian Leader, Boston, Mass. "IT IS FAR THE best history of France that has been written. It is a wonder of cheapness."—Christian Advocate, Richmond, Va. "SUCH A HISTORY, by such a writer, and at such a price, should gain readers by the thousand."—Churchman, Richmond, Va. "IN STYLE of cover, firmness of binding, quality of letter-press, affluence of illustration, and lowness of price, this edition of one of the noblest historical works in existence, is one of the most remarkable publications now offered to the public."—Morning Star, Dover, N. The Pennsylvania Aerolite.

The people of Southwestern Pennsylvania were startled on the 26th of September, by the occurrence of a very unusual phenomenon; an immense aerolite had deseended upon them. At first the impression prevailed that the district had been visited by an earthquake, or that a terrible explosion of natural gas had taken place, while others decided that a pretty large set of boilers had burst, or that a gigantic blast had thrown down a large mass of rock from some neighboring quarry. Loud detonations were heard throughout that entire section, the explosions apparently following a straight line across the country, and causing not a little consternation among the people.

The meteor seems to have passed from the northeast to the southwest, and the noise of its passage, which was variously described as resembling the rattling of heavy artillery over a solid road-bed or as a mighty peal of thunder, was heard over a large area of country in the neighborhood of Pittsburg and to the south. A number of witnesses describe it as an immense mass of fire, fully as large as the largest barns—and Pennsylvania barns it will be remembered are noted for their size. A powerful flame of deep red color, which tapered off into a darker tail, seemed attached to the mass. This, however, is stated to have disappeared as the meteor came nearer, and the color of the mass changed to a bluish white, which was maintained as long as it remained in sight.

A mail-carrier on horseback and a man who was plowing at the time both describe their animals as being so terrified that they remained perfectly motionless, and could not be persuaded to stir for several minutes after the fiery visitor had disappeared. It finally struck the earth on the farm of Mr. Buckland, in Jefferson township, Washiugton County, near the West Virginia line. The stone broke into three pieces, and became partly buried. The color is gray, with streaks of red running over it; possibly from the formation of sesquioxide of iron. The form is irregular, and the dimensions, if correctly reported, are without precedent. It is stated to be from thirty to fifty feet in diameter, but we doubt very much that the statement can be verified. The Gibbs meteorite, in the Yale College cabinet at New Haven, is noted for its size, but it weighs only 1,635 pounds, and has a length of 3 feet 4 inches, a breadth of 2 feet 4 inches, and a height of 1 foot 4 inches. It came from the Red River.

A still more noted one is the Tuscon meteorite, from Sonora, Mexico, which is now in the Smithsonian Institution. It is ring-shaped, and forty-nine inches in its greatest diameter. The most remarkable masses of which we have any knowledge have been found in South America. One discovered in the district of Chaco-Gualamba was estimated to weigh sixteen tons. These weights and volumes would, however, be quite dwarfed by a comparison for those reported for the Pennsylvania meteorite. But there is probably still a little romance attached to these accounts, and the true dimensions will not be reached until later.

An odd superstition clings to meteors, and many who witnessed this remarkable one were inspired with the dread belief that it brought with it a spirit of pestilence and famine; but if these people would only call to remembrance the wide prevalence of meteoric visitors they would conclude that the most persistent spirit which their imagination would attach to them must be quite exhausted by this time. Dr. Kleiber, of St. Petersburg, has calculated that 4,950 pounds of meteoric dust fall to the earth every hour, which would make fifty-nine tons a day or more than 21,500 tons in a year, while Professor Proctor thinks even this estimate is too small. Yet very little damage is done by the fall of these "air stones," for the most part of them fall upon unoccupied ground or into the sea. Relic hunters are reported to be already at work and carrying off the meteorite by picemeal. This seems to indicate either that the mass was very much shattered by its fall or that it has a large predominance of stony matter which would enable fragments to be broken off, for the most accomplished vandal would find difficulty in securing a souvenir from a piece of meteoric iron.—Scientific American.

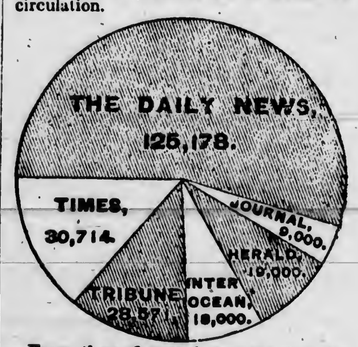
The Chicago Daily News

Has the Largest Daily Circulation in America.

Its issue for the year 1884 averaged 125,178 copies daily, and it is now regularly printing over 130,000 papers a day.

The magnitude of this unequaled circulation is best appreciated when it is said that it exceeds the circulations of all other Chicago dailies combined. Taking from the three standard newspaper directories—Ayer & Son's Annual, Rowell's Directory and Hubbard's Directory—the quotations which most nearly represent the actual circulations of the Chicago press, the following diagram correctly illustrates their relative positions as to extent of circulation.



From these figures it appears that the circulation of THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS exceeds the combined circulations of all the other Chicago dailies by 19,873 copies daily. The reasons for this phenomenal success are obvious:

THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS is a complete newspaper in all that constitutes the best type of American journalism.

It is a member of the Associated Press, and is the only 2-cent paper in the West that possesses this first essential to a complete news service. In addition, it has its own private wire (by lease from the Western Union Telegraph Co.) connecting its Chicago office with New York and Washington, at both of which points it has its own news bureaus. THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS prints ALL the news.

It is an independent paper. It recognizes the utility of political parties as means for the accomplishment of proper ends, but it declines to regard any mere party as a fit subject for unquestioning adoration. It solicits the patronage of intelligent, thoughtful, honest people, who love country more than party.

THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS is a "short and to the point" paper. It believes that newspaper reading is but an incident of the day, not its chief business. It accordingly leaves to the "blanket-sheets" the monopoly of tiresome and worthless amplification. It seeks to say all that the reader should care to read, and to say it in the shortest possible manner. It is a daily paper for busy people.

It is a clean paper, fit for the family circle. It is a cheap paper—2 cents per day, 12 cents per week, 50 cents per month, $6.00 per year. Sold by all news dealers throughout the Northwest. Mailed to any address, post-paid, upon receipt of price.

Where the facilities of a daily mail are not enjoyed THE CHICAGO WEEKLY NEWS is recommended as "the next best." It is a large 8 page, 64 column paper, carefully made up to meet all the varying needs of the family circle. It is the largest "dollar weekly" in America. It is equal to the best.

The Enterprise has just got in a lot of new body type.

Monroe Dickinson is the new postmaster at Boyne Falls.

The tug Anspach was frisking about on Round lake on Monday.

We would call the attention of our readers to the change in Bartholomew & Co's. ad. in this issue.

The JOURNAL job room is turning out some neat work these days, in cards, envelopes, letter-heads, bills and programmes. Call and look over our specimens.

The name George prevailed at Hayes' camp this winter. Beginning with the foreman, we have Geo. Hoag, Geo. Wilson, Geo. Abrier, Geo. Vosburg, Geo. Miller, Geo. Wakefield and Geo. Lynn.

The fact that the Boyne City folks have picked out the site for county buildings, is proof that they expect the county to build them at once. If they expected to build a town hall, and let the county occupy it, that is what they would talk about.

"The Boys' Band of Charlevoix which accompanied the [minstrel] troupe, rendered some fine music, in the afternoon and evening preceding the entertainment, on our streets. Charlevoix may well be proud of this band, as it is the best one that place ever had."—Enterprise.

Steele's big store in Advance, took fire on Saturday while the citizens were nearly all at a caucus meeting. Parties from Boyne saw the fire and went to assist in removing goods. The postoffice and telephone office were both located here. The greater part of the mail was saved, but the building is a total loss.

Burns & Scroggie, our enterprising liverymen, are soon to have five new horses in their stables, and as many new carriages and buggies, with harness to make the outfit complete. They have also purchased and refitted a fine hack, and now feel better prepared than ever before, to accommodate all in need of livery service.

The village schools re-open next Monday, for the spring term. A complete adjustment of classes for the coming year, is now being made, and it is urgently requested by all the teachers, that patrons place their children in school at the opening of the term. Pupils coming later cannot be properly classified, and the consequence must be a loss of position by the pupil or a delay of the majority of the class.

On information furnished by C. Y. Cook and Dr. Preston, Messrs. L. D. Bartholomew & Co. have made application to the State Fish Commissioner to have McGeagh's creek, Stover creek, and Newman creek stocked with brook trout. We all have an interest in hoping for the final success of the enterprise. It will undoubtedly be done if owners of land through which the streams pass do not raise an objection to the streams being fished as public waters.

The April issue of The Library Magazine, containing its usual variety of current literature of the highest order, announces that with its next issue, radical changes will take place. It will thereafter be published weekly instead of monthly. Without increase in price it will give an increased amount of valuable literature, and great gain in freshness and timeliness will be possible. A specimen copy of the Magazine in its new form will be sent free to any applicant. John B. Alden, Publisher, 393 Pearl St., New York City. G. W. CROUTER, Agent, Charlevoix.

The Mossback's Questions Answered.

In our issue of March 11th, we published a communication from a prominent citizen of Marion who signs himself "Mossback," in which several questions were asked concerning matters of vital importance at this time. A rush of business prevented our immediate reply to these questions. We now undertake to do justice to our friend's attempt to get at truth and fact. We take the questions in the order in which they were asked.

1—"Is there any truth in the railroad yarns?" This question was pretty effectually answered in our issue of March 18, but during the fortnight, new proofs that our first impressions of the matter were correct, have come to hand.

A Grand Rapids Democrat reporter interviewed Mr. Hughart a few days since, and published a statement to the effect that there has been for some time, a great deal of talk concerning a branch to Charlevoix, and especially to the furnace at Ironton. In this interview, Mr. Hughart says distinctly: "I have no doubt that the road will be built, but do not know how soon. The question is, whether we will run a direct line across the Arm or go around by East Jordan." And the article closes with the statement: "But there is no telling when the road will be built."

The statement, "go around by East Jordan," contemplates going to Boyne City first; but when it is found that Ironton can be reached via East Jordan direct from a little below Boyne Falls, by building 2½ or 3 miles more road, and building no bridge, the chances are that the iron horse will go screaming through East Jordan when the silence of Boyne City will be broken only by the hoots of the midnight owl.

2.—"And, if so [that is if there is truth in the 'railroad yarn'] might there not be some better point on the route for the county seat, if we vote to leave it where it is at present?"

We think so. If the most sanguine hopes of the most enthusiastic Boynist should be realized, Ironton would still be the center of population and business, and the most accessible point to all parties on county business. By voting to leave the county seat where it is, we let the question rest until what is best for all can be determined.

3.—"Can the supervisors build a bridge across the Arm without a vote of the people?"

The supervisors can appropriate $1000 each year, for such purposes. (Howl. St. 483, sub. 7.) At this rate it would take from 50 to 75 years to complete the bridge. But what a burden to the people would this tax become! Besides a vote of the people, it is necessary to have a permit from the U. S. Gov., since the Arm is navigable water, and under control of the secretary of war. In connection with this, we would state that the supervisors could tax the people to the tune of $1000 a year for public buildings. They could set a gang of men as work, pay them cash until the $1,000 is exhausted, and give them orders on the county for the balance. Then they could audit these orders, and make them an indebtedness against the county, and in that way compel the people to pay the amount of this indebtedness the 2d year. The bulk of the taxes come from this end of the county; so there would be little hesitation on the part of the supervisors in proceeding in this high handed manner, since all the benefit would accrue to the eastern portion of the township.

4—"Are those parties who guaranteed county buildings, free of cost to the county, all responsible parties?"

This question was pretty effectually answered in our last issue; but for the benefit of our numerous new subscribers, we recapitulate what we then stated:

If they really intended to furnish free county buildings, they would have begun last summer to erect a town hall. They will probably say, The county seat is where you have put it, now furnish your own buildings. It would be to their interest not to keep their promise, for by so doing they would make the county invest money there, and so insure the permanent location of the county seat there. The expense would not deter them, for, as we said before, they pay but a small per cent of the taxes and reap all the benefits. The board of supervisors last year, equalized the six western townships at $1,380,150, and the eight eastern townships at $889,092, Wilson we leave out of account, as being equally benefited either way.

5.—"And would not such a guarantee, supposing the parties were good, be outlawed in less than ten years?"

It is good for nothing; both because it is not in writing and because there is no indemnity, or tangible value received on their part.

In the case of Charlevoix and East Jordan, it was to their interest to keep their pledge, because they well knew that when they failed to do so, they would certainly lose the county seat. But with Boyne City, by breaking their promise, they will certainly hold the county seat.

The County Seat Question.

Charlevoix, March 23, 1886.

EDITOR JOURNAL,—The county-seat question seems to be the all-absorbing theme, and many schemes have been resorted to, hoping, no doubt, to hood-wink the people to vote for the removal of the county seat from East Jordan to Boyne City, but alas for Boyne, their many projects won't work, for I do not believe that the good sense of the people of Charlevoix will vote to remove the county seat to Boyne City. Why? 1st. Boyne wanted it at East Jordan; now let them be satisfied for at least five years with the good they think they have accomplished; 2d. Should Boyne get the county seat, they having a majority of supervisors in that hashed up part of the county, the question would not be submitted to the people again; 3d. If Boyne gets the county seat, they, having a majority of supervisors, could make it very warm for the tax-payers by levying taxes year after year to the tune of a $20,000 court house, and that will surely be done, if, by any hocus pocus, they can secure the county seat. What care they so long as the wealth lies in Charlevoix and the western end of the county? Who would want to locate here with a bonded debt of $20,000 hanging over our heads? No one. It sounds very nice and looks very well in print, regarding the free building for ten years, but when leading men are unscrupulous enough to boast that they would move the county seat into a swamp, and would make all the expense they could, to get the county seat at Boyne, and, when there, harrass the people with levying taxes for county buildings, that the people of Charlevoix would be glad to give up in a financial death struggle. It is time the people of Charlevoix and the western part of the county begin to think, and think seriously about how they vote Monday, April 5th, 1885.

Growth of a Big Book.

When Webster's Unabridged was first published in one volume, it was a comparatively small book. Some years after, an addition was made of 1500 pictorial illustrations, a table of synonyms, and an appendix of new words that had come into use. A few years later came an entirely new revised edition of larger size, with 3000 pictorial illustrations, then, after an interval of a few years, a biographical dictionary of nearly 10,000 names, and a supplement of nearly 5000 new words were added, and now there has come a new and most valuable addition; a gazetteer of the world, of over 25,000 Titles. The work is now not only the dictionary, par excellence, but a biographical dictionary, a gazetteer of the world, and a great many other good things in its many valuable tables.

Gradually the chains are tightening around the drink and tobacco evils. A bill has just been introduced into the Iowa legislature which provides that no person who uses alcoholic stimulants, tobacco or opium shall be qualfied to teach in the public schools or colleges of the state, or be eligible to the office of county superintendent or member of state board of examiners. This is a move in the right direction. In many of the states the evils of alcohol, tobacco and opium are required to be taught in the schools by the laws of the state. If these laws are taught by precept only, not much will be accomplished. It is right and proper, therefore that the state should require both precept and example from those whom it employs to teach the children.

Miss Cleveland's temperance views have come to the front at her 2 o'clock luncheons to ladies, at which there are Apollinaris and Potomac water instead of wines; and lemonade instead of punch. This meets with very general approval, not only among those she invites, but women outside the entertainments expressed approbation. The president may do as he wishes at his dinner parties, serving six or seven wines if he chooses. These luncheons are handsome entertainment and social occasions much enjoyed by the guests.

Don't be scared when they call you a "fanatic." Remember that a few years ago they were denouncing Lincoln, Greely, Chase, Seward, Garrison and Lovejoy as "fanatics." To-day these names and others that voted with them are the brightest among the cherished names of the nation. The fanatics of to-day are the heroes of to-morrow. It has ever been thus in the history of the race, and thus it will continue till the end of time.

Let there be an entire abstinence from intoxicating drinks throughout this country during the period of a single generation, and a mob would be as impossible as combustion without oxygen.—Horace Mann.

A Unique Cyclopedia.

An extremely valuable Cyclopedia, and of very great popular interestis Alden's Cyclopedia of Universal Literature, Volume II. of which is just published. Novel in plan, and novel in form, at once beautiful and convenient, and at a price low even compared with Mr. Alden's always low prices, this volume gives in its nearly 500 pages biographical sketches of one hundred and eleven prominent authors, with characteristic selections from their writings. The following authors, among others, appear in this volume: Audubon, St. Augustine, D'Auvergne, Bacon, Balzac, Bancroft, Banim, Barbauld, Beecher (severrl of the name), Bentham, Bion, Bjornson, Black (William), Blackstone, Blessington (Countess of) and Boccaccio; thus representing nearly all ages and all nations even in this volume—American, English, French, German, Italian, Greek, Latin, Swedish, Portugese, Scotch, Dutch, Irish, Norwegian, and Danish authors—from the period 280 B. C. to A. D. 1886. The literary and mechanical workmanship are both of a high order. The work is really one that ought to find a place in every home library; it offers a fund of entertainment and instruction that will prove well-nigh inexhaustible. The price, only 60 cents a volume, makes its possession possible even to nearly every school-boy. The work is published also in Parts of 160 pages each (exchangable at any time for bound volumes), which are sent post-paid for 15 cents each. Every reader of this notice ought to get at least a specimen Part for examination. John B. Alden, Publisher, New York; G. W. Crouter agent Charlevoix.

STOCK GROWERS

All agree that for general use in their business no powder is better calculated to give satisfactory results than those prepared by E. M. Parmelee, because they really contain the valuable remedies claimed, and do not fail to act quickly and effectively in coughs, colds, epizootic, bad blood, stoppage of water, poor digestion etc. in horses. For cattle, hogs, sheep, and poultry, they are invaluable. Full pounds only 35 cents.

Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

DO YOU VALUE

your horses and cattle? Attention to their health is as necessary as their regular food. If your horse is suffering from epizootic, ringbone, spavin, sprained leg, fever in feet, strains, bruises, or cuts, or your cow has caked bag, sore teats, or bad blood, you will save money by buying PARMELEE'S UNIVERSAL LINIMENT and using it freely for any or all of these troubles, and so bring your stock into a healthful and valuable condition. It is the best liniment also for general family use. Price 25 and 50 cents per bottle.

Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

INCIPIENT CONSUMPTION,

Coughs, colds, bronchitis, &c., are all the results of neglect or exposure, and must have prompt and active remedies to remove them. Croup and whooping cough cause great suffering because an effective remedy is not at hand. Why, then, leave yourself and children exposed to danger and death, when HAMILTON'S COUGH BALSAM will relieve all of these and prevent diseases, such as pneumonia, inflammation of lungs, and consumption. All lung difficulties are removed by this remedy. Price 25 and 50 cts. per bottle.

Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

BLOOD! BLOOD! BLOOD!

Is a necessity to all animal life, and to be free from disease the blood must be pure. There is no doubt that PARMELEE'S BLOOD PURIFIER excells in the driving out of all impurities and building up the system by making new blood, thus preventing the disorders so common, of sores, ulcers, boils, humors, pimples, erysipelas, etc. Do not wait, but prevent them by a free use of the PURIFIER. Large bottles $1.00.

Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

☞Now is the time your horses and cattle need attention. To prevent disease and tone up the system you will find Parmelee's Condition Powders unexcelled. Full pounds 35 cts. Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton. 92-143

Familiarity Breeds Beauty, Too.

After you come to know people very intimately, you do not know whether they are pretty or not. Their ways make an impression on you, but not their noses and ears, their eyes and mouths. In time the soul expresses itself to you, and it is that which you see. A man who has been married twenty years scarcely knows what his wife looks like. He may declare that he does, and tell you that she is a bewitching little blonde, with soft blue eyes, long after she is fat and red and 40; because the image of his early love is in his heart, and he doesn't see her as she is to-day, but as she was when he courted her.

Or, being an indifferent husband he may not know she is the fine woman that other people think her. You have known men who have married the plainest women and think them beauties; and you know beauties who are quite thrown away on men who value a wife for her success as a cook.

A LEGEND OF INNSPRUCK.

BY HARRY HALDWIN

Tempest and storm were raging with wild fury through the rocky mountain passes and deep gorges surrounding the little village of Innsprucken, nestled in the beautiful valley of the Loire, one chilly September evening in the year 1753, as Gottlieb Gluck, the keeper of the only inn the place afforded, drew the blinds of the bar and seated himself before the glowing fire, with a smile of satisfaction and pleasure upon his rubicund face. If it was dreary and inhospitable without, in the cosy room of the tavern, with the large fire-place emitting cheerfulness and warmth, and the portly, shining bottles of the bar burnished and bright, all was inviting and of a nature calculated to inspire feelings of comfort and contentment. Besides, the season had been a fortunate one for honest old Gottlieb, and his coffers swelled with hard-earned guilders, the result of care and attention to his summer visitors. It was not strange, therefore, that as he took the huge arm-chair before the fire, he cast a satisfied glance at his evening customers, who sat smoking and drinking at a table near by.

Suddenly there was a lull in the storm—a lull following a long, wild shriek of the sweeping wind, with which seemed mingled a scream so unearthly and yet so human that the men at the table dropped their pipes and looked askance at their host, who half rose to his feet at the ghostly whisper of his "help," young Arnold Tegtmeyer:

"What was that?"

Whether the dying echo of the wind was human or not, they never knew; but their expectancy of something uncanny was satisfied a moment later, when there came a loud knock at the outer door, followed by a rude push against the paneled barrier, and as it flew open there entered a man whose strange and sudden appearance brought every person in the room to his feet.

He was a tall, thin man, with cadaverous face and wildly gleaming eyes, appareled in a long black cloak, which, sweeping back from his form, revealed a glossy velvet suit beneath, and a richly jeweled sword. In his arms he bore a bundle, wrapped in folds of dark crimson cloth, like a silken counterpane, and as he confronted the gaping throng his wet and dripping garments, and pale, wild-eyed features caused them to draw back with mingled consternation and surprise.

"Well!" he said, finally, a fierce sneer on his lip, a sharp rebuke in his tone of voice, "have ye never seen a benighted traveler before, that ye stare at him as though he were the evil demon himself? Who is the landlord here?"

Gottlieb, somewhat reassured at the honest German of his strange guest, advanced a step and intimated his proprietorship of the inn.

"Then prepare your best room at once, if this be an inn; if not, direct me to the nearest tavern. My horse is without, shelter and feed him at once, and lead the way to my apartment."

With a trembling hand and flustered manner the host took a lighted candle from the mantel, and led the way to the open staircase leading to the upper story. The stranger followed him closely, and as they reached the front apartment of the upper floor laid his burden carefully on the bed, and confronted the innkeeper.

"Listen to me," he said impressively, as he took a purse from his pocket; "this purse contains a hundred guilders—leave this room and do not return until I call for you. If any come for me, if any inquiries are made concerning me——"

"But, your worship," began Gottlieb—"a fire, a warm meal or a change of clothing——"

"Nothing, I tell you," briefly replied the stranger. "Go, you are paid. See that I am not disturbed."

As he spoke he grasped the candle and thurst the innkeeper unceremoniously into the outer passage, with the purse in his hand.

"But," persisted Gottlieb, "you spoke of visitors; who are you? What shall I tell——"

"The devil, if you like," interrupted the stranger sharply, and closed the door in his host's face.

"I believe it," muttered Gottlieb as he groped his way down the dark stairs. "Himmel! what was that?"

Less terrifying and far more human than the voice without which had so startled him but a few moments before, there sounded on his ears the low, plaintive wail of an infant. There could be no mistaking the sound, and as the innkeeper entered the public room, curiosity and interest were depicted on every face at the amazement and consternation expressed in his own.

"Business is business," he said as he resumed his seat, and held the netted purse in his hand, with the gold pieces shining between its silken chinks, up to the view of his friends, "and his lordship pays royally; yet it is a question with me if his worship's last words do not refer more accurately to himself than he might wish it to be considered."

"What was it he said?" queried one of the men at the table.

"That he was the devil."

A silence brooded over the little throng for a few moments following the words, and the bar-boy, Arnold Tegtmeyer, after fortifying himself with a large drink of spirits at the bar, walked restlessly to the window and gazed gloomily forth into the darkness and ruin.

He might have stood there five minutes or more, when the little company, which had meanwhile drifted into various speculations and comments on the strange visitor, were suddenly startled by a cry of amazement and terror from the lad. Intuitively each man sprang to his feet, and hastened to the spot. Every eye followed the direction indicated by the white-faced lad, and a cold horror overspread each face as they looked and saw——

A sight which curdled their blood with a nameless terror. Running from the house was a large timber, which connected twenty feet away with the stables of the inn below, and pendent from which was the gate of the place. About eight feet above this was a second timber running in the same direction and strengthening the frame-work of the entire structure. There was a peculiar history connected with this second beam, for from it had once been hung five malefactors, and the iron rings through which the fatal ropes had been passed were still there; and as each man looked he saw standing on the lower beam, and supporting himself by the upper one, the weird stranger. Whatever his mission, whatever his intent, in the light which shone from the windows of the upper room his Mephistophelean face and ghostly appearance caused him to resemble some demon. Light as a sprite, quick as an acrobat, he swung from the place and disappeared from their view within the window of his apartment.

The inmates of the house were intensely horrified. To their superstitious minds the man was nothing more nor less than what he had himself claimed to be—the devil. Pallor and fear marked every face; silence and awe brooded over the room. As a loud knocking came to the door and an imperious voice demanded admittance, there was not a face that did not pale in expectancy of some new and startling developments in the affair of the man-teufel in the upper apartment.

"Gottlieb Gluck!" sonorous and stern sounded a voice through the stilled room.

Trembling in every limb, as though a summons from the arch-demon himself had sounded on his startled hearing, the landlord came forward.

"I am here," he quivered, and then, as he recognized in the new-comer the Captain of the guard at the Castle Rubenstein, the principal estate in the canton, his face resumed its wonted hue of health, and he waved his visitors and the four soldiers following him into the bar.

The Captain strode into the apartment and glanced fiercely about him, his manner excited, his bearing military, his face ominous with an expression of concern as though some matter of weighty importance rested upon his mind.

"Gottlieb Gluck," he said, in that tone which the police employ in addressing a suspected criminal, "this visit is an official one."

"An official visit to my house," stammered the landlord, awed by the Captain's commanding presence.

"Yes. The King places the ban of martial law on this place until the house is searched."

"Searched?"

Gottlieb could only rapidly repeat the soldier's words.

"Aye, you are suspected——"

Smuggling, theft—a hidden crime about to be revealed.

The gossips were burning with curiosity; their eager hearts hung on the Captain's next words.

"Suspected of harboring a criminal," was the conclusion of the officer's words.

A smile of excitement and relief broke over the landlord's broad face.

"Ah!" he cried, "I thought it. Our satanic visitor, we might have known."

"A tall, fierce-looking man, with cloak and sword?" asked the Captain, in his eagerness springing to the side of Gottlieb and catching his arm.

"Yes, and face like the tempter of Faust," assented the latter.

"Where is he?" demanded the Captain, excitedly.

Gottlieb pointed up the stairway.

"Remain here!" cried the Captain to the soldiers, eager to cover himself with glory, and speeding up the stairway with drawn sword.

With anxiously beating hearts the little coterie below held their breath, but no sound of clashing arms, of a struggle, or of an alarm sounded on their ears. Instead, they trembled with excitement, as a moment later the Captain came rushing down the stairs, his face pale and disappointed.

"The fiends!" he cried, "the murderer has escaped!"

"The murderer?" cried Gottlieb, aghast.

"Aye, the assassin of our noble master, the Count Ulrich Rubenstein, at the castle."

A somber hush brooded over the little throng. The Count Rubenstein murdered! Surprise alone held them speechless, for no other emotion swayed their hearts save a secret satisfaction that the cruel and rapacious Count, the terror of his maiden peasantry, the oppressor of the poor, who, rumor said, had murdered his own wife, the beautiful Lady Agatha, to wed another, had met a deserved fate.

A cry from the tap-boy, Tegtmeyer, directed attention to the window where he stood.

"See," he cried, "der teufel."

The soldiers sprang to his side as he spoke.

There, crossing the beam toward the stable, the same burden in his arms he had borne when he entered the inn, was the strange visitor. He swayed to and fro on his dizzy perch, as though each fierce gust of wind would sweep him to the icy court below.

"It is he," cried the Captain. "He must not escape. Fire!"

With studied promptness the guns of the four soldiers covered the swaying figure. A deafening crash followed. When the smoke had cleared away the window frame was seen a ruined mass of splintered glass and wood.

They hastened to the yard, but sought in vain for the corpse of the assassin. Only a trail of blood to the stables; the steed gone, the tracks leading to the mountain gorges evidenced that the stranger, though doubtless wounded, had disappeared.

"He was no man—he was the devil," muttered the awe-stricken landlord.

The Captain turned upon him fiercely.

"Fool!" he cried. "He was no demon, except a human one. He entered the castle, stole the jewels ready for the Count's approaching marriage, murdered our master, and then taking the young son and heir of the Count from the cradle, escaped.

"It is retribution for the Count's murder of his wife," boldly spoke up one of the burghers.

"Silence!" commanded the Captain. "It is treason to speak thus. It was an assassin's deed to rob and murder without warning; but he cannot escape, for he is known."

"He is known?"

"Aye, as the brother of the dead Lady Agatha, who a month since sent a message to the Count from Tunis, warning him that he would avenge his sister's death."

"But, how do you know it is he?" asked Gottlieb, skeptically.

"Because," replied the soldier, impressively, "attached to the hilt of the dagger found buried in the Count's heart was this."

As he spoke he drew from his pocket a blood-soiled piece of paper, and, as he held it up to their view, the dagger-hole piercing it, they read:

This, a bridal present from the brother of the murdered Countess, Lady Agatha.

Twenty years, passing rapidly away, brought strange changes to the little town of Innsprucken, the castle, and the inn.

As serenely as slept the beautiful victim of her husband's cruelty in the grave, so slumbered the mystery of the tragedy which had sent the wicked Count Rubenstein to a dishonored grave, and left the castle without a master.

For, as effectually as had the avenger of his sister's wrongs escaped the quest of justice, so had the stolen heir disappeared, and in his stead, as provisional legatee of the estates, reigned Albert, cousin of the dead Count, a man only awaiting the opportunities of undisputed possession of the castle and its revenues to exert the same oppression as had his predecessor.

The most singular and marked change was, however, that which had come over the fortunes of the honest burgher, Herr Gluck. The old inn was no longer the scene of jollity and feasting; the merry, careless song of the citizen no longer sounded through the spacious tap-room. Instead, gloom and silence had settled down over the outcast inn. The gables rotted slowly away without repair; the gaudy sign-board had faded to a mere suggestion of outline and color, and neglect and poverty were evidenced in house, stables, and field.

A curse seemed to have come over the house, and, brooding there, drove, with its dark shadows, the honest but superstitious burghers to careless neglect of their old friend. The tap-was dusty and disorderly, the bottles cobwebbed and broken, and the landlord, pale and emaciated, sat from morning till night in the shadow of the large fireplace, either drowning memory in the aqua-vitæ pot or loudly lamenting the change of fortune that had depleted his well-filled coffers and made him a reproach to his neighbors.

The curse, if such it was, had begun with the night of the murder. The story, with Gottlieb Gluck's share in it, seemed to have given an uncanny reputation to the tavern. Man or devil, the assassin had walked on air in escaping the soldiery, and had left the witchcraft of ill-luck about the place. First neglected, then avoided, the inn of the Five Iron Rings became a resting place for such few transient customers as knew not its story.

Finally an event transpired which made those who were venturesome enough to visit the inn in the daytime avoid it at all hours. Strange sights and noises to be seen and heard at night, so rumor said, drove the superstitious to a wide detour of the demon-haunted place, and the new tragedy, which had still further aided its uncanny reputation, was the theme of speculation and idle comment in Innsprucken for many a day.

It happened just twenty years, to a day, to an hour, after its initial occurrences. Gottlieb Gluck was his own tap-boy now, for customers and servants had alike deserted him. Upon the evening referred to a man habited in a long, dark cloak, mysterious in manner and talk, had entered the place and asked for a night's lodging.

The similarity of his attire to that of the assassin of the Count Ulrich had prejudiced the landlord against him, but he silently showed him to his room, the same apartment occupied by Lady Agatha's brother, nearly a quarter of a century before.

The circumstance revived bitter and sorrowful memories in old Gottlieb's mind, for from that event dated all his evil fortunes.

Midnight had tolled from the castle tower ere he arose, dizzy from unusual potations, to put out the lights. As he glanced from the window, however, every benumbed sense was revived, every energy brought into action. One glance at the beam of the iron rings, one look of frozen horror at the swinging figure he surely saw there, and Gottlieb Gluck fell, an inert mass, to the floor.

An excited, horrified throng found him thus in the morning, eager to question him concerning the body of a man found in the court-yard a few minutes previous. They aided him to reach the yard.

A groan burst from the lips of the unhappy man as he gazed at the crushed, lifeless figure lying on the stone flags under the court-yard beam.

It was his guest of the previous night, and in his outstretched hand, torn from the wood in the upper beam of the framework, was one of the five iron rings.

Gloomier and darker grew the tavern after this event, more unsavory its reputation, more morose and despondent its afflicted landlord. People rarely spoke to him on the street, and all the old superstitions of ancient times, revived by the simple-minded burghers, operated to decree him a being in league with the demon of evil.

"I am accursed," he groaned, one night as he sat alone in the gloomy old inn.

"It is the fiend himself come for me," he muttered desperately, a moment later, as a knock sounded at the door.

He confronted the visitor curtly, a man arrayed in the same long black cloak, a man possessing the same mysterious countenance as the victim of the ring tragedy a month previous.

"A night's lodging, mine host," he said cheerily. But Gottlieb opposed his entrance.

"I am not prepared for guests," he said.

"But I must find lodgings. I will put up with inconveniences."

Gottlieb sighed as he repaired to his bed that night, after showing the man to a room. He had offered him a small apartment in the haunted chamber. With a light laugh the stranger had taken the latter.

"He is doomed," muttered Gottleib in vague apprehension.

He was right, with the morning light his body was found lying exactly in the position occupied a month previous by the first victim, and in his hand was clutched tightly in a death grasp, the second of the five iron rings.

This second tragedy thrilled the public with a most somber terror, and drove Gottlieb to desperation. Popular belief accredited the Count's assassin and the two victims with being one and the same person, and that person the evil one.

There was strong talk of burning the inn, and driving Gottlieb from the town, but before this well-meant kindness on the part of the landlord's friends could be put into execution an event occurred which cleared up all the dread mystery and removed the baleful curse from the old inn of Innsprucken.

It was less than a month after the death of the second guest that a gloomy reverie of Gottlieb's, who began to believe that each one of the rings would bring a tragedy to his threshold, was broken in upon by the appearance of a visitor who, without announcing himself, walked into the bar.

"A room for the night," he said imperiously, as he spoke startling the old innkeeper to his feet.

Gottlieb regarded his visitor with undisguised dissatisfaction. He was young and handsome, but he wore the same cloak as the others, and at his belt swung a sword at the sight of the jeweled handle of which the old innkeeper started in superstitious horror.

But he crowded back the tumultuous thoughts which tortured mind and memory, and said:

"I have no rooms ready."

"Nevertheless, I must stay here all night," replied the other determinedly.

"Pardon, mine herr," returned Gottlieb, "but you must not."

"And why?" demanded the young cavalier, turning upon him his bright penetrating eyes. "If you are a licensed innkeeper you dare not refuse a guest."

Gottlieb was silent a moment or two. Finally he said:

"Are you a stranger here?"

The other hesitated for a moment, but replied "Yes,"

"Do you know the reputation of this place?"

"Aye, I do."

"And still desire to remain under this roof?"

"Not only under this roof," replied the young man, slowly and decidedly, "but in this very same haunted room your superstitions neighbors gossip so much about."

With a gesture of horror and submission, Gottlieb closed his lips and conducted his youthful guest to the fateful room.

"I will not permit him to share the fate of the others," he decided, as he returned to the bar. "So brave, so young, so like the warriors of my youth. I will have him watched.

An hour later the burgomaster of the village was startled by a visit from Gottlieb Gluck.

"A guard, mein herr," the landlord said.

"For what?" asked the burgomaster, a shade of annoyance in his tone.

"For the tavern."

"To fight the ghosts?"

"No."

"What then?"

"I have another mysterious guest. In the interests of intelligence and justice let him be watched."

The burgomaster did not hesitate after his visitor's explanation, and shortly afterward a guard of four men were dispersed in and about the tavern, to watch the windows and doors, the entrances to, and exits from the haunted chamber.

Midnight tolled slowly, and what they had anticipated actually occurred. At the first tap of the bell the window of the haunted room was thrust open. Intensely startled, they observed the young guest step through carefully to the beam, walk its length, steady himself, and reaching up select the outside ring of the three that remained. He tugged at it for some moments, and almost fell over when the rotten wood gave way. Then they observed him reach into the aperture formed by the screw of the ring and take out a small folded piece of paper, and retrace his footsteps to the haunted chamber.

There it was that they surprised him, with flushed and excited face, perusing a time-discolored letter, as they entered the apartment.

"What means this intrusion?" he demanded, arising haughtily, and half drawing his sword from its scabbard.

"It means that we desire you to accompany us to the burgomaster," replied the officer of the guard.

"For what purpose?"

"To explain your mysterious actions here to-night."

The stranger bowed quietly, and took up his plumed hat from the table.

"I am ready to accompany you," he said.

The officer approached to conduct him officially from the place as a prisoner.

"Back!" cried the stranger, indignantly. "I will not attempt to escape; I promise it, on the honor of a Rubenstein."

Strange words! They thrilled Gottlieb Gluck as he gazed earnestly upon the handsome stranger's face.

They roused the burgomaster, late as was the hour. Once assembled in his little office, the officer of the guard told his story.

"And now, sir," said the burgomaster, pomposnly, when he had concluded, "for yours. Your name?"

"Ulrich Rubenstein, Count of the Province of Innsprucken, and soldier of the King."

The magistrate's eyes opened to their widest possible extent.

"What is this farce?" he demanded, sternly.

"It is no farce," replied the young stranger. "I am the Count Ulrich, stolen by my uncle when he avenged my mother's death twenty years ago."

The story he related to substantiate his claim was a strange one. It was, indeed, Lady Agatha's brother who murdered Count Rubenstein. He had stolen the family jewels and the child, had secreted the former and gone to the inn. Here he had hastily written a few lines, and while crossing the beam to find some place to secrete it, fearing capture and death, had found the last of the five iron rings loose. He had placed the paper in the aperture formed for the staple, replaced the ring as firmly as possible, and later had escaped with the child.

But he was desperately wounded. Hastening to an old friend who led a band of free lances in the mountains, he had placed the child in his charge, and then had died.

He had first, however, written a letter telling all he had done, and establishing the parentage of the stolen child. This letter he bade his friend give to little Ulrich when he was twenty-one years old.

This letter, the stranger stated, he had received a few months previous to the present time. He had found it to contain the history of his life, and the reason why his uncle wished him to wait until of age before he attained his fortune was that the friends of his cruel father might kill him to secure the estates and title of their wicked relative.

As to the death of the men at the inn, that the young Count easily explained. His uncle in the letter had told him to go or send to the tavern, and that under the last ring a fortune would be found. He had sent two men in succession, but their avarice had evidently overcome their prudence. Believing that there must also be something of value under the other rings, they had began at the first one, and in removing it had fallen from the beam.

The paper he had found, as described, under the last ring, contained the clue to the hiding-place of the stolen jewels.

These were recovered, the provisional heir ousted, and Castle Rubenstein once more possessed a master.

Gottlieb Gluck was made seneschal of the castle, and, under new influences, regained his old rubicundity and good-humor. But he never forgot the tragedy and mystery of the Five Iron Rings.

In bee communities only one queen is permitted to develop, while the remaining females continue sterile, and become adapted to working duties. Among bees and ants males are never checked at the worker stage, but develop to become a possible burden on the community. Among bees males are suffered to live as long as food is abundant, but are mercilessly stung to death as soon as there is danger of lack of food.

A SLIDE DOWN THE BANISTERS.

Sliding down the banisters, though a swift and delightful way of getting down stairs, is not a popular method of descent except among boys of the hobble-dehoy age. When, therefore, Mr. Dolph Hotchkiss, a solid citizen of Peoria, Ill., adopted that style of coming down from his room recently it augured that something out of the usual line had happened to him. Such was indeed the case. Mr. Hotchkiss explains as follows why he preferred the railing to the stairs:

"It was last winter, during the month of December. One evening after getting home from the store I was taken with a severe pain in my ankle. It felt at first as if I had sprained it. I was up stairs when the trouble first came on and I wanted to go down. The pain, however, had increased so that I found that it was impossible to walk down the steps, and so I slid down the railing. From that night I began to grow worse, the pain became more severe, and my ankle gradually swelled up until it seemed as if the flesh would burst. It was almost impossible for me to lie in bed, and the least noise or attempt to move me would cause me the greatest agony.

"After being in bed a month I could not stay there any longer. I felt that I must have some kind of a change, and so I was moved into an easy chair, where I lay for two months, suffering more than words can express. My trouble was rheumatism. The doctors could do nothing for me. I used about every medicine I had ever heard of for rheumatism, and many different remedies recommended by my friends and neighbors, but nothing afforded me any relief. A lady friend living in Chicago, hearing of my affliction, wrote me, saying: 'Try Athlophoros. It cured me.'

"I was very glad to try anything. I had tried many different sorts of medicines, but this was new to me. I sent at once and bought a bottle and began using it. I had a terrible buzzing in my head at first, but as it was said in the directions I would have this if the medicine took hold of the disease, I stuck to it. The buzzing was nothing with my sufferings. I think it was on a Monday evening I first began with the Athlophoros. By the following Saturday the pain was nearly all gone, the swelling was very much reduced, and with the aid of a pair of crutches I went out for the first time in three months.

"I continued taking the Athlophoros until I had used four bottles. My pain and swelling had then all gone, and I had no further use for crutches. I have not felt any rheumatism since. Athlophoros is a very valuable medicine. I recommend it whenever I have a chance, and never want to be without some Athlophoros in the house in case I should ever again be so afflicted."

Mr. Hotchkiss' residence in Peoria is at No. 610 Hancock street. Greatly as he regrets the loss of three months' valuable time, not to speak of all the suffering and mental anguish he endured, he feels that there is some slight compensation in the fact that he was made acquainted with a medicine which can cure rheumatism and rob that disease of all its terrors. Mr. Hotchkiss, it is almost needless to state, has never had occasion to repent his ride on the railing.

An Easy Place.

A lad once stepped into our office in search of a situation. He was asked:

"Are you now employed?"

"Yes, sir."

"Then why do you wish to change?"

"Oh, I want an easier place."

We had not a place for him; no one wants a boy who is seeking an easy place; yet just here is the difficulty with thousands. They want easy work and are afraid of earning more than their wages.

They have strength enough to be out late at night, to indulge in vices and habits which debilitate them; they have strength enough to waste on wine or beer or tobacco, all of which leave them weaker than before; they have strength enough to run and leap and wrestle, but they think they have not the strength to do hard work.

Will the boys let us advise them? Go in for the hard places; bend yourself to the task of showing how much you can do. Make yourself serviceable to your employer at whatever cost to your own personal ease, and if you do this he will soon find that he cannot spare you, and when you have learned how to work you may be sent to teach others, and so when the easy places are to be had they will be yours. Life is toilsome at best to most of us, but the easy places are at the end, and not at the beginning, of life's course. They are to be won, not accepted, and a man who is bound to have an easy place may as well understand that the grave is the only easy place within the reach of lazy people.—Exchange.

The Beginning of Sickness.

Never trifle with what are called small ailments. A disorder easy of control at first, if neglected for a few weeks, may become a mortal disease. Be especially careful not to let debility gain upon you, for it is the door through which all maladies enter the system. If you feel languid, inert, and to use a common expression, "as if there was no life left in you," resort at once to Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. That great vegetable tonic will supply the vitality you so urgently need. It is nerve food. By its tonic action the stomach is so invigorated that digestion becomes regular, easy, perfect; while its mild cathartic properties relieve the bowels from obstructions, and its alterative operation beneficially affects all the secretive organs. For the miseries of dyspepsia, and they include almost every unpleasant feeling that belongs to physical disease and mental wretchedness, this potent tonic is a certain and speedy balm.

Around the County.

Facts and Figures.

EDITOR JOURNAL,—On Monday next will be decided the question which has for a long time occupied the public mind; whether the county seat remains for a time at East Jordan, or be permanently fixed at Boyne City, I wish to offer in as brief a manner as possible a few reasons that will lead me as well as others to vote against the removal at this time, and will try and confine myself mostly to facts and figures for the faith in me.

The population of Charlevoix in 1874, as shown by census was 2,360, of that 504 was in what is now known as the nine eastern towns, and 1,856 in the six western towns. In 1880 the population of the county was 5,115, and of that the nine eastern towns had 2126, and the six western 2989, an increase for the eastern towns of 1,625, while the western towns increased only 1,133; showing that between 1874 and 1880, the center of population had moved to the east. And about that time the agitation of the removal of the county seat to Boyne City commenced; and at that time it looked as if Boyne City might not only be near the geographical center, but the center of population also. In 1884, the population of the county was 9,462, and of this the eastern towns had 3,842, and the western towns 5620, an increase for the six western towns of 2,631, while the nine eastern towns only increased 1,716; showing plainly that the eastern towns lost between 1880 and 1884 all they had gained between 1874 and 1880. The increase in the eastern part of the county, between 1874 and 1880 was due largely to the building of the railroad, and to the settlement of unoccupied territory. And how is it now in 1886? We have no means of knowing the exact ratio of increase for the past two years, but every vote taken since 1884 shows plainly that the western towns have continued to increase much faster than the eastern ones. And I feel perfectly safe in making the statement that the township of South Arm alone has increased as much in population as the nine eastern towns combined; for it is a well known fact that the population of at least three of those towns is less than in 1884, or even in 1880. And this comparison has all been favorable to the eastern side from the fact that all the townships of Bear Lake, Evangeline and Wilson have been included in the eastern portion, when as a matter of fact, about one-third of each of these townships lies west of the center line drawn north and south through the county.

And what has been said in regard to increase of population is true in regard to the increased valuation of the two sections. I have not the figures to refer to, but think I will not be far wrong in making the statement that the six towns west of the center line has double the assessed valuation of the nine towns to the east of it, which comprise two-thirds of the area of the county. Now what sense is there in fixing a county seat at a point from which both the center of population and the commercial center has been rapidly receding for the past six years and with every prospect that it will continue to do so for the six years to come?

Now if there is any person or persons in the county, who think the county seat of a county should be always located at the exact geographical center of a county; such an one will not be convinced by any argument that the county seat should not be at or near Boyne City. But I think most of us believe in the doctrine of the greatest good to the greatest number. Your esteemed rival the Sentinel always advocated that doctrine so long as Charlevoix was the point in question. If he was right then, where is he now? There never has been a time, from the organization of the county to the present time, but that Charlevoix could be reached easier by a greater number of people than any other point in the county; and there by right it might to have remained until the county developed enough to show where the permanent center of convenience was likely to be. I have not been trying to prove that East Jordan is the center of population or that it ever will be; or that the county seat ought always to remain there. It is nearer to-day the center of population and the commercial center than Boyne City. It was removed there by the votes of the eastern towns for some wise purpose, much against the wishes of this part of the county, and they were plainly told if they moved it there, there it might remain for the present, and at least some of us have not forgotten it. And why not leave it there for a time and let the county develope? It can remain there without expense to the county for a few years. It can be removed from there at any time,—at least you can have the privilege of voting on the question, which you can never have when located at Boyne City; for I presume it will take no argument to show that it would be impossible to obtain the consent of two-thirds of the board of supervisors for its removal.

I see that Boyne City offers the use of county buildings free for a term of years if the county seat should be removed to that place. While I do not wish to say that they would repudiate any agreement made, I do wish to say they could do so without any fear of the consequences. They are no better or worse than the people of East Jordan or Charlevoix, but in the case of the two places there was, and is, a powerful incentive to keep them honest, which in the case of Boyne City is lacking.

In 1874, the center of population was near Ironton; in 1886, it is not far from it; every thing points to the fact that the center will not be far from that point.

It will either go towards East Jordan or Charlevoix, according to the respective growth of the two places; in either case further from Boyne City. Why not wait and see?

WILLIAM HARRIS.

Boyne City.

Boyne City, March 26, 1886.

EDITOR JOURNAL:—The virulence of many of the newspaper arguments, pro and con, relative to the final settlement of the county seat question the coming election, has led to a great deal of confusion of thought on the part of readers. After it is over, as Budgell, in the Spectator once said, "how many weighty reasons does a man recollect, which his heat and violence made him utterly forget!"

Perhaps it is difficult, amidst the appalling display of vituperation spread before us each week for our digestion (or indigestion), for any of the residents of this county to look at this question with unprejudiced comprehension.

What is the proposition? That the county seat shall be located as soon as possible at such a point as will be most convenient to the people of the county at large, not only for the present time, but especially for the future.

A continuation of this expensive contest disturbs the natural development of every portion of the county. Were this contest to cease now, not only would the agricultural interests of the county develope more rapidly, but the principal villages, especially on our lake shores, which naturally are largely independent of one another, would increase in wealth and population with a normal basis to develope from. Were the county seat located at the point now in contemplation a lasting impetus, it seems to your correspondent, would be given to the opening up and improvement and construction of numerous highways in the county that otherwise will, for a long period, remain undeveloped. No candid reasoner can look upon the construction of a bridge, or the establishment of a ferry, at Ironton as a myth. To vote against the removal of the county seat in the coming election may put no small stumbling block in the way of completion of such a great convenience to the public in the near future.

How do disinterested and unbiased people out side of our county look upon this subject? A citizen of Allegheney City, Pa., says: "I have been watching your county seat question for the past ten years with no little interest. I see justice and equity to the people of Charlevoix county served fully better in the location of the county seat at Boyne City than elsewhere in the county."

The Petoskey Democrat in regard to this "vexed question" says:

"An era of good feeling should exist between all sections, and would if this county seat question were settled. It seems to us that if the people of the county consult their own interest they will settle that vexed question once and forever at the coming election. In only one way can they do that and that is by voting for Boyne City. Once there it will remain, as no two-thirds vote to submit the question can ever be obtained again. If left at East Jordan the war will continue as the people of the county will never rest with that as their seat of justice. Boyne City is almost the center of the county, is just as near and accessible to East Jordan and Charlevoix as those towns are to it, while to reach either of those towns nearly one half of the people of the county have to go through Boyne City or go around outside the county through Petoskey. We repeat that if the people of that county are wise they will settle the question at the coming election, and settle it so that no more county seat wars will arise to burden the people with discord and taxes."

Spite engenders distrust, and because, perhaps at an unfortunate time actual and encouraging steps have been taken towards the construction of a railroad, the construction of which would accomplish more than any other one project toward the development of our county, there are persons that are almost willing to discredit their own convictions that now, independent of the county seat question, active steps ought to be taken by all to make this project a surity. No one will deny that the railroad contemplated militates in favor of the location of the county seat at Boyne City, for, passing through it, it makes it of easy access to a large portion of our inhabitants. In view of the letters known to be received from the only proper authority relative to this subject it seems to your correspondent to be impolitic, at least, openly to stigmatize as false what is well known to be a verity, especially when it involves so greatly our public good. No one who reads the communications from Prest. Hughart can discern any enigmatical or doubtful expression in them as to his intentions. Neither can any one substantiate a declaration that the communications mentioned are not veritable, for they are several and not single, in the possession of as many witnesses. Are the people of Charlevoix county to have a railroad? If they will it. Then is it sagacious to continue this county seat warfare longer, thereby sapping our treasury and sustaining general dissension, both of which unequivocally operate against general improvement? I trust, Mr Editor, that no voter at the coming election will so traduce his own good sense as to vote in opposition to what he knows is best for the general welfare of our people.

A. W. NICHOLSON, M. D.

Reply to the Sentinel.

East Jordan, March 30, 1885.

EDITOR JOURNAL,—As we had occasion to say some weeks ago, the Sentinel makes it a point of its regular business to stir up ill feeling between different parts of the county. The people of your village must judge for themselves whether or not it is profitable for them to sustain the promoter of such mischief, as we have nothing to offer on that point, but wish to call attention to the fact that for some months past, this place and region has been the object of its spite, notwithstanding the votes of our supervisors and people, which have always favored Charlevoix; and regardless of the large amount of trade that goes from this town to Charlevoix.

Pursuant to its mean instincts, it published in its issue of March 24th, several extracts from the Enterprise of last year, and pretends to hold the people here responsible for them.

It makes us feel a little mean to be obliged to get down to the low level of the Sentinel man, and there fight a skunk with another person's stink-pot, but in the interest of good society it seems necessary to do so, on this occasion. We therefore give you a few clippings from the Boyne City Statesman.

Feb. 25, 1885,—"In the past, nothing too contemptible could be done by Charlevoix to retard the growth of Boyne City or the east end of the county." * * * "The most despicable lies ever told by human tongue, were told by them."

"The Sentinel has the audacity to assert that East Jordan has never loved Boyne City. Perhaps not; but we don't think she has ever hated her. We know Charlevoix always has, does now, and always will despise her."

"Again, they say East Jordan has voted almost solidly for Charlevoix, in preference to Boyne City for the county seat. Yes, we know she has made that mistake, but we think Charlevoix ought to forgive her. We have."

Mar. 19, 1885,—"Like Geo. Washington, we never lie; and when we assert that the amalgamation of the Sentinel, is a most unmitigated, low lived liar, and a most pusilanimous, selfish non entity in human form, as well as the most unprincipled, conceited whelp, by whom the editorial profession is so degraded at Charlevoix, we only assert what can easily be proven."

Much more of the same sort could be given, but this is sufficient. The Sentinel man has on several occasions talked about "licking the hand that smote us." What part is he licking now, if not the hand of those who smote Charlevoix and him?

We shall await the result of the vote in your town, with some curiosity to know whether such a man has the following there he professes to have.

B.

Ironton.

Ironton, March 29, 1886.

EDITOR JOURNAL,—There is so much mudslinging, on the part of those in favor of removing the county seat to Boyne City, that my first resolution was not to put my pen to paper on the subject. But when, after the hand to hand fights with revolvers and pitch forks, in Boyne City, I met a man from that place who could discuss the question with fairness and sobriety, I resolved to write you the substance of his arguments, and attempt to show their fallacy.

My friend seemed burdened with the idea that Boyne City is, always was, and always will be, the place for the county seat, and that he who can not see this assumed intuitive fact is devoid of common intelligence. All opposition, therefore, is the outcome of depravity. He seemed to feel robbed of a possession, as one who had been stripped by a confidence man.

This is my friend's mistake. Men who differ from him are just as conscientious as he. Your paper, avoiding the mudslinging of the opposition, has many times shown the falsity of the geographical center argument, which seems to be the basis of my friend's "intuition," and I need make no further reply.

Another point he mentioned was that if Boyne gets the county seat now, that settles it forever, and stops expense (that is the expense of a future submission of the question). In this again, he is just enough right to be dangerously wrong. It would probably settle the question forever; in this he is right. But it would be, I fear, but the beginning of expense. There is nothing done on a town hall for the free use of the county, and I fear never will be; for it is already whispered that "if we can get the county to invest money here, its public offices will never leave us."

My friend thought it would be better for both agriculture and commerce to have the thing settled once for all; but I fear the burden of taxes for county purposes, would shackle agriculture and hamstring commerce. People shun a country that is so burdened with debt.

He had a great deal to say about the railroad, and railed on us for not putting more confidence in the letters received from Mr. Hughart on the subject. Of course I could but blame him for reading into these letters more than there is written. And besides he had to admit that he did not wonder that the confidence of men was shaken by the publication of one of these letters in a garbled form.

I told him it was time enough to vote for Boyne City on account of her railroad after she has got it; and what I said to him, I say to all.

Cure for Piles.

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he has some affection of the kidneys or neighboring organs. At times, symptoms of indigestion are present, flatulency, uneasiness of the stomach, etc. A moisture, like perspiration, producing a very disagreeable itching, after getting warm, is a common attendant. Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Bosanko's Pile Remedy, which acts directly upon the parts affected, absorbing the Tumors, allaying the intense itching, and effecting a permanent cure. KENTUCKY MOUNTAINEERS.

A People Sunk in Deplorable Ignorance.

These mountaineers are a singular people, writes a correspondent from Kentucky to the New York Times. They have not the slightest idea of law and order as it is understood and practiced in other portions of the country. Every individual resents an injury with a knife, pistol or gun, provided he has the requisite courage to do so, or, if not, waylays and shoots down his enemy whenever he can be caught off his guard. Like their prototypes who live in the mountains of Georgia, North Carolina and Tennessee, the Kentucky mountaineers are a peculiar set of people, differing in every way from the good inhabitants of these States. They are densely ignorant, and are utterly unable to avail themselves of the proper process of the law. Their poverty and illiteracy are pitiable in the extreme; they know nothing whatever of the habits of the civilized world, and many have never been beyond the confines of their own counties. Their houses are made of logs and mud, and in some sections the sight of a pane of glass would cause a sensation. The virtues they possess are purely primitive, suggesting the savage in many respects. They are strictly honest as to rights of property; they do not steal; outrages are uncommon, but a failure to be chaste and resultant inbreeding has caused much idiocy. With such a condition of things surrounding them, it is an easy matter for a few bold, resolute, but reckless men to dominate the whole country. Those who are not killed die from diseases peculiar to people who do not comprehend that cleanliness is next to godliness. The term "husband" or "wife" is never heard. It is "my man" or "my woman." Nine-tenths of these mountaineers were in the Union army, and fought with a courage and fierceness that swept everything before them. Their names indicate an English origin, as, for instance, in Bell county, in Harlan county, as well as in contiguous sections, you find lots of Howards, Turners, Pursifulls, probably a corruption of the old English name Percival, Blanton, Martin, Bowling, etc. A study of the names, habits, ignorance and inclinations of these people causes one to believe that they are the direct descendants of the convict English class who were sent to this country to serve the gentry in expiation of crimes committed in England, settling in Georgia, Virginia, the Carolinas, and in after years working into Kentucky and Tennessee. They are a disgrace to Kentucky, and in no sense ought they to be considered as typical Kentuckians. It is the crimes of these people that are telegraphed to the country, just as are those of the Tim McCarthys of New York. All other sections of the State contain people as enterprising, progressive, industrious and cultured as may be found anywhere. It is true that the politicians are much to blame for a failure to properly punish those who engaged in fendalism, and who, perhaps, are neglected by the authorities on the theory that mountain men, like some classes of jurymen, always stick together, and, when they vote for a friend who has helped them out of a difficulty, it is with a unanimity that never breaks. The country where they live abounds in the richest of fine forests, full of walnut, white pine, poplar, oak, hemlock and other desirable timber. Their hills are full of the finest car-wheel iron known in the world, and the coal lands are pronounced by Professor Shaler, of Harvard College, to be the superior of any in America. A deposit of cannel coal in Breathitt, Letcher, and Harlan counties is pronounced the finest in the world. When railroads are built through these mountains civilization will reach the inhabitants, and the example of thrift and consequent profit will, no doubt, play its full part in inspiring a desire to indulge in habits of industry. Until then there is little chance of their improvement.

A Wonderful Mountain Lake.

There can scarcely be as great a natural wonder within civilization, and at the same time so little known close at hand, as Crater Lake. Situated twenty-two miles west of north of Fort Klamath, in Klamath county, directly on the summit of the Cascade Mountains and about ninety miles east of Medford, it is easily accessible, there being a good mountain road to the very top of the walls surrounding it and fine camping grounds about half a mile distant. The lake itself is about six by eight miles in diameter and ranges from east of north to west of south. The surface of the water is 6,300 feet above sea level and is completely surrounded by cliffs or walls from 1,000 to nearly 8,000 feet high, which are scantily covered with fir trees. To the southwest is a circular island which our party named Wizard Island. It is 600 feet high and in the top is a circular hole, or extinct crater, 475 feet in diameter, named by us the Witch's Caldron. The base of the island is covered with very heavy and hard rocks, over which scarcely a score of human feet have ever trod. Further up are deep beds of ashes and cinders, giving evidence of the most intense heat in days gone by. Within the crater, as without, the surface is entirely covered with volcanic rocks, but here it forms one of the hottest [illegible] a clear day in August it has ever been my lot to witness. Ninety feet below the crater's rim not a breath of air can penetrate, while the sun beats down upon the rocky surface and reflects its rays from 10,000 upturned stones, forming a very furnace and heating it beyond all endurance; nevertheless, we sat within it at the lowest point, and partook of our Monday meal with one hand, while with the other great drops of sweat were brushed from our brows. We took with us from Portland a light canoe, which was lowered to the lake by the aid of ropes, and by means of which we were enabled to reach Wizard Island and see the surroundings from a point of observation seldom attained by visitors. We were also well paid for the trouble and expense, for the reason that, while the view from the shore is grand beyond description, that obtained from the lake is remarkably and inspires one with feelings of awe and awakens a depth of appreciation for the sublime unequaled.—Portland (Ore.) Standard.

The Art of the Physician.

The art of the physician can do much to remove its subjects from deadly and dangerous influences, and something to control or arrest the effects of these influences. But look at the records of the life insurance offices, and see how uniform is the action of nature's destroying agencies. Look at the annual reports of the deaths in any of our great cities, and see how their regularity approaches the uniformity of the tides, and their variations keep pace with those of the seasons. The inundations of the Nile are not more certainly to be predicted than the vast wave of infantile disease which flows in upon our great cities with the growing heats of July—than the fevers and dysenteries which visit our rural districts in the months of the falling leaf.

The physician watches these changes as the astronomer watches the rise of a great river. He longs to rescue individuals, to protect communities from the inroads of these destroying agencies. He uses all the means which experience has approved, tries every rational method which ingenuity can suggest. Some fortunate recovery leads him to believe he has hit upon a preventive or a cure for a malady which had resisted all known remedies. His rescued patient sounds his praises, and a wide circle of his patient's friends join in a chorus of eulogies. Self-love applauds him for his sagacity. Self-interest congratulates him on his having found the road to fortune; the sense of having proved a benefactor of his race smooths the pillow on which he lays his head to dream of the brilliant future opening before him. If a single coincidence may lead a person of sanguine disposition to believe that he has mastered a disease which had baffled all who were before his time, and on which his contemporaries look in hopeless impotence, what must be the effect of a series of such coincidences even on a mind of calmer temper? Such series of coincidences will happen, and they may well deceive the very elect. Think of Dr. Rush—you know what a famous man he was, the very head and front of American medical science in his day—and remember how he spoke about yellow fever, which he thought he had mastered.

Thus the physician is entangled in the meshes of a wide conspiration, in which he and his patients and their friends and nature herself, are involved. What wonder that the history of medicine should be to so great an extent a record of self delusion!

If this seems a dangerous concession to the enemies of the true science and art of healing, I will remind you that it is all implied in the first aphorism of Hippocrates, the father of medicine. Do not draw a wrong inference from the frank statement of the difficulties which best the medical practitioner. Think, rather, if truth is so hard of attainment, how precious are the results which the consent of the wisest and most experienced among the healers of man agree in accepting. Think what folly it is to cast them aside in favor of palpable impositions stolen from the records of forgotten charlatanism, or of fantastic speculations spun from the squinting brains of theorists as wild as the Egyptian astronomer.

Begin your medical studies, then, by reading the fortieth and the following four chapters of "Rasselas." Your first lesson will teach you modesty and caution in the pursuit of the most deceptive of all practical branches of knowledge. Faith will come later, when you learn how much medical science and art has actually achieved for the relief of mankind, and how great are the promises it holds out of still larger triumphs over the enemies of human health and happiness.—Oliver W. Holmes, in Atlantic Monthly.

The original text of the treaty of peace between France and China is sealed up in a roll of yellow silk, fastened by gold cords and secured in a red lacquer box, handsomely decorated with mother of pearl and guarded by a gold padlock. The box is placed in a richly carved sandal wood casket, and then in turn, is sealed up in a metallic case.

Concise Record of the Week.

EASTERN.

The Supreme Court of New York has decided that the Cable Railway Company has no legal existence and can not have seventy miles of streets without adequate compensation.

A fire in Buffalo consumed twelve buildings, including the North Buffalo Flour Mills and the Gilbert Starch Works, causing a loss of $500,000.

A jail delivery was effected by three desperadoes confined in the jail at Newcastle, Pa. They tiled the locks from their cell doors and escaped through a hole, eight by sixteen inches, cut in a window. The prisoners had been furnished with revolvers by friends, who awaited them with carriages to hasten their escape.

Charles St. Reuber, a prominent citizen of Erie, Pa., who had lately lost a large fortune, moved his family out of a costly mansion, and then hanged himself.

Claiming that Alabama has defaulted in certain legal obligations, the Attorney General of New York decides that savings banks of the Empire State cannot invest in Alabama State bonds.

A Boston paper publishes an article, copied from an anarchist organ, declaring that Most and his faction are preparing to burn buildings and commit outrages in New York City.

The German steamer Europa went ashore in the night off Quoge, L. I., and the Capital City is stranded at Rye Beach. Storm and fog were responsible for both accidents.

WESTERN.

Chicago elevators contain 13,991,430 bushels of wheat, 3,435,704 bushels of corn, 500,482 bushels of oats, 230,595 bushels of rye, and 102,889 bushels of barley; total, 18,270,910 bushels of all kinds of grain, against 18,272,-010 bushels a year ago.

Last year the deaths in the city of Chicago numbered 12,474, an increase of only three over the previous twelve months, despite the largely increased population.

It is stated that Dr. Luther C. Rose, of Palmyra, Ohio, has perfected a telephone transmitter which will render conversation between New York and Chicago an easy matter. A test of a circuit of 878 miles was made, resulting in the ticking of a watch being plainly heard.

At Bronson, Mich., fire destroyed property valued at $16,000. Two women were burned to death, and several other persons badly injured.

The two leaders and seven of the mob who drove the Chinese out of Oregon City recently have been indicted by the United States Grand Jury at Portland.

A number of boys who had engaged in a stone-throwing conflict were brought before Judge Fitzgerald, at Cincinnati, who ordered that each of the lads be spanked by their fathers, and that reports be made to the court whether the order had been executed.

As a result of the preliminary examination at Springfield, Mo., Mrs. Emma Molloy and Cora Lee have been held for trial for connection with the murder of Mrs. Graham. Bail was refused in the case of the Lee woman and the bonds of Mrs. Molloy fixed fixed at $5,000.

E. P. Brown, a journalist not unknown to fame, and a humorous paragrapher of much promise, who has been a most obstinate unbeliever for many years, was recently converted to Christianity, at Chicago, under the ministrations of Sam Jones and Sam Small, and announces that he will henceforth devote himself to the work of the gospel. Mr. Brown has for some time been connected editorially with the Chicago Ledger, and is the author of the "Deacon Basswood" papers, which have for several months been running in that journal.

SOUTHERN.

A Nashville (Tenn.) dispatch states that Daniel Guthrie, a prominent citizen of Crockett County, Tenn., was murdered by Weakley Ridley and Tobe Williams, negroes, who were arrested and lodged in jail at Alamo. The crime excited the greatest indignation, and a few nights after their arrest a mob numbering several hundred persons appeared at the jail and demanded the prisoners. The jailer demurred, but was forced to give up the keys. The mob entered the cell in which the negroes were confined, and, taking them outside, lynched them without ceremony. After the prisoners were pronounced dead the mob quietly dispersed.

So heavy has been the rainfall throughout Georgia that trains were sidetracked on eight railways entering Atlanta, and the cities of West Point and Rome were nearly submerged. The destruction of property has been very great. A construction train, with sixteen men, went through a bridge between Opelika and Danville, Ga., and it is feared that many of the men perished. High water undermined a cotton factory at Prattville, Ala., and the structure collapsed, causing a loss of $85,000.

A cyclone destroyed a negro church, in which funeral services were being held, in Butler County, Alabama, four persons being killed and ten wounded.

A fire which broke out in the San Carlos Theater, at Key West, Florida, was not extinguished until late in the afternoon, the principal portion of the city being destroyed. Fifteen or twenty persons were injured by falling walls. The financial loss is placed at $1,500,000, on which there is insurance of but $100,000.

Abe Lowenthal, of New Orleans, is the third of the witnesses in the Ford murder case who have been convicted of willful perjury. The penalty is imprisonment in the penitentiary for not less than five years.

A vein of petroleum, flowing two hundred barrels per day, has been developed at Lake Charles, Louisiana.

Reports from fruit-shipping points in the South indicate a backward season, but vegetable prospects are equal to those of former years. Late spring frosts may materially reduce the Southern peach supply.

There is a scarcity of food at Key West, Fla., and it is feared much suffering will result. Five thousand persons are thrown out of employment by the fire.

WASHINGTON.

Congressman Stephenson says the Committee on Public Lands will recommend an amendment of the homestead laws reducing the period of habitation on the land to thirty months, with the proviso that at least ten acres be under cultivation for that time.

Senator Harris, of Tennessee, appeared before the Pan-Electric investigation committee at Washington on the 31st ult., and gave testimony as to the organization of the Pan-Electric Company, which agreed with the statements already made by other witnesses. When asked if there was ever any suggestion that the company should profit by the official position of any of the stockholders, he replied emphatically but slowly: "I answer no. And I answer further that if it had been intimated to me that my official action as a Senator was to be invoked, directly or indirectly, it would have ended forever all negotiations." The witness went into the whole subject at length, but there were no points brought out not covered in previous testimony.

POLITICAL.

The act empowering the Governor of Ohio to appoint non partisan Police Boards for Cincinnati and Cleveland has become a law.

The New York Senate Railroad Committee has reported favorably the bill to repeal the Broadway Surface Railroad franchise.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Conferences between Jay Gould and T. V. Powderly at New York, on Sunday and Sunday evening, March 28, resulted in orders from each of them to the parties to the Southwestern strike, directing immediate resumption of work and traffic pending arbitration. A New York dispatch of Monday says: The great strike on the Gould system of railroads is ended, and work has been resumed on its 8,000 miles of road. In response to an invitation from Jay Gould, Mr. Powderly, Master Workman of the Knights of Labor, went to the railroad magnate's residence yesterday morning. Mr. Gould and Mr. Powderly discussed the strike from its very beginning. The conference lasted until one o'clock and was again renewed in the evening. During the conference the railroad king intimated that he was tired of strikes, and hoped for another method of settling labor troubles. Mr. Powderly told him that the Knights of Labor had long since discovered a method in the shape of arbitration. Mr. Gould finally consented to arbitrate the present difficulties and abide the decision of the arbitrators. He also said that in future this would be the method employed to settle all disputes between his company and its employes. At the close of the evening talk, Mr. Powderly called a meeting of the Executive Board of the Knights. J. W. Hayes, of New Jersey, and W. H. Bailey were present. The session was brief; and at the conclusion of it the following dispatch was sent.

Martin J. Irons, of St. Louis, Chairman of Executive Board District Assembly 101, Knights of Labor:

President Jay Gould has consented to our proposition for arbitration and so telegraphs Manager H. M. Hoxie. Order men to resume work at once. By order of the Executive Board

T. V. POWDERLY,
General Master Workman.

Mr. Powderly also sent the following order to the strikers:

To the Knights of Labor now on strike in the Southwest:

President Jay Gould has consented to our proposition for arbitration and has so telegraphed to Vice President Hoxie. Pursuant to telegraphic instructions to Martin Irons, Chairman of the Executive Board of District Assembly No. 101, you are directed to resume work at once. By order of the Executive Board, Knights of Labor.

T. V. POWDERLY,
General Master Workman.

Jay Gould wired the following message to Vice President Hoxie, of the Missouri Pacific Railroad, at St. Louis:

In resuming the movement of trains on the Missouri Pacific, and in the employing of laborers in the several departments of this company, give preference to our late employes, whether they are Knights of Labor or not, except that you will not employ any person who has injured the company's property during the late strike.

Nor will we discharge any person who has taken service with the company during said strike. We see no objection to arbitrating any differences between the employes and the company, past or future. JAY GOULD, President.

"The great strike in the Southwest, contrary to general expectation, is not ended yet," says a New York dispatch of the 30th ult. "Jay Gould read the papers yesterday morning and concluded that Mr. Powderly was laboring under a mistake in thinking that he (Gould) had agreed to any scheme of arbitration. Gould accordingly addressed a note to Powderly to this effect. Thereupon the latter rescinded his order for the men to return to work. An appointment for a conference between the two men was made, but owing to the sickness of Mr. Powderly he was unable to appear."

There was a prolonged conference between Jay Gould and T. V. Powderly at New York on Thursday, March 31. "The whole discussion," a New York telegram reports, "was on the subject of arbitration generally, upon which a unanimity of opinion was expressed. Mr. Gould is in favor of arbitration, but as the matter of adjusting the difficulty on the Missouri Pacific Railroad had been referred to Mr. Hoxie, the following telegram was sent to him at the request of Mr. Powderly:

The spring distribution of whitefish from Washington for the lakes has begun. Thirty million will be Lake Michigan's portion.

The visible supply of wheat and corn is, respectively, 49,774,500 and 16,797,073 bushels. Since last report wheat decreased 761,168 bushels, while corn increased 61,555 bushels.

A negro named John Drake was executed at Thomaston, Ga., for the murder of his wife and the cremation of her corpse.

"Martin Irons, Chairman of the Executive Committee of District Assembly No. 101, which embraces all Knights of Labor employed by the Missouri Pacific Railway Company," says a St. Louis dispatch of the 1st inst., "telegraphed to the different local assemblies under his jurisdiction, notifying them officially that the General Executive Board had ordered all men to go to work pending arbitration of the existing difficulties by a committee of the Missouri Pacific employes and Mr. Hoxie. Chairman Irons was seen by a reporter, and, when asked if he considered the basis for a settlement of the strike a sufficient recognition of the Knights of Labor, said: 'Yes, it is a victory,' but almost immediately modified his utterance by adding, 'to some extent.' The basis agreed upon for the appointment of an arbitration committee to adjust the differences existing between the Missouri Pacific employes and their employers will affect only indirectly the strike upon the other railways. It is a generally accepted fact, however, that the strikes which have occurred since the inauguration of the Missouri Pacific strike were in support of the latter, and when the latter is settled all will be settled. This, however, will not apply to the East St. Louis troubles, for it is understood that they have separate grievances which must be arbitrated independently." Dispatches from Atchison say that the strikers paraded the streets, masked, and armed with clubs, but when the order to return to work was received, declared the strike off, and offered themselves for re-employment. No men were taken back, as the shops and the roundhouse were so badly damaged by the strikers that it is impossible to resume work at present.

To H. M. Hoxie, General Manager, St. Louis:

Will you meet the General Executive Board of the Knights of Labor, or the committee of your employes from the Knights of Labor, for the purpose of making a settlement of present difficulties alike honorable to both parties, either on the basis of arbitration or by mutual agreement, the same to be binding on all parties?

In answer to this Mr. Hoxie telegraphed the following from St. Louis:

A. L. Hopkins:

Replying to your inquiry of this date, I have to say that yesterday I received from Mr. Gould the following message (here is quoted the message beginning "in resuming the movement of trains," etc.), to which I sent the following reply:

Jay Gould:

I have your message in relation to your interview with Mr. Powderly, and also the letter of instructions, and will carry out the same to the best of my ability. I am, therefore, willing to meet a committee of our employes without discrimination, who are actually at work in the service of the company at the time such committee is appointed, to adjudicate with them any grievance that they may have.

H. M. HOXIE.

The Executive Committee of the Knights of Labor thereupon telegraphed to Martin Irons, at St. Louis, as follows:

Have your executive committee order the men to return to work, and also select a special committee from the employes of the Missouri Pacific to wait on Mr. Hoxie to adjudicate any grievances. Do this as quickly as possible.

FOREIGN.

A Brussels dispatch states that troops were sent to Jumet, Belgium, to suppress a riot inaugurated by striking miners. When the rioters saw the approaching troops they placed 200 women in the front ranks. The troops opened fire and many of the women were wounded. At Charleroi the rioters pillaged and burned many buildings, among them the convent of Soleilmonte. Troops were called out, and on their appearance the soldiers were attacked by the mob. An order to fire was finally given, and several volleys were quickly poured into the ranks of the strikers. Twenty of the rioters were killed and hundreds of them wounded. There was a collision between rioters and troops at Roux, two miles from Charleroi, in which ten of the strikers were shot dead and many wounded. At Bandour a troop of lancers, which tried to disperse a mob, was driven off by the desperate strikers, with a lieutenant and several men wounded. Crowds of roughs paraded the streets of Brussels, breaking windows and assaulting citizens. The Chateau Quelremont, at Presles, and the glass-works at Marchunnee-au-Pont, two miles from Charleroi, were burned by rioters. The damage done by the mob at Charleroi alone is estimated at $2,500,000. At Jumet, three miles from Charleroi, the Sudin, De Dorlegd, Deviles, Jonet, and Loudron glass works were looted and destroyed, involving a loss of $1,000,000, and throwing thousands of persons out of employment. The rolling-mills at Montcean were sacked by strikers. Gangs of strikers are everywhere in the mining countries forcing the men to stop work, and are going about pillaging the factories.

LATER NEWS ITEMS.

"A serious hitch exists between the Executive Committee of the Knights of Labor and the railroad officials regarding the terms on which the knights are to be taken back, and from present appearances the strike is as far from settlement as ever," says a St. Louis telegram of the 2d inst. A committee of Knights waited upon Master Mechanic Bartlett at the Missouri Pacific shops and tendered him the services of the old shop employes. A list of fifty-two names was handed to Mr. Bartlett, who, after scanning it, checked off seventeen of them as the names of the men whom he would employ. The others, he said, could not be taken back. Attempts of a similar nature were made by committees of the strikers at prominent points all over the Gould system. In every instance, the Executive Board claims, the committees received the same reply to their offers. Reports of the committees, received by telegraph, determined the Executive Board to issue an address to the public, and to continue the strike until the roads consent to take back all the strikers. The address is as follows:

To the Public:

As showing the sincerity of the railroad managers in their treatment of the Knights of Labor, we respectfully state that pursuant to the order of our general executive board we this day sent a committee to the managers of the several railroads, offering to return the men to work, and in no instance would they be received or treated with, each official in turn either refusing them a hearing or evading them with specious subterfuges for direct answers, or refusing them employment. Mr. Hoxie has agreed to receive a committee of employes to adjust any grievances which may exist. He refuses personally and through his subordinates to recognize any of us as employes and refuses to receive any but such as he calls employes. In short, after himself and Mr. Gould have conveyed the impression to the world that they are willing to settle, they refuse to settle. Now we appeal to a candid and suffering public, on whom is falling all the weight of this great conflict, if we have not been deceived enough? How much is long-suffering labor to bear? This great strike never would have been had Mr. Hoxie not concealed months ago his real complaints. We do not claim to be more than human. It should not be expected of us to be more than human. In this country position makes no man king or slave, and imperious refusal on the part of one citizen to confer with other citizens with whom he may have business connection when such refusal bereft great business and social revolution, is not only a mistake but a crime against the public. Mr. Gould is invoking the law against little criminals who are made desperate by his policy of duplicity and oppression, and yet a terrorized public does not invoke the law against the arch-criminal of the land. If we cannot be allowed to return to work the strike must go on.

Alarming news from Bulgaria and Greece caused the British Cabinet to hold a special meeting. Orders have been sent to Devonport to have all the torpedo vessels ready for sea on short notice. Hundreds of officers of the German army have tendered their services to Prince Alexander in the event of an invasion of Bulgaria by the Russians.

The bill appropriating $500,000 for the erection of a monument to Abraham Lincoln at Washington, passed the Senate on the 1st inst. Messrs. Dolph and Morgan addressed the Senate in support of the bill to admit Washington Territory into the Union, after which the amendments proposed by the committee and another affecting the school lands were adopted. President Cleveland nominated to the Senate for the vacant brigadier generalships Colonel Thomas H. Ruger, of the Eighteenth Infantry, and Colonel Joseph H. Potter, of the Twenty-fourth Infantry. The House devoted the day to the discussion of the labor arbitration bill.

CONGRESS.

What Is Being Done by the National Legislature.

THE Edmunds resolutions condemning the Attorney General for his refusal to furnish copies of papers desired, and declaring it to be the duty of the Senate to refuse its consent to removals of officers in cases where documents showing misconduct were withheld, were adopted by the Senate on March 26. The first resolution, adopting the report of the Judiciary Committee, went through by a vote of 32 to 25. The vote on the second resolution, condemning the Attorney General for refusing to send copies of papers called for by the Senate, was 32 to 25. The third resolution, declaring it to be the duty of the Senate to refuse its advice and consent to proposed removals of officers, the documents in reference to the supposed misconduct of whom are withheld, was adopted by a majority of one—yeas 30, nays 29. Senators Mitchell, Van Wyck, and Riddleberger voting with the Democrats. The fourth resolution, condemning the discharge of ex-Union soldiers and the putting in their places of men who had rendered no military service for the Government, was then voted on and agreed to—yeas 56, nays 1 (Senator Morgan). Senator Hoar introduced a bill establishing inquests under national authority. It provides that upon the sworn complaint of three United States citizens that any person has been killed, or has sustained bodily injury, or serious injury in his estate, or has been threatened with injury in person or estate because of race or color or political opinion, or to prevent such person from casting a vote at any election provided for in the Constitution, any United States Judge must institute an inquest into the matter and report the facts to Congress. Any United States District Attorney in his circuit may be compelled by the Judge to attend and assist in such inquest. Senator Hoar said the bill was suggested by the reports of recent occurrences at Carrollton, Miss. The House of Representatives listened to a letter from Assistant Secretary Fairchild, asking for an appropriation to enable the department to build vaults at the subtreasuries in which to store silver dollars.

When the bill for the increase of the army came up in the Senate, on the 23th ult., Mr. Logan had the clerk read an indorsement of the measure by General Sheridan. Mr. Plumb argued that if the army were to be used to put down local troubles it was because public opinion had not done its perfect work. Mr. Logan aroused enthusiasm in the galleries by defying the Powers of Europe. Mr. Teller opposed the increase of the army. Violence in the States should be suppressed by the States, he said. In the House of Representatives, bills or resolutions were introduced directing the Secretary of the Interior to furnish artificial limbs to Confederate soldiers or sailors who lost legs or arms in the war; authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to take a conveyance of the cottage at Mount McGregor, where Gen. Grant died, as ceiling for information as to the money loaned by the Government to the Cotton Centennial at New Orleans, and whether any of it has been repaid. Mr. Reagan objected to the introduction of a resolution for an investigation into the massacre of negroes at Carrollton, Miss. Mr. Belmont offered a joint resolution appropriating $147,748 to the Chinese Government for losses sustained by its subjects at Rock Springs, Wyoming. A new measure to aid in the establishment of common schools was referred to the Committee on Labor. Four propositions were made for an investigation of the cause of the labor troubles.

Mr. Voorhees introduced, in the Senate, on the 30th ult., an enabling act for the people of Montana, preliminary to the admission of the Territory to the Union. Gen. Logan's bill to increase the efficiency of the army was debated. Mr. Gallow introduced a bill appropriating $500,000 for the erection in Washington city of a monument, with appropriate statuary, to commemorate the illustrious public services of the late Abraham Lincoln. The nomination of O. O. Howard to be Major General in place of John Pope was confirmed by the Senate. In the House of Representatives Mr. Randall, of Pennsylvania, asked unanimous consent to offer the following resolution: Resolved, That a committee of five members be appointed, whose duty it shall be to investigate the circumstances and causes attending the killing on the 18th of March last, in Carrollton, Miss., of a number of colored citizens of said State. Mr. Reagan, of Texas, objected on the ground that Congress had no jurisdiction over the matter. Mr. Randall then asked to have the resolution referred, but Mr. Reagan objected, notwithstanding the request made by Mr. Barksdale, of Mississippi, in behalf of the Mississippi delegation, that there might be no objection. The House indulged in a long debate on the post-office appropriation bill, during which time there was a lively interchange of personalities between Messrs. McMillin and Houk, both of Tennessee.

Mr. Dolph, of Oregon, addressed the Senate on the 31st ult., in support of the bill for the admission of Washington Territory. Mr. Vance spoke in support of his bill to repeal the civil service law. When the army bill came up, Gen. Logan took occasion to deny the reports that there was a coolness between himself and Senator Hale, of Maine, because of the latter's opposition to the army bill, which, it had been further reported, was inspired by Mr. Blaine. The Illinois Senator denied that he was standing in the way of any man's Presidential candidacy. In executive session the Senate confirmed a large number of nominations, and rejected three—those of John C. Wise, to be postmaster at Mankato, Minn.; H. N. Jewett, of Massachusetts, to be consul at Sivas, and the postmaster at Webster City, Iowa. In the House of Representatives Mr. O'Neill, of Missouri, reported from the Committee on Labor a bill for the voluntary arbitration of differences between common carriers engaged in interstate and territorial transportation of property or passengers and their employes. The bill was referred to the committee of the whole and the House went into committee, with Mr. Springer (Ill.) in the chair, for its consideration. Mr. O'Neill spoke in support of the measure, which was the best one the Labor Committee could formulate. It provided simply for a voluntary arbitration. He knew that this was disappointing to many members of the House, but if they would but reflect they would realize that the first thing to consider was how far they could regulate the disputes by an appeal to public opinion. If this method failed, then he could see but one other, and that was the strong arm of the Government to take the giant corporations by the throat and tell them that they must yield to arbitration; that the Government could not have the condition of affairs that to-day prevailed throughout five States of the Union—a practical revolution all business suspended, and the people of great cities suffering from the increased cost of food and fuel. Messrs. Hammond (Ga.), Weaver (Iowa), Brumm (Pa.), and Daniel (Va.) opposed the bill. Mr. Weaver thought that the cure of all labor troubles lay in the increase of the currency. Mr. Reagan (Texas) opposed the bill because it would take from the local tribunals where it belonged the adjustment and settlement of a local question.

Max knows a young woman who is not afraid of her convictions. She lives in a house where Methodism is the prevailing creed. One day not long since the dominie who has the care of souls in that particular family came to make a pastoral visit.

After conversing with the elder members of the family on their spiritual welfare, he turned to the young woman in question and said, with all meekness:

"And you, my dear daughter, are you a child of God?"

"No, Doctor," said the young woman, "I'm an Episcopalian."

An economist says: "There was a time in the history of the world when a penny was considered a fair day's wages for a laboring man." There was no shop across the street that sold a cigar for a cent.—Norristown Herald.

FACING 62,000 SOLDIERS.

Strikers in the Little Kingdom of Belgium Confronted by All the Nation's Military.

Deadly Encounters Between Mobs and Soldiery—Immense Destruction of Property.

[Cable dispatch from Brussels.]

Three hundred strikers made an attack on the Marlemont colliery at Mons, and were fired upon by troops. The number of killed and wounded is fourteen.

The entire reserve force has been called out. With these additional troops the army will number 62,000 men.

The strikers stopped work at the Resaix collieries to-day. They were thrice ordered to disperse, but refused to do so, and began to throw stones at the troops. The latter fired upon the rioters, killing and wounding seventeen.

The miners at Antoing, three miles southeast of Tournay, struck to-day and went rioting. They formed into a body and marched toward Tournay for the purpose of looting the place. Troops sallied out from that place to meet them, and a conflict followed, in which many persons were wounded.

The strikes are spreading in the coal-mining districts of Flenu and Boinage and the authorities there fear trouble. The miners in the latter district receive but $3 a week. They have destroyed the residence of the mine manager by dynamite. In these districts there have already been several conflicts between the strikers and the troops and many have been killed on both sides. Re-enforcements have been sent to the scene from Mons.

In a fresh fight between the rioters and infantry at Carnieres two persons were killed and many wounded.

The Socialists are greatly enraged because of the energetic action of the military in suppressing disturbances. As an act of revenge they threaten to raid the extensive cloth-works, which are a conspicuous feature of that town.

Lavoyer, the leader of the Socialists, has been arrested. It has been proved that the riots were not due to political causes. Of the 108 persons arrested here in connection with the disturbances one-half are old convicts of the worst kind.

At a meeting of the Cabinet it was decided that the Premier should explain the situation to the Chamber of Deputies.

A Government Inspector is examining the depots for dynamite in the Charleroi district.

Rioters attacked and burned a pottery manufactory at Baudour, near Mons. They succeeded in resisting the gendarmes, who, however, shot and killed three of the rioters.

The citizens of Fleurus, seven miles northeast of Charleroi, have armed themselves with pitchforks, clubs, and guns, and have thus far succeeded in defending their town from pillage. They drove one army of rioters away by main force, dispersing it utterly. Vigilance committees are being formed by the citizens in other places threatened by the strikers.

The workmen in the cloth factories at Verviers have joined the strike.

Charleroi is a vast military camp from which flying columns are operating in all directions. It is believed now that the worst is over. The Government has authorized the peaceable inhabitants of the city to arm themselves and use every means in their power to defend their domiciles. There is a more confident feeling. The civilian patrols and the troops are overmastering the rioters. One hundred arrests have been made, among them several Anarchist leaders.

The burials of the rioters who were shot by troops are proceeding quietly at Verviers.

Several French newspapers accuse Prince Bismarck of having incited the riots in Belgium and warn Belgium to beware of him.

The Belgian Republican League of Paris has called a meeting of the Belgian workingmen of France to assist their brethren in Belgium.

THE "QUEER" IN PRISON.

Discovery of Counterfeiters' Molds and Bogus Money in the Kansas State Penitentiary.

[Leavenworth telegram.]

Considerable excitement was caused in the Kansas State Penitentiary by the discovery that a number of counterfeiters' molds had been in use for some time by a couple of convicts, the latter having successfully made a number of bogus coins. A quantity of the latter, representing perhaps $6, was found in the cell of one of the convicts. The molds were accidentally discovered in the drying-room of the laundry, where the two convicts were employed. When examined they said that they had been assisted by some of the guards, who procured materials for them and got rid of the spurious coins. They named two of the guards, who have been suspended from duty pending an investigation, but it is generally thought the guards are innocent. The counterfeiting had gone on for several weeks.

BLOWN FROM A BATH-TUB.

The Remarkable and Uncomfortable Experience of a Nebraska Judge.

[Hastings (Neb.) dispatch.]

A remarkable accident occurred at McCook, in this State. Judge Lucas had gone into the bath-house of the town, and was comfortably enjoying a hot-water bath, when suddenly a terrible noise was heard, and one end of the bath-room went flying across the street. Lucas was hurled forward after it, and driven head foremost into a huge snowdrift, where he remained a moment completely dazed. Believing him but slightly injured, the crowd that had gathered around heartily enjoyed Lucas' predicament. The boiler in the basement had exploded, breaking mirrors, furniture, and other articles into fragments and knocking the chimney to pieces, which fell into the tub so recently occupied by Lucas. The boiler was hurled with terrific force across the street, alighting on the building occupied by the Democrat, crashing through the roof, and ruining the forms and other articles on which it fell. The damage was considerable, but no one was seriously injured.

KNIGHTS OF LABOR.

A Biography and a Sketch Which Will Be Read with Interest at This Juncture.

Terrence Vincent Powderly, authoritative leader of the Knights of Labor organization (says the New York World), was born at Carbondale, Pa., Jan. 24, 1849. He went to school for six years, and when 13 years old went to work as a switch-tender for the Delaware & Hudson Canal Company. When 17 he went into the machine shop of the company. He went to Scranton and found employment in the shops of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Company.

In 1870 he joined the Machinists and Blacksmiths' National Union. He soon became President, and began to study the labor problem in the shops by talking to his fellow-workmen, watching the endeavors and aims of employers and employes. In 1872 Mr. Powderly married. The trades-union was too narrow to suit his views. His father had been a day laborer, and he learned that no labor organization could thrive until it took in every class of laboring men. The machinists did not take kindly to Mr. Powderly's suggestion that they take in the laborers, the carpenters, painters, and every other trade. In November, 1874, a friend invited him one evening to come to a labor meeting. He went without any idea of what sort of a gathering it was. It was Local Assembly No. 88 of the Knights of Labor, and he at once joined it. He found there men of all trades and all crafts. It was his idea of a labor organization, and he at once entered heartily into its plans.

The panic of 1873 left Powderly without employment. He went west into Ohio looking for work, came back into Western Pennsylvania, and in Oil City found a job, and was sent by the Machinists and Blacksmiths' Union of that city as a delegate to the General Convention held at Louisville in September, 1874. Soon after he was back in the employ of the Dickson Manufacturing Company at Scranton, and it was on this return that he joined the Knights. He soon induced the entire union to join the Knights, and the union was disbanded.

In 1877 the railroad strike took many from this section, and about five thousand men went from that district. Many of them were in the order of Knights, and, when they pushed on into the West, were instrumental in building up new local assemblies. Up to this time the Knights of Labor had no General Assembly, and many of the leading Knights were in correspondence on the subject. M. F. Turner, Secretary of District Assembly No. 1, Philadelphia; Mr. Griffith, of Chicago; Charles H. Litchman, of Marblehead, Mass.; and Mr. Thomas King, of Reading, Pa., had been writing one to another, and the result was a call for the first General Assembly at Reading in January, 1878. A constitution was adopted at this time, and Uriah S. Stevens, the founder of the order, was chosen Grand Master Workman. At the St. Louis Convention, held in St. Louis January, 1879, Mr. Stevens was re-elected, and Mr. Powderly was chosen to the second position as General Worthy Foreman. The time of the meeting of the General Assembly was changed to September, and in September, 1879, a convention was held in Chicago, when Mr. Stevens sent a letter declining re-election as Grand or General Master Workman, and suggesting Mr. Powderly, in strong words of praise, for the position. That choice was made, and ever successive September, at the general assemblies, he was re-elected.

He had continued to reside at Scranton, and on April, 1878, his fellow-workmen put his name in nomination for Mayor and elected him. His first act was to discharge the entire police force. This he did because he feared that his enemies would seek to create disorder and possibly do damage, and he wished to have by him men in whom he could trust to suppress any uprising. In 1880 Mayor Powderly was re-elected, and in 1882 again chosen on a Democratic ticket, but the labor element showed its strength by giving him a majority in several strong Republican districts.

Since his induction into the order of Knights of Labor, Mr. Powderly has given it his entire attention and every moment of study. He has virtually reorganized the order. He found it a close, oath-bound body, but of the Detroit General Assembly in 1881, he urged the abolition of oaths and the removal of the obligation of secrecy. Mr. Powderly has filled the position of constant instructor for seven years, and has not had a single day off, not even a whole Sunday.

Mr. Powderly in 1875 went somewhat into the study of law, and while Mayor of Scranton got a very good legal training and habit. He started the Labor Advocate in Scranton during 1877, but this publication, he said, "died easily while I stood by its bedside."

By What Methods Its Members Hope to Solve the Labor Question.

The District Assembly is composed of three delegates from each local assembly in its jurisdiction, and is the highest tribunal within its dominion. There are what are called "trade districts" and "mixed districts." The former, as the name denotes, are composed of those of any one or affiliated trades. Thus a district of printers contains stereotypers, type-founders, compositors, pressmen and feeders, bookbinders and sewers, lithographers and plate printers. A district of shoemakers has within it every person working at that business in any capacity. A mixed district is formed of assemblies of every trade having less than five locals, when a number is necessary before a trade can be organized as a distinct district. There are several trades in the order which have national districts, and it is hoped by many a Knight that in time every national and international trade union will be covered with the shield of the order. It is said that if such was possible it would inure to the strength of the trade union, as it has been found that every trade is dependent on all the others.

Local assemblies can be formed of men and women, or men or women respectively, of any one or more trades, or no trade whatever, excepting lawyers, bankers, brokers, and rum-sellers, who are considered to be drones in the human hive, or seeking always their own preferment first, last, and all the time.

In every local assembly a half-hour at each meeting must be devoted to the discussion of "labor in all its interests." It is during these moments that the "declaration of principles" is taken up and enlarged upon by some one designated for that purpose. In locals newly founded the declaration is taken up section by section, beginning with the following paragraph:

"The alarming development and aggressiveness of great capitalists and corporations, unless checked, will inevitably lead to the pauperization and hopeless degradation of the toiling masses. It is imperative, if we desire to enjoy the full blessings of life, that a check be placed upon unjust accumulation and the power for evil of aggregated wealth. This much-desired object can be accomplished only by the united efforts of those who obey the divine injunction, 'In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread.' Therefore we have formed the order of Knights of Labor, for the purpose of organizing and directing the power of the industrial masses."

The aims of the order are declared to be:

1. To make industrial and moral worth, not wealth, the true standard of individual and national greatness.

2. To secure to the worker the full enjoyment of the wealth they create, sufficient leisure in which to develop their intellectual, moral, and social faculties; all of the benefits, recreation, and pleasures of association; in a word, to enable them to share in the gains and honors of advancing civilization.

To secure these results certain demands are made upon the State and National Legislatures, in addition to which the Knights of Labor will endeavor to associate their own labors. "To establish co-operative institutions such as will tend to supersede the wage system by the introduction of a co-operative industrial system; to secure for both sexes equal pay for equal work; to shorten the hours of labor by a general refusal to work more than eight hours; to persuade employers to agree to arbitrate at differences which may arise between them and their employes, in order that the grounds of sympathy between them may be strengthened and the strikes may be rendered unnecessary.

The Knights of Labor have attempted to inaugurate in the order distributive co-operation and life insurance on the assessment plan, but thus far without any success.

The object of founding the great order is due to Uriah S. Stevens, who died in Philadelphia in 1882. The idea of the Knights of Labor, a secret fraternal, was many years in developing itself, and did not take practical form until 1869, when Mr. Stevens was working as a clothing-cutter. For years it was a strictly secret society.

AN ENTERPRISING CITY.

The Metropolis of Western Iowa.

Its Surroundings and Prospects.

Wonderful Increase in Population and Business.

Sioux City, the metropolis of Western Iowa, which, on account of its rapid growth, is at present attracting wide-spread attention, is situated on the Missouri River, about 500 miles west of Chicago. Behind it are the fertile rolling prairies, 50,000 square miles in extent, whose great cornfields are the wonder of the world, and whose rapidly growing population is as intelligent, energetic, and thrifty as any race of men the world ever produced. West and south Nebraska stretches 400 miles away to the romantic valleys and foothills of the Rocky Mountains. Commencing within three miles of the city, the great and luxuriant rolling prairies of Dakota, stretching hundreds of miles toward the Pacific Slope, are rapidly developing into a great empire of wealth and population that exceeds the wildest dreams of human speculation. Here, what was once supposed to be a great desert of sand, sage brush and bad lands is being made to "bloom and blossom as the rose," the richest country that the sun shines on. Dakota's 90,000,000 of acres are covered with luxuriant cornfields, inexhaustible pasturage, pine forests, ranges of rich mineral mountains, with a net-work of great rivers and railroads, immense wheat fields, great herds of cattle, and a population as wonderful in enterprise, thrift and intelligence as it is in rapid growth. Then to the north, less than 100 miles distant, lies Minnesota, whose wheat fields have long been the pre-eminent wheat regions of the world.

Besides being located on the Missouri River, where it first touches our western border, and is navigable for large-sized steamboats for a distance of 1,500 miles above, it is located near the mouth of two of its large tributaries. The Big Sioux, which forms about seventy miles of the western boundary of Iowa, empties into the Missouri River about two miles above the city. It drains and waters 1,000 square miles of Iowa territory, and its valleys are wonderfully rich and productive. Just below, and forming the eastern boundary of the city, the Floyd River empties into the Missouri. It is a small stream, but flows through a rich and beautiful valley. It is about 100 miles long and drains about 1,500 square miles of territory. There are many mills erected on its banks, and its water-power is valuable. Perry Creek, which also drains a lovely territory, and whose valleys are filled with beautiful farms, flows through the city and empties into the Missouri.

Less than a generation ago the land upon which Sioux City is located, and the territory for hundreds of miles north, south, east and west, lay in its primeval beauty, with no sign of civilization. The red man of the prairie was unmolested in his rich hunting grounds. The buffalo roamed at will over the beautiful natural lawns of vivid green, upon the rolling prairies, beautiful plateaus and lovely valleys. The rich carpet of nature made his home beautiful, and furnished him with an easy, luxuriant living. The solemn stillness was broken only by the war-whoop of the Indian, the lowing of the buffalo, and the hungry cry of the wolf.

The population of Sioux City in 1870 was 6,000; in 1880, 7,308; in 1883, 14,000; in June, 1885, 19,071; in January, 1886, 23,382—a gain of 4,308 from June, 1885, to January, 1886.

Probably no city of its size in the country shows more activity in building operations than does this bright little Western metropolis at the present day. Buildings of all classes are being erected as fast as men and material can put them in shape, and the demand seems to exceed the supply. There are no vacant stores in the city, and even as of residence property have no difficulty in finding tenants as soon as houses are ready for occupancy, that are willing to pay good rents. Among the building improvements that are now under way are several large blocks of stores, a $200,000 hotel, several factories and scores of residences varying in size and style, from the quiet little cottage to the stately mansion.

The demand for carpenters, bricklayers, and other mechanics is much greater than the supply, and all find work at good wages as soon as they reach the city. It is reported that a number of contractors have been delayed upon their work quite seriously on account of the scarcity of good help. One reason for this scarcity is the demand made by outside towns for assistance. When mechanics of any kind are needed in the small towns (of which there are many) lying in the vicinity of Sioux City they send there for them, and, as a consequence, every one that desires work can have it. A good mechanic has no reason to be idle there.

Few cities of its size in this or any other country can boast of better improvements, better manufactories, larger wholesale houses, or more energetic people. The city has a perfect police, fire, water, and sewerage system, under the management of competent directors and superintendents, and before another winter sets in several miles of the best pavement that can be invented will cover some of its most prominent thoroughfares.

Several of the most important railroads in the West center there, and more will soon seek admission to its limits. It is expected that a large Union Passenger Depot will be erected at this season for the accommodation of business of the Chicago and Northwestern, Sioux City and Pacific, Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul, Illinois Central, and Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Omaha Railroads, all of which run trains to and from Sioux City daily at the present time.

AN unrepealed law of New Jersey, passed while the State was a British colony, reads as follows: "That all women of whatever age, rank, profession or degree, whether virgins, maids or widows, who shall after this act impose upon, seduce and betray into matrimony any of his Majesty's subjects by virtue of scents, cosmetics, washes, paints, artificial teeth, false hair or high-heeled shoes, shall incur the penalty of the law now in force against witchcraft and like misdemeanors."

Duck Farmers in China.

One afternoon we went on an interesting expedition up the river, and then turned aside into one of the many creeks, to the village of Faa-tee, and thence onward in search of one of the great duck-hatching establishments, where multitudinous eggs are artificially hatched. The first we came to was closed, but the boatmen told us of another further on, so we landed and walked along narrow ridges between large-flooded fields, in which lotus and water chestnuts are grown for the sake of their edible roots. Both are nice when cooked, but the collecting of these in this deep mud must be truly detestable for the poor women engaged in it. Passing by amazing heaps of old egg shells (for which even the Chinese seem to have as yet found no use) we reached the hatching-house, in which many thousands of eggs are being gradually warmed in great baskets filled up with heated chaff, and placed on shelves of very open basket work, which are arranged in tiers all round the walls, while on the ground are placed earthenware stoves full of burning charcoal. Here the eggs are kept for a whole day and night, the position of the baskets with reference to the stoves being continually changed by attendants who reserve their apparel for use in a cooler atmosphere! After this preliminary heating the eggs are removed to other baskets in another heated room, to which they are dexterously carried in cloths, each containing about fifty eggs. No one but a neat-handed Chinaman could carry such a burden without a breakage! Here the eggs remain for about a fortnight, each egg being frequently moved from place to place to equalize their share of heating. After this they are taken to a third room, where they are spread over wide shelves and covered with sheets of thick, warm cotton; at the end of another fortnight hundreds of little ducklings simultaneously break their shells, and by evening perhaps a couple of thousand fluffy little beauties are launched into life, and are forthwith fed with rice water. Duck farmers (who know precisely when each great hatching is due) are in attendance to buy so many hundreds of these pretty infants, whom they at once carry off to their respective farms, where there are already an immense number of ducks and geese of different ages, and in separate lots. The geese, by the way, are not hatched artificially, owing to the thickness of their shells, consequently they are not so very numerous as ducks. Still, flocks numbering 500 to 800 are reared, and are provided with wattle shelves on which to roost, as damp ground is considered injurious to the young birds. A very large goose market is held every morning in Canton, which is supplied by geese boats, each of which brings 200 or 300 birds. As to the baby ducks, they are fed on boiled rice, and after a while are promoted to bran, maggots, and other delicacies, till the day comes when the owners of the duck boats come to purchase the half-grown birds and commence the process of letting them fatten themselves as aforesaid. This continues till they are ready for the market, and are either sold for immediate consumption or bought wholesale by the provision dealers, who split, salt, and dry them in the sun. The heart, gizzard, and entrails are also dried and sold separately, and the bills, tongues, and feet are pickled in brine. —Belgravia.

Railroad Stock.

A man was one day making a trip on a "mixed" train on a Dakota road. Passage on these trains is never taken except for journeys of considerable length; walking is as easy and much faster for short distances. On this occasion the movement was even more deliberate than usual, and the passenger called the conductor to his seat and said:

"Isn't this motion pretty slow?"

"Well, we aint flying. I'll admit."

"Sure everything's all right?"

"I think so."

"Wheels all greased?"

"Yes, I greased them myself."

"Tires all on?"

"Yes, we run through the creek back here and soaked up the wheels so they would stay."

"Any spokes loose?"

"No."

"You are certain the wheels are all on the rails?"

"They was when I come in."

"Couldn't be possible that any of them are off and the axle dragging, could it?"

"I guess not."

"Are we going up hill?"

"No, this is pretty mid'lin' level."

"Do you always run at this gait."

"No, we generally hump along a little faster'n this."

"May I ask what is the trouble, then?"

"Certainly. We found a fine two-year-old steer stuck in a trestle back here before you got on and stopped and helped it out. You know the rules of the road are that in such cases the animal belongs to the company."

"But I don't see why that should make you run so thundering slow?"

"Why, you blame' fool, we're taking that steer along to headquarters; got it tied behind, and it ain't used to leadin', and don't walk up very well. I'm doing all I can; got the brakeman prodding it up with an umbrel' and an ear of corn tied to the end of the bell-rope—if you think I'm goin' to start up and go howlin' mad and yank the horns off as good a steer as there is in the Territory, why, you're mistaken, that's all! I's train-men can't expect our pay unless we bring in some stock once'ner while."—Estelline (Dak.) Bell.

MICHIGAN AFFAIRS.

—The erection of a barrel factory is under contemplation at Salt River.

—Houghton County is going to build a bridge over the branch of the Sturgeon River.

The Methodists of Manistique will erect a $2,000 church building the coming season.

—Kalkaska is noted for its oddities, her latest addition being a young girl with long hair all over her face.

—A stock company has been formed at Royal Oak to sink a test well. Oil or high pressure gas is expected.

—Mr. Charles Lansing will erect a new brick hotel at Litchfield, to cost $6,000, the citizens to give him a bonus of $500.

—It is estimated that four hundred pupils of the schools at Lansing are confined to their homes by epizootic or rose colds.

—Dr. H. A. Baker, of the State Board of Health, is convinced that A. C. Smith, of Pinconning, has had an attack of genuine Asiatic cholera.

—The decoration of Representative Hall in the State Capitol at Lansing has been completed by the contractors, and is pronounced good.

Edward Cliff, of Onondaga, while attempting to board a moving freight train in the Central yards, at Jackson, was thrown against a switch and severely injured.

A majority of the National House Judiciary Committee has decided in favor of Bay City for the holding of United States courts, a minority favoring East Tawas.

Colonel A. V. Berry died recently at Jackson, aged 82. He was one of the first to explore the mining districts of Northern Michigan, and erected the first reduction works at Marquette.

A son of Mrs. Chas. Heinrich, who died suddenly at Detroit last January, having testified to his suspicions implicating his father, the father has brought an action for damages for slander.

In the Iron County perjury case counter-charges have been filed by the arrested township officials against those furnishing the first information, and it now looks as though the whole of the new county officials would become embroiled.

The Bay View camp-meeting near Petoskey will begin on July 20 and last three weeks. The chapel at Bay View will be enlarged, and the new dock at the grounds for the landing of steamers and the ferry is complete.

A Ridgeway woman has kept track of her baking for a year, and finds the score to stand thus for a family of six: Cookies, 1,295; pies, 592; cakes, 263; fried cakes, 287; loaves of bread, 728; besides numberless johnnycakes, shortcakes, pancakes, and puddings.

The Petoskey Democrat, which has been in litigation for some time between Mr. and Mrs. Roselle Rose, has been sold to a syndicate of Petoskey Democrats. John G. Hill, an attorney, assumes editorial control until a permanent management is arranged.

Ramsay Gregory, son of John Gregory, a prominent builder, was shot down in front of his own house at Bay City. On returning home, he found a thief carrying off some property from his father's stable, and, after a brief struggle, was shot through the heart. The revolver was held so close that his skin was burned. When the report of the weapon was heard, Mr. Gregory came out and found his son on the lawn. He died in a few minutes.

A most scandalous charivari took place in Owosso the other night. J. Nixon, who had just been married, was the victim. His house was surrounded by about a hundred men, all armed with shot-guns and rifles. They fired into the roof of the house, doing considerable damage. Nixon was called upon to treat the crowd or they would take him and the "old woman" (his wife) out and roll them in the mud. This he refused to do, whereupon they broke the windows, threw clubs against the house and went away saying that they would come back and fix them.

An old lady named Caroline Steffanski, living at Raisin Center, who has a son at the Reform School, at Lansing, decided a few days ago to visit him and sold her cow to raise money for that purpose. She arrived at Jackson, and bought a ticket for Lansing and stepped aboard the train. While standing in the aisle of the car, a man crowded against her and picked her pocket, securing $21.80 and her ticket. She immediately gave the alarm, pointing to the man, but although a number of passengers were in the car she was allowed to escape.

Miss Nellie Cook and Timothy Bresnahan, of Detroit, were married, as they supposed, by the assistant pastor of the Lutheran Church. The nuptials were the result of an extended courtship, which had greatly displeased the groom's father, Maurice Bresnahan, as he was a Catholic and Miss Cook a Protestant. The day after the ceremony it came out that the alleged minister was a peddler, disguised for the purpose of celebrating a mock-marriage. The bride accused her father-in-law of putting up the job, and claims that he replied by calling her vile names. The couple were afterward duly married, and Mrs. Bresnahan began a slander suit against her father-in-law for $5,000 damages.

Spring Elections.

At Grand Rapids, the fusion ticket was elected with the exception of the police justiceship, which was secured by an independent democrat, while a republican was elected director of the poor.

At Saginaw City, the democrats and republicans fused to oppose the labor party, and the fusion candidate was elected by a majority of 311. Democrats elect a majority of the aldermen.

At Jackson, Clarence H. Bennett (dem) was elected mayor by 845 majority. The democrats also have four majority in the city council.

At Ishpeming the Knights of Labor elected the full city ticket. Christian Melby for mayor had 79 majority.

At East Saginaw the democrats have elected the mayor, treasurer, and justice of the peace, the republicans having the recorder and one majority in the council.

At Bay City, the contest resulted in the election of a greenback recorder, a democratic justice and three supervisors, and one republican supervisor.

At Muskegon, L. G. Mason (dem.) was elected mayor by a majority of 309. The democrats also get three out of four aldermen.

At Big Rapids, the democratic and greenback union ticket was elected by majorities ranging from 89 to 214.

At Battle Creek, Henry Hall, republican, was elected mayor by a majority of 451.

Ann Arbor, the democrats elected John J. Robinson mayor by a plurality of 400.

Mancelona, supervisor, Peter Jackson, democrat.

Ionia, mayor and alderman, were elected by the republicans. The remainder of the city is democratic by a large majority, as are the supervisors.

Kalamazoo, the democrats, get treasurer by 357 majority. The aldermen, are divided, while the mayor is republican.

Teach the Children Drawing.

The Providence Journal has a long editorial article headed "Teach the Children to Draw," in the course of which it expresses some sensible ideas. The development of a child's mind, it says, is an epitome of the mental evolution of the race. Long before the printed page has any meaning for him, pictures are a delight. His instincts teach him the medium with which to express his ideas, and he naturally adopts a bold and broad style. A piece of chalk and a board fence, or a bit of charcoal and a white-washed wall, prove irresistible. Happy the child whose parents furnish him with a blackboard which he can lawfully cover with the creations of his fancy. As an illustration of the practical value of a knowledge of drawing, the Journal adds:

"Also, as nearly every manufactured article first takes visible shape on paper, it is of inestimable value to any man to be able to draw or to translate a working drawing correctly. James Nasmyth, in his quaint autobiography, tells how much he owed to his inherited taste for drawing while planning his great steam hammer and other world-known inventions. He also tells an amusing story of stopping at a cottage in a little foreign town and trying to make the good woman understand that he wished for a meal. She laughed merrily when he at length pulled out his sketch-book and drew a fowl, a loaf of bread and a bottle of wine, with a plate, knife and fork on a table, and soon a hot dinner was placed before him. Many a young girl, though she may never aspire to be an artist, finds her pleasure in fancy work greatly increased when she is able to design and draw her own patterns."

Improved Demand for Labor.

There is a gradual taking up of disemployed labor in several lines of manufacturing, but in a few the summer force is being reduced. In all branches of house-building work is active. In car-building and foundry-work more is going on. The hardware establishments of New England have been kept pretty busy. Eastern Pennsylvania shops are engaged on special lines of work and are busy. Machine-shop work is picking up all over the country. An abundance of orders is looked for by leading Philadelphia manufacturers in iron, textiles, machinery, engines, and special machinery. The winter, it is thought, will be a busy and prosperous one, from present indications. Every one has confidence in a big spring trade, and all are anxious to be ready for it in capacity and with stock. At best, however, there will be constant cause of complaint. Competition must of necessity always be present, and be a source of more or less evil. The higher earning power of money is acting to ease up the laborer. Increasing avenues for labor are being opened up by the diversification of labor, but on the other hand machinery improvements are hedging labor off. The capacity of the masses to consume has been met but in small part. It is in the supplying of their undeveloped requirements that the future industrial development will be made.—Philadelphia Record.

We are pleased to learn that the officers of the Charlevoix Mfg. Co. are preparing for a large increase of business the coming season. They expect to go into the manufacture of furniture, secretaries, desks, milk safes, etc., on an extensive scale.

Rev. Mr. Parmenter has been engaged to supply the pulpit of the Baptist church of Cascade, Wisconsin, for a few weeks, and is to enter upon his (temporary) field of labor next Sunday. Mrs. Parmenter will not accompany him, as she is engaged in giving lessons in painting.

It is a question whether Mr. Cruickshank will ever cease to smile again. Why? When he goes out into the street, the county seat news comes to him like a tickling tide, and when he goes back home that 10 lb. boy, born Friday morning does but increase the smile.

Mrs. A. M. Parmenter has our thanks for two beautiful oil paintings of Mackinac island scenery, the product of her own genius and skill. All her work shows her to be an artist of much merit. She is giving lessons to a select class now, and contemplates organizing a larger class at an early date. All who wish lessons should certainly call upon her.

From a communication from a resident of Hayes township, it is apparent that the Wilson Hoop Co., of South Arm, is a benefit not only to the township in which it is located, but to this part of the county as well, the company having paid out in Hayes township alone nearly three thousand dollars for timber during the past winter.

The Charlevoix Minstrels closed their season's engagment, at the opera hall, last Friday night. The proceeds were donated to the Boy's Band fund. This coming so close to other charitable doings was not so liberally attended though a fairly good and appreciative audience greeted the boys, in their closing appearence. The program being changed, and a short time to prepare in necessitated a few delays; otherwise all passed off pleasantly. The tripple tongue solo, by Prof. Bert Jarvis, deserves special mention, since it was a very difficult tripple tongue production, and was executed nobly. This young artist has few superiors, and deserves the praise so lavishly bestowed. The troupe will reorganize next winter, and travel a larger territory visiting all sister villages, and then press towards the south during the cold weather; and should the same participants continue, success is imminent.

Marine.

Leaving Chicago in the fine steamer City of Traverse, Saturday evening at 7 o'clock, connection will be made with the City of Grand Rapids, arriving at Cheboygan at 10 p. m., Monday evening. Going west passengers leaving Cheboygan on the steamer T. S. Faxton will connect with the City of Traverse, arriving early Friday morning following.

Cheboygan expected to have a dry dock this summer, but a suitable site for a fair price has not been found.

Mr. Krebs, with the Rifenburg Milling Co., expects his family on the Faxton. The captain has told them to be in readiness against the first report that the bay is open.

The tug Campbell will be commanded by Capt. Eli Toulouse.

The Historical Society.

The society passed another pleasant evening at the parlors of Mrs. O. D. Wood, whose hospitality it has so frequently enjoyed. President Green was in the chair; but the attendance was comparatively meager, on account of the entertainment at the opera hall.

The program was as follows:

Instrumental solo—Maggie Enos.

Selection from Annie Herbart—"Our Record," by Miss Luna Washburn.

Intermission.

Instrumental solo,—Mrs. Ella Smith.

Selection from Dante Gabriel Rosetti,—"Sister Helen," by Clement J. Strang.

Vocal solo,—"Twickenham Ferry," Mrs. Buzzell.

Selection from Shakespeare's Othello,—H. Lee Iddings.

Vocal solo,—"Ur gneistraude vinet," by Dr. Carlstein.

The next meeting is with Mr. and Mrs. Byron See.

F. W. Craine & Co.'s Opening.

Last Saturday was opening day with F. W. Craine & Co., and their elegant new store was thronged with customers all day. During part of the forenoon, and all the afternoon, three or four extra clerks were kept busy, not simply showing the goods, but making actual sales. The remark was frequently made that no such stock of goods was ever before spread out in a Charlevoix store. With so complete a stock, so attractively displayed in an elegant sales room, the energetic managers cannot fail to continue on the broad road of popularity and prosperity.

Ironton.

Friday evening, Rev. C. F VanAnken delivered his long promised temperance lecture—long deferred by reason of ill-health and inclement weather. He chose for his text: "Be not deceived," and spoke with such eloquence and earnestness, that when the ladies of the W. C. T. U. passed among the audience with the pledge, fifty men signed it. After singing, "Bringing in the sheaves," Rev. Parmenter closed by a few well-chosen remarks, saying, "Brother VanAnken has succeded admirably in cradling, but the ladies have had even the better succes in raking in and binding the sheaves.

FLORENCE VANE.

BY PHILIP PENDLETON COOK.

I loved thee long and dearly,
Florence Vane;
My life's bright dream and early
Hath come again;
I renew in my fond vision,
My heart's dear pain—
My hopes and thy derision,
Florence Vane.

The ruin lone and hoary,
The ruin old,
Where thou did'st hark my story,
At even told—
That spot the hues Elysian,
Of sky and pain—
I treasure my vision
Florence Vane!

Thou wast lovelier than the roses
In their prime;
Thy voice excelled the closes
Of sweetest rhyme;
Thy heart was as a river
Without a main.
Would I had loved thee never,
Florence Vane!

But fairest, coldest wonder!
Thy glorious clay—
Lieth the green sod under—
Alas the day!
And it boots not to remember
Thy disdain,
To quicken love's pale ember,
Florence Vane.

The lilies of the valley
By young graves weep;
The daisies love to dally
Where maidens sleep;
May their bloom in beauty vying;
Never wane
Where thine earthly part is lying,
Florence Vane!

CLORINDA PERRIVALE'S LOVERS.

BY PAUL PASTNOR.

There was no mistaking it—Eliphalet Babbitt was in love. He had all the general symptoms of that species of heart disease, and some that were peculiar to himself. He lost his appetite, and that was no small loss to Eliphalet, though it was a great gain to the family. He grew moody and absent-minded, and was falling into a habit of stealing away to the woods at noon and evening, and lying on his back under the trees. These, of course, were only general symptoms, but Eliphalet developed others characteristic of himself. For instance, when he went to work in the west meadow he invariably put on his Sunday clothes, even to the black gloves and stiff bell-crowned hat. Thus equipped, he would seize his lythe or his rake and work steadily toward the little white cottage with the brown barns and patent fire-gilt lightning-rods, where the Perrivales—father and daughter lived. It was a rare sight to see this gaunt, clerical figure in black stalking by industrial degrees across the meadow, and every now and then raising a pair of shy, half-frightened eyes in the direction of the leaf-embowered cottage, as though he suspected himself of being watched, and would like desperately well to be visibly assured of the fact. The extraordinary attraction of the Perrivale homestead to Eliphalet Babbitt, it might not take an oracle to divine, was none other than the fair mistress of the place—Miss Clorinda Perrivale. In fact, it was whispered abroad, in rural vernacular, that Eliphalet Babbitt was "sum" with "Clorindy" Perrivale. What wonder if it were so? Clorinda Perrivale was as trim and pretty a lass as one sees in a year's wanderings. She was as plump and well-turned as a ball of her own golden butter, and had a face and a pair of eyes that raised the mischief with every young fellow she looked at. And then she had a way—the pretty minx!—of letting her long lashes droop upon her cheeks, when the shy youth caught her glance, and actually blushing in sympathy with his confusion. Clorinda was an incorrigible flirt. Unfortunately, she had lost her mother when a mere child, and, without the restraining influence of womanhood upon her girlish playfulness and love of admiration, had involved herself in a life of excitement and pleasure, which had gradually become the very breath of life to her.

Eliphalet Babbitt was among the latest of her admirers. He had been at school for six years, vainly attempting to polish his rough but honest wit on the grindstone of culture; and now, but little changed—the same awkward, good-natured, bashful, blundering but capable fellow—he had returned home, to displace the Greek verbs in his hair with hayseed, and get rid of the crude mass of philosophics and sciences which he had gorged, by a judicious regimen of plain home duties, and occasional eructations of local vernacular. He had met Clorinda Perrivale frequently since his return, at church, at picnics, and at home, and had fallen irretrievably in love with the village belle.

During the course of the summer in which our story opens, "Clorinda Perrivale's love-making" had become the subject of so much ill-considered village gossip that, one evening, as she sat with her father on the little honeysuckle-covered porch in front of the cottage, he had said to her: "My girl, you have had your lovers now for so long that don't you think you could decide upon one for your partner in life?" Then, in answer to the girl's quick look of apprehension and pain, he had quietly gone on to tell her of the village talk; of his own fear that she was transgressing the bounds of conventional propriety by admitting equally the warm attentions of so many young men; and finally, to ask her if, for his sake, and the sake of her dead mother, she would either cease giving encouragement to her suitors, or choose one of them, as best suited her own sweet will, for life. It was a plain, serious talk, such as every father of a motherless girl is bound and privileged to have, when the strange, wayward age of girlhood is budding into womanhood. Clorinda listened with downcast eyes, and when he had finished she came and sat in his lap and laid her warm cheek against his, and said, with tears: "Father, you are right; I have been very thoughtless, and I thank you for what you have said. Good-night!" and then she ran away upstairs to her own room, and cast herself on the bed, and wept, not bitterly, but tenderly, until the shadows of night, and the stillness, and the stars brooded over the world, and she fell asleep.

Fourth-of-July night there was to be a great and glorious celebration, with speeches and cannon and fireworks, in the little city of Marbray, six miles down the river. Every man and boy in Newville had shaped his affairs during the previous six weeks to the one special end of attending the grand demonstration on that night. Now Clorinda Perrivale, merry and mischievous again, even after her tears, but this time with a pure and sweet purpose in her merry heart, conceived the idea of testing her devotees upon that memorable occasion, and chosing him whose love for her should prove paramount to his love for Chinese fireworks and scintillating eloquence. So she managed to convey to each of her suitors singly the information that she would be at home on Fourth-of-July night, and should very much like the pleasure of his company at that time. Something, too, in the manner of the invitation seemed to hint that it was of especial interest to the recipient. Among the rest, Eliphalet Babbitt received the message of the fair Clorinda, and instantly all visions of pyrotechnic display and soul-stirring oratory vanished from his mind, and his heart went pit-a-pat with love's ultimate hope and fear. Now Eliphalet was a shrewd fellow, and by dint of considerable prying about, and keeping his eyes and ears open, he found out that he was not the only one appointed to meet the bewitching Clorinda upon the evening of the celebration. Some half-score rivals evaded his questions about going to Marbray in such a manner that he was sure they were intending to keep the appointment with Miss Perrivale. Eliphalet went home and pondered upon the matter. He reflected that, if Clorinda were intending to make her choice from a superficial examination of some ten or twelve young men dressed in their Sunday clothes and gotten up to "kill," he would stand a pretty poor chance. If there were only some way of getting rid of his rivals! If he could think of some plan to keep them away on the eventful night, and make it appear to Clorinda that they cared less about her than they did about a night's fun in Marbray, why, his suit would be as good as won, for a girl of her spirit wouldn't stand snubbing by the handsomest and most agreeable young man that ever walked. Eliphalet put on his thinking-cap, and drew it tighter than he ever did before. He concocted all sorts of schemes, but rejected them one after the other as impracticable. All of a sudden he started up as if he had been sitting on a box of dynamite. "By the great horn spoon!" he exclaimed, striking his leg with the palm of his hand. "I've got it now!" He nodded so emphatically that his hair tumbled down over his forehead, and gave him the appearance of a very much exaggerated sky terrier. "I've got it, sir! I've got it!" he repeated, in louder tones, leaving any chance listener to surmise for himself whether he meant he had the perpetuum mobile or the secret of perpetual motion. He then danced all around the room on one foot, and ended up by taking a running jump on to the bed and bringing down the whole structure in one confused mass of slats, pillows, blankets, and bedposts.

Any one loitering around the Babbitt farm-house at about eight o'clock on the evening of the 4th of July, 18—, might have seen a tall, gaunt figure, neatly arrayed in black, emerging from the shed door with a tin pail in one hand and a short-handled brush in the other. That figure belonged to Eliphalet Babbitt, and that pail to his mother, and in that pail was lard. Now it happened that the regular path of Clorinda Perrivale's suitors lay across the west meadow aforesaid, over the fence and across a good-sized brook by means of a single log. They took this path because it brought them to the rear of the house, and relieved them of the disagreeable necessity of saying good-evening to Mr. Perrivale, who usually sat on the front porch at the evening hour, smoking his pipe. He is to be noted as a universal face in love affairs that the suitor, however well received, always kept clear of the girl's male parent.

Eliphalet Babbitt was aware of the custom of his rivals. Of course it was one that he himself habitually practiced, and to-night a grim smile sat upon his lips, as he pursued his way across the fields in the soft summer twilight, lard-pail in hand, and with his love-speech already made out in his heart. The shadows of early night were just closing round, as he climbed the fence and approached the log bridge over the brook. Looking carefully about him to see that no one was witness to his deed, he flung himself astride of the log, with his back to the Perrivale cottage, opened his pail, dipped the brush in the lard, and proceeded to apply a liberal coating of it to the already smooth-worn log, as he hitched along backward toward the opposite bank. When his task was completed he hid pail and brush under the bank and hastened up the path to the cottage. Clorinda was sitting in her little work-room with the vine-covered window as he drew near, and she merrily bade him come in without knocking. Oh, how beautiful she looked rocking back and forth in the dusk-light, against the background of the vine, her pure white dress of muslin but half concealing her round white arms and marble shoulders! Eliphalet shyly sat down on the edge of a chair, and turned his bell-crowned hat round and round in his nervous hands. They talked—or, rather, she talked—pleasantly and quietly for a little while, listening in the pauses to the monotonous chirp, chirp of the cricket and the croaking of the frogs on the banks of the brook. Deeper and deeper grew the shadows, till the figure in white seemed like a substanceless thing seen dimly in a vision, and the figure in black had almost melted away into the darkness of the inner room. The girl had ceased to talk much. Her face was turned away from Eliphalet; and she seemed to be looking out anxiously, as she rocked, through the narrow spaces of the vine. At length a dead silence prevailed. Eliphalet's tongue was so dry that he could not speak, and his wits were drier still of words to speak to the beautiful girl, with her thoughts apparently so far away from him. Suddenly there was a heavy splash from the brook below. "Oh, my!" cried Clorinda, starting as if suddenly wakened from a dream. "That rock has fallen out of the bank—I knew it would!"

"What rock, Clorindy?" asked Eliphalet, hitching his chair a little nearer in the dark, under cover of the sound of his voice. "Do you mean the big rock by the bridge?"

"Yes," answered Clorinda. "Did you notice it?"

"I guess I did," exclaimed Eliphalet, glad to get upon a subject of conversation in that trying moment. "I vowed that rock was going to fall one of these days. I told father so. Did it frighten you, Clorindy?" (Here he started to hitch a little nearer, but his chair creaked, and he forebore.)

"Yes, it did," admitted the girl. "I must have been thinking——"

Splash!

"Gosh, what a muskrat!" exclaimed Eliphalet, the cold sweat starting out all over him. "Wish I'd a been there with a gun!"

"Was it a muskrat?" asked Clorinda, curiously. "It didn't sound like a stone."

"Yes, it was," asseverated Eliphalet, roundly. "I know a muskrat splash, every time. Did you ever see a muskrat, Clorindy?" (Croak, croak, from the chair.)

"No, I never did," exclaimed Clorinda; "but I have seen their holes."

"So've I, so've I!" exclaimed Eliphalet, immensely tickled at the coincidence. "When the brook gets down real low and hain't over, so there won't be anybody round to bother us, I'll show you more'n fifteen or sixteen of 'em, all in a——"

Splash!

"That was a fish!" cried Clorinda, positively.

"So 'twas! so 'twas!" assented Eliphalet, and his chair made a long, scraping noise on the floor. "Say, Clorindy, do you like to fish?"

"Yes, I do—ever so much."

"So do I! uh, uh. So do—I." Eliphalet was sucking the rim of his bell-crowned hat, and bending forward, and looking up sidewise through the darkness at the figure in white. "Clorindy—will you go fishing with me, some time?"

"Perhaps so, Eliph—Mr. Babbitt."

"He, he, he!" from Eliphalet. Scrape, creak, creak! from the chair.

"Say, Clorindy—I'm glad I didn't go to the fireworks to-night."

"Why, Eliph—alet?"

"Beenz—beenz, all the other boys went, you know; and—hee, hee, hee!"

Splash! splash!

"Bull-frogs!" exclaimed Eliphalet. ("Two of 'em together, by the great horn spoon!")

"How do you know they were bull-frogs, Eliphalet?"

"I heard 'em croak, didn't you?"

"I thought I heard some noise—more like a man's voice."

"Oh, no! that was me. I was just going to say something."

"What was it, Eliphalet?"

"I—I like you pretty well, Clorindy"—scrape, scrape, from the chair. Eliphalet was very close now. He put out his arm; it slipped around Clorinda's waist, and the chair stopped rocking. "Clorindy—I—"

Something precluded the use of further words, and when Eliphalet went home that night he was so elated that he forgot all about the larded bridge, and Clorinda, in her little room over the porch, thought she faintly heard—

Bill Nye on Hydrophobia.

I take occasion at this time to ask the American people as one man, what are we to do to prevent the spread of the most insidious and disagreeable disease known, as hydrophobia? When a fellow-being has to be smothered, as was the case the other day right here in our fair land, a land where tyrant foot hath never trod nor bigot forged a chain, we look anxiously into each other's faces and inquire, what shall we do?

Shall we go to France at a great expense and fill our systems full of dog virus and then return to our glorious land where we may fork over that virus to posterity and thus mix up French hydrophobia with the mayvebbine blood of free-born American citizens?

I wot not.

If I knew that would be my last wot I would not change it. That is just wot it would be.

But again.

What shall we do to avoid getting impregnated with the American dog and then saturating our systems with the alien dog of Paris?

It is a serious matter, and if we do not want to play the Desdemona act, we must take some timely precautions. What must those precautions be?

Did it ever occur to the average thinking mind that we might squeeze along for weeks without a dog? Whole families have existed for years after being deprived of dogs. Look at the wealthy of our land. They go on comfortably through life and die at last with unanimous consent of their heirs dogless.

Then why can not the poor gradually taper off on dogs? They ought not to stop all of a sudden; but they could leave off a dog at a time until at last they overcame the pernicious habit. I saw a man in St. Paul last week who was once poor, and so owned seven variegated dogs. He was confirmed in the habit. But he summoned all his will power at last and said he would shake off those dogs and become a man. He did so, and to-day he owns a city lot in St. Paul, and seems to be the picture of health.

The trouble about maintaining a dog is that he may go on for years in a quiet, gentlemanly way, winning the regard of all who know him, and then all of a sudden he may hydrophobe in the most violent manner. Not only that, but he may do so while we have company. He may also bite our twins or the twins of our warmest friends. He may bite us now and we may laugh at it, but in five years from now, while we may be delivering a humorous lecture, we may burst forth into the audience and bite a beautiful young lady in the parquet on the ear.

It is a solemn thing to think of, fellow-citizens, and I appeal to those who may read this, as a man who may not live to see a satisfactory political reform—I appeal to you to refrain from the dog. He is purely ornamental. We may love a good dog, but we ought to love our children more. It would be a very, very noble and expensive dog that I would agree to feed with my only son.

I know that we gradually become attached to a good dog, but some day he may become attached to us, and what can be sadder than the sight of a leading citizen drawing a reluctant mad-dog down the street by main strength and the seat of his pantaloons? (I mean his own, not the dog's pants. This joke will appear in book form in April. The book will be very reasonable, and there will be another joke in it also.) I have said a good deal about the dog, pro and con, and I am not a rabid dog abolitionist, for no one loves to have his clear-cut features licked by the warm, wet tongue of a noble dog any more than I do; but rather than see hydrophobia become a national characteristic or a leading industry here, I would forego the dog.

Perhaps all men are that way, however. When they get a little forehanded they forget that they were once poor, and owned dogs. If so, I do not wish to be unfair. Let us yield up our dogs and take the affection that we would otherwise bestow on them and lavish it upon some human being. I have tried it and it works well. There are thousands of people in the world, of both sexes, who are pining and starving for the love of money that we daily shower on the dog.

If the dog would be kind enough to refrain from introducing his justly celebrated virus into the persons of those only who refuse to kiss him on the moist, cold nose, it would be all right; but when a dog goes mad he is very impulsive, and he may bestow himself on an obscure man. So I feel a little nervous myself. BILL NYE.

VOORHEES, MORRISON, AND GARFIELD.

An Episode in Their Congressional Life Which Is Not Generally Known.

[Jules Guthridge, in Chicago News.]

Colonel Morrison, of Illinois, and Senator Voorhees, of Indiana, have been intimate friends for years. Few people are probably aware, however, that this friendship had its origin in an episode which promised at that time to be fraught with the gravest consequences for the Indiana statesman. Morrison and Voorhees made their entree simultaneously upon the stage of national politics in the Thirty-eighth Congress. This was in 1863, after Morrison had resigned his command in the army from wounds received at Donaldson. Morrison was a war Democrat; Voorhees a peace-at-any-price Democrat. Washington at that time was an unsafe place for men who did not believe in a vigorous prosecution of the war. The streets of the city, and even the corridors of the Capitol, swarmed with soldiers who needed but a word of encouragement to sweep every rebel sympathizer into the Potomac River. It was at this point that Voorhees made a speech in the House opposing the passage of a certain war measure. During the course of his remarks he was several times interrupted by General Garfield, of Ohio, who at length transgressed the law of parliamentary courtesy by pronouncing Voorhees a liar. Owing to the confusion and distance which separated the two members, Garfield's remark was not heard by Voorhees; who left the chamber at the conclusion of his speech. About midnight of that day, while busy in his room, a proof of his remarks was sent to him for revision. Glancing carelessly over the speech he was horrified to see this interjection.

"Mr. Garfield (interrupting)—If the gentleman persists in making that statement I pronounce him a deliberate liar!"

For a moment Voorhees was too much astonished to speak. Then, turning to James C. Robinson, of Illinois, who happened to be present, he said: "If Garfield does not apologize for this language I must fight him. I can never return to my constituents without demanding and receiving satisfaction. Will you aid me in the matter?" But Robinson objected. After some further conversation Robinson said: "Why don't you see Colonel Morrison? He has a room in this house and I have no doubt can give you better advice than I." Morrison was asleep when the two Congressmen reached his door, but he speedily aroused himself and listened to Voorhees' story. At its conclusion the latter said: "If you carry a challenge to Garfield you are liable to a heavy fine and imprisonment. Are you willing to risk the consequences?" Morrison made no reply, further than nodding his head affirmatively. Then, taking the "proof" in his hands, he started for Garfield's house. It was after 1 o'clock when he reached it. Garfield was sitting in his library at work. Morrison briefly stated his errand. "Did I say that?" asked Garfield, incredulously. For answer Morrison pointed to the proof. "I am directed by Mr. Voorhees," he continued, "to insist upon an apology or a fight." Garfield replied, with dignity, "I was in error, and am not ashamed to confess it. I uttered those words in a moment of excitement. It did not occur to me that I spoke sufficiently loud for the official reporters to hear me," and, seizing a pencil, he obliterated the words with so much vigor that the point of the instrument cut through the paper. Morrison returned to Voorhees' room and stated the result of his mission. Voorhees was delighted at the result. If it had been necessary to challenge Garfield, and the fact had become known, the infuriated soldiery would have torn him to pieces. It is no wonder he felt grateful to Morrison for his successful management of the affair. He has been one of Morrison's closest friends ever since.

Sensation vs. Bible Preaching.

No doubt many of the clergy would make excellent political speakers, comic lecturers, or actors on the stage, but it would be hardly fair for them to appear in the church's livery and claim secular popularity on account of their cloth. No man can serve two masters, or act as chaplain and jester at the same time. It is true that the stipends of the clergy are small, and, although they who preach the gospel still live by the gospel, they do not fare sumptuously, but getting food and raiment have therewith to be content. The churches pay what they can for pastors, not for secular lecturers; and if the latter be what they want they need not pay an annual stipend at all. Even the most agnostic of skeptics have admitted that the Bible has no equal as an instrument of literary and philosophic culture. It gives employment to the highest and finest faculties of the mind. The clergyman who substitutes literature for theology, Shakspeare and the other poets for the Bible, Tyndall and Darwin for St. Paul, social science for the Sermon on the Mount, gives his congregation stones for bread, and shows clearly that he made the great mistake of his life when he took upon him the pastoral office and became professedly a preacher of the everlasting gospel.

CONTRARY to general belief, it is stated that the number of suicides in this country is small in comparison with Europe. Out of the more than twenty-five thousand cases of self-destruction which occur annually in Europe and the United States together, only about one thousand six hundred can be laid to our score.

A Thief with a Conscience.

"Did you ever see an honest thief?" asked Mr. Carpenter, the Front-street marketman. "Well, I have. A man came into the store Monday morning and asked me if I had any pickerel. I opened the fish-box, and he picked out a fair-sized one. 'How much do you want for that one?' asked the man. 'I'll weigh it and see,' I replied. I did so, and told him he could have it for 40 cents. Said he: 'I stole a pickerel from your stand out there last Saturday night and I want to pay for it. It was nearly as big as this one you've just weighed for me, and I had you weigh this one so I could find out how much the other one was worth. Now, I am willing to pay you double for it. I don't know what made me steal it, for I never did such a thing before, and I passed a most wretched Sunday on account of it.'"—Port Jervis Union.

AN OLD PREJUDICE DISAPPEARING.

Women doctors are so numerous now that the prejudice against them has long since died out. There are several in the United States, it is said, who enjoy an annual income of $20,000 and over, and a practice worth $5,000 a year is common. They have reached their present honorable position by hard and conscientious work, and all they receive is well earned. Medical colleges for women are now established in all the large cities, and the graduates from them number several hundred every year. Among the women doctors of Illinois is Miss Addie M. Barnes, of Danville, who recently moved to that city from Lafayette, Ind. She has recently had herself as a patient, and how she was successful in working a cure she tells us follows:

"I had a very stubborn case of scintica and had been confined to my bed for three weeks. I had blistered the limb and used all kinds of liniments to no purpose. Rev. Dr. Buchtel told me of the wonderful remedy, Athlophoros. Our druggist sent for it and I bought two bottles of it. Before I had taken three doses I was able to get out of bed and sit up for two hours. In three days I went down the street. I believe that had I persevered with the remedy the cure would have been permanent. However, I have never been such a sufferer since. I keep Athlophoros in my office and often tell patients of the great relief it gave me, and recommend it."

E. K. Mercer, proprietor of the Princeton (Ill.) Tribune, says of Athlophoros:

"It is a good medicine and did me more good than did half a dozen doctors."

Mr. John H. Hutsel, proprietor of the West Side Pavilion, No. 678 West Indiana street, Chicago, who had been a victim of rheumatism, says:

"I never had a severe case of sickness before this rheumatism came on me, and I would just remark right here that I never want another such. When it first made its appearance I consulted a physician, but his medicine made me worse. I then went to St. Joseph's Hospital. After being there some time and getting no relief, I went back home. After being at home a few days, I heard about Athlophoros and decided to try it myself. I came from the hospital on the 3d of July. Two days after that I was unable to walk or sleep at night. I was in this condition when I commenced with the Athlophoros on the 7th inst., and by the 15th of the month I was well. You can see by my book, I have an exact record of the dates of the time I commenced using and when I was well."

"How long were you sick, Mr. Hutsel?"

"For five weeks I was confined to my bed, during which time I lost twenty-three pounds of flesh."

"How much did you use to effect this cure?"

"Two bottles did the work, and I have not felt any pain or return of the disease since."

"Have you known of any others that have used Athlophoros?"

"Yes; the lady that recommended it to me said she knew of an old chronic case of twenty years' standing that had been cured by the use of Athlophoros. I have had many persons that knew how I had been afflicted and suffered inquire what cured me. I am always glad to be able to say that Athlophoros is the sovereign remedy for rheumatism."

If you cannot get ATHLOPHOROS of your druggist, we will send it express paid, on receipt of regular price—one dollar per bottle. We prefer that you buy it of your druggist, but if he hasn't it, do not be persuaded to try something else, but order at once from us as directed. ATHLOPHOROS Co., 112 Wall street, New York.

The Same, Only Different.

A young man, dabbling in real estate and known financially quite well by Phil Armour, went into that gentleman's office lately.

"I've hit on a great chance to invest in a piece of property that will double in value in a year," he said, excitedly.

"Yes," replied Mr. A. quietly.

"House and lot, dirt cheap, on Grand Boulevard."

"Yes," responded Phil again.

"Owner caught in the market and forced to sell."

"Yes."

"Nobody knows anything about the chance but me."

"Yes."

"All I need is enough to bind the bargain."

"Yes."

"Could you let me have a thousand?"

"Yes."

"That's good."

"Yes."

"When can I get it."

"Not at all. I said I could let you have it, but I didn't say I would. Better go and see somebody else. Good-by."—Merchant Traveler.

Queer Old Hymns.

We stumbled a while ago, says the Christian Advocate, on the following in one of Newton's hymns:

The kine ungulded went
By the directed road,
When the Philistines homeward sent
The ark of Israel's God.

Lowing, they passed along,
And left their calves shut up;
They felt an interest for their young,
But would not turn nor stop.

This is worthy to be remembered with Isaac Watt's verse:

He spake, and stright our hearts and brains
With all their motions rose;
Let blood the saints flow round the veins,
And round the veins it flows.

It was an old Oriental doctrine that women have no souls. More enlightened philosophy concedes that they have purer, finer, more exalted souls than men. But they are too often contained in feeble, suffering bodies, which hamper and retard their full development. For all those painful ailments incident to the sex, Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription" is the best specific in the world, and is sold under a positive guarantee that it will do all that is claimed for it. Price reduced to one dollar. By druggists.

To Spur a Jaded Appetite

Is one thing, to invigorate and regulate the digestive organs is another. And yet mere appetizers are constantly mistaken for and are even termed tonics. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is on a far higher plane in the category of medical preparations than the so-called tonics which impart a relish for the food. These have their use, and are estimable, provided they be pure. But the scope of the remedial operation of the Bitters is far wider. It reforms enfeebled condition of the stomach, and purifies its juices, if vitiated, as well as promotes their secretion in healthful abundance. The stomach having in conjunction with the liver and the bowels, been reclaimed, and their natural tone restored through its agency, appetite returns, as a matter of course. Fever and ague, poverty of the blood, and consequent debility, rheumatic ailments, and a tendency to kidney and bladder troubles, are also remedied by it.

Around the County.

The County Seat.

East Jordan, April 6, 1886.

EDITOR JOURNAL,—I have a pleasant duty to perform in behalf of the people of this village and region; it is to thank the people of Charlevoix and elsewhere, who have in this county-seat contest, insisted by their votes, upon the greatest good to the greatest number, and have therefore decided to let the county seat remain, for the present where it is. We feel joyful, and hope to show, when opportunity arrises, that we are not ungrateful, for the favor shown this village.

And while we are in the mood, it will not be amiss to offer a little good advice to the man who has prided himself upon being our greatest enemy. To that end we should first see what ails him. Evidently the focus of his intellectual vision has been shortening for years, until he sees nothing but himself, and of himself has but the most imperfect view. We would indulge the hope, faint though it be, that he will soon cease to admire his outward appearance, and turn his attention inwardly, for there he will see the trouble; indeed it is perfectly apparent to the merest tyro in philosophical ethics. He would see a much twisted duodenum, receiving a bad quality of pancreatic juice from a compressed pancreas. He would see a spleen so large as to outweigh all the rest of his individuality, and probably having attached to it many large, whitish, pulpy excressences. He would find a diseased liver, secreting bile, all the properties of which are absent except its bitterness. Proceeding upward with the examination he would reach the brain-box, and find it, (though much swollen), nearly empty. And there is to be found the explanation of the pulpy excrescences above spoken of,—his brain has gone down and attached itself to his spleen. Through long bad usage it has vacated its high normal seat to occupy a low abnormal one.

If at this stage of his self-examination, some good spirit would throw a gleam of light athwart his vision, he would see that he, with his aforesaid twisted duodenum, compressed pancreas, enlarged spleen, diseased liver, and swollen, though almost empty brain box, is fast going to the "bow wows," and that unless he forthwith change his course, and amend his manners, he will soon "get there."

We could enlarge upon this subject, and suggest a remedy, but prefer to entrust his case to other friends, who live nearer to him and understand him perfectly—simply suggesting that he should consult the best of them without the least delay; and feeling assured that if he will read and heed what I have written in this letter, he will sometime heartily thank and bless the JOURNAL and B.

Temperance Revival at Ironton.

Fifty new names on the pledge. Rev. Mr. VanAnken, and Rev. Mr. Parmenter attended the W. C. T U. monthly temperance meeting last Friday, evening at Ironton, and the union gathered a very handsome harvest. Mr. VanAnken, is reported to have delivered a very able address, after which the pledge was passed through the congregation, and obtained fifty new names of men, young and old, after singing, "Where is my boy to night." Mr. Parmenter, was called out, and spoke briefly, congratulating the youngest of the sisterhood of villages, on the momentum, which the temperance cause has attained, winding up as follows: "Glory to God, for the advancement of the temperance cause. Fifty new notes in the songs of triumph; fifty vows registered on earth and in heaven. Tell it in Gath; and publish it in the streets of Askelon; and among all the villages: The W. C. T. U. has gathered, in two hours, fifty shocks in the temperance harvest, Mr. VanAuken did the cutting and the ladies the binding. P.

Why is it?

And still the saloons go right along no failures, no foreclosures, no assignments. The business is prosperous. The man of the bar grows fat, and independent, and soon gets rich. Men in legitimate and necessary branches of business, with large capital invested, with utmost vigilance and intense application to their business, struggle hard against the pressure of the times, staving off clamoring creditors, in the vain hope that something will turn up to free them from their embarrassment, but after all their honest and long continued struggle they fail at last. Why is it? Men who patronize the saloons will willingly plank down the full price demanded, for their drink, without asking a question, knowing that the saloon keeper is charging them from three to five hundred per cent., but they ask no questions, make no complaints at extravagant charges, and generally ask for no credit. Why is it? Men and women go to the dry goods, grocery or boot and shoe stores expecting to buy goods at a fraction above cost, and below if they can—the same man who pays the saloon-keeper five hundred per cent., profit, without complaining, will Jew the hardware man down to cost of goods if he can. Why is it? Men who pay the saloon man cash down for every drink will go to the shoe store and ask for a credit of six months, and then let it run twelve months or two years, if not pushed, leaving the merchant to carry a burden of interest, which is ruinous. Why is this?

Can the citizens of Charlevoix not see that their welfare is at stake? Every few days some hard toiling business man has to succomb to the pressure, but the saloons go on, absorbing the money that ought to go into legitimate business, and purchase the necessaries of life for the liquor-made sufferers of our village. The saloon men bear comparatively none of the burden of the taxes. They have but a small amount of capital invested, while nearly all branches of honorable business require large capital, and it is taxed to pay the cost of crime caused by the saloon men. How unjust! Will the business men of Charlevoix remain satisfied to allow the whiskey shops to absorb the resources of the people of the county, at the rate of five hundred per cent profit on their goods, while they are compelled to sell legitimate merchandise at profits ranging from nothing to twenty-five per cent? If the money spent in this village for liquor, for the past five years, had been expended in the purchase of food, clothing, building material, books and articles of home adornment, every family in the county would probably now live in a comfortable dwelling, with good clothes and plenty to eat; and the merchants of our village could all have met their claims and to-day be doing double their present business.

Now I propose henceforth that the people of Charlevoix buy their liquor on "tick," at twenty-five percnet profit to the whiskey man, and pay cash down to the honest merchant, at a profit that will give him an honest living, and see what the result will be.

ECONOMY.

Cure for Piles.

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he has some affection of the kidneys or neighboring organs. At times, symptoms of indigestion are present, flatulency, uneasiness of the stomach, etc. A moisture, like perspiration, producing a very disagreeable itching, after getting warm, is a common attendant. Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Bosanko's Pile Remedy, which acts directly upon the parts affected, absorbing the Tumors, allaying the intense itching, and effecting a permanent cure. Price 50 cents. Sold by Geo. W. Crozier. 152

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the condition of a certain mortgage, made by Mary Blackbird to John A. Bacot, dated October 3d, A. D. 1883, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, for the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, on the 3d day of October, A. D. 1884, in liber 8 of mortgages, on page 522, which said mortgage was on the 22d day of December, 1881, assigned by said John A. Bacot to Frederick W. Mayne, said assignment being on record in the Registers office for Charlevoix county, in liber 10 of mortgages on page 610, and on the 14th day of December 1885, was assigned by said Frederick W. Mayne to Hugh Miller, said assignment being recorded in the Registers office for Charlevoix county, in liber 13 of mortgages, on page 146, on which mortgage there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of Two hundred dollars, and sixty-five cents, as principal and interest, and no suit or proceedings at law having been instituted to recover the moneys secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof, Now, therefore, by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and the statute in such case made and provided, notice is hereby given that on Saturday, the 19th day of June A. D. 1886, at one o'clock in the afternoon, I shall sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door of the town hall in the village of East Jordan, (that being the place where the Circuit Court for Charlevoix County is holden,) the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the amount due on said mortgage, with ten per cent interest, and all legal costs, together with an attorney's fee of fifteen dollars, covenanted for therein, the premises being described in said mortgage as all that parcel of land, situate in the township of Hayes, in the county of Charlevoix, and State of Michigan, and known and described as follows: The south west quarter (¼) of the south west quarter (¼) of section thirty-six (36) township thirty four (34) north of range seven (7) west, containing forty acres according to the United States survey.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Whereas, default has been made in the payment of the interest upon the money secured by a mortgage dated the 28th day of September, 1881, executed by Oliver C. Swarthout and Emire Swarthout his wife, to David J. Cushman, which said mortgage was recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Charlevoix county, in Liber 4 of mortgages, on page 416, on the 29th day of September, 1881; and whereas, the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice is the sum of two hundred and ninety-two dollars, principal and interest; and the further sum of thirty dollars as an attorney fee, stipulated for in said mortgage; and no suit or proceedings at law or in equity having been instituted to recover the sum secured by said mortgage or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative. Now therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described, at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door of the town hall in the village of East Jordan, Charlevoix county, Michigan, (that being the place of holding the Circuit Court for said county), on the 19th day of June, 1886, at 12 o'clock noon, which said premises are described in said mortgage as follows, viz: The southwest quarter (¼) of the southwest quarter (¼), of section thirty-two (32), in township thirty-four (34) north, of range five (5) west, being in the township of Bear Lake, Charlevoix county, Michigan.

Guizot's France

CELEBRATED HISTORY OF FRANCE from the Earliest Times to 1848. By M. GUIZOT, Prime Minister of France, continued from his notes, by his daughter, MME. GUIZOT DE WITT. Complete in 8 vols., large 12mo., bound elegantly in fine cloth, gilt tops. A new edition just issued, reduced in price to $6.00, including postage. This is much the best edition published of this magnificent work, which is known as the best popular history of France. The cost of the imported edition, with substantially the same illustrations is $36.00, while this is certainly the best in form, and the most desirable for the library. "THE MATCHLESS BRILLIANCY of Guizot's style, his graphic descriptions of men and events, his painstaking minuteness of detail, the lucidity and ease of his style and the admirable philosophic reflections, all combine to render it worthy of the description it bears as the most popular history of France. It is as fascinating as a novel, and as life-like as a theatrical representation of the events and personages it describes. How the set can be sold for that price remains, after much reflection, a mystery, for the work is not sham work, it is well done; altogether it is a marvel of cheapness. Mr. Alden has done much for the cause of good literature, but nothing better than this."—Daily Times, Buffalo, N.Y. "What VICTOR HUGO is in fiction, Cousin in philosophy, Guizot is in history. Among Frenchmen he had but few peers."—Christian Leader, Boston, Mass. "IT IS FAR THE best history of France that has been written. It is a wonder of cheapness."—Christian Advocate, Richmond, Va. "SUCH A HISTORY, by such a writer, and at such a price, should gain readers by the thousand."—Churchman, Richmond, Va. "IN STYLE of cover, firmness of binding, quality of letter-press, affluence of illustration, and lowness of price, this edition of one of the noblest historical works in existence, is one of the most remarkable publications now offered to the public."—Morning Star, Dover, N. MORTGAGE SALE.

Whereas default has been made in the payment of the money secured by a mortgage dated the 12th day of November, in the year A. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-one, executed by Mary A. Thomas to John Frenz, which mortgage was recorded in the office of the register of deeds, of the county of Charlevoix, in the state of Michigan, in liber 6 of mortgages at page 494, on the 29th day of November, in the year A. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-one, at two o'clock in the afternoon of said day. And whereas, the said mortgage has been duly assigned by the said John Frenz, to Daniel Head, by instrument of assignment bearing date the 10th day of May, in the year A. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-two, and recorded in the office of the register of deeds of said county of Charlevoix, on the 14th day of July in the year A. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-three, at two o'clock in the afternoon of said day, in liber 9 of mortgages, at page 101, and the same is now owned by the said Daniel Head. And whereas the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice, is the sum of Thirteen Hundred and seventy two dollars and seventy cents ($1,372.70) principal and interest, and a further sum of thirty dollars ($30), provided by law as an attorney fee in the foreclosure of said mortgage which is the whole amount claimed to be due and unpaid on said mortgage, and no suit or proceeding at law or in chancery having been instituted to recover the debt now remaining secured by the said mortgage, or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described at public auction to the highest bidder, at the front door of the Town Hall, in the township of South Arm, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, which is the place of holding the circuit court for said county, on Wednesday, the 19th day of May, 1886, at twelve o'clock meridian, which premises are described in the said mortgage as follows, to wit: Lot three (3), and the south one-half (½) of the south-west one-quarter (¼), of section seventeen (17), in township thirty-three (33) north, range seven (7) west, in the county of Charlevoix and state of Michigan, and containing in all one hundred and forty-five and twenty-five one-hundredths acres of land, according to the United States survey thereof, excepting, however, the north one-half (½) of the southwest one-quarter (¼) of the southwest one-quarter (¼) of said section seventeen (17), and also excepting lots number two (2), three (3), four (4), five (5), six (6), seven (7), eight (8), and fifteen (15), in Schoff-es's addition to the village of Ironton, according to the recorded plat thereof, which have been released from said mortgage by the assignee thereof.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the payment of the money secured by a certain mortgage, dated the thirtieth day of October, 1883, executed by Benjamin Walker and Maria Walker, his wife, of Charlevoix county, Michigan, to Josiah E. Harding, of Allegan county, Michigan, which said mortgage was recorded in the office of the register of deeds of Charlevoix county, in liber 9 of mortgages, on page 164, on the 21st day of October, A. D. 1883, and whereas the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice is the sum of three hundred and forty-six dollars, and no suit or proceeding having been instituted at law, or in equity, to recover the debt now remaining secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof, and whereas, in and by the conditions of said mortgage it is provided that should any default be made in the payment of the interest due thereon, or any part thereof, on any day whereon the same is made payable, and should the same remain unpaid and in arrears for the space of thirty days, the principal sum together with all arrearages of interest thereon shall at the option of the said obligee or his assigns become due and payable immediately thereafter, and whereas, default has been made in the payment of the interest due on the principal sum on the day when the same became due, and whereas said interest has remained unpaid and in arrears for the space of over thirty days; now, said Josiah E. Harding, has elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole amount of said mortgage, principal and interest, due and payable, whereby the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative. Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described, at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door of the Town Hall, in village of East Jordan, in the county of Charlevoix, Michigan, (that being the place where the Circuit Court is holden in said county), on the 27th day of April, 1886, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon of that day, which said premises are described in said mortgage as follows: The west half of the southeast quarter of section seventeen, in township thirty-four north, of range seven west, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage, made and executed by J. Milo Eaton and Ellen J. Eaton, his wife, of Charlevoix, Michigan, to Mary J. McGlashan, dated February fourth, A. D. 1882, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, for the county of Charlevoix, and State of Michigan, on the fourth day of February, A. D. 1882, in liber "4" of Mortgages, on page 477, on which mortgage there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of Two Thousand Four Hundred and Fifty-eight and 33-100 Dollars, ($2,458.33), principal and interest and no suit or proceedings at law having been instituted to recover the moneys secured by said mortgage or any part thereof: Now, therefore, by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and the statute in such case made and provided. Notice is hereby given that on Thursday the twenty-second day of April, A. D. 1886, at one o'clock in the afternoon, I shall sell at public auction to the highest bidder, at the front door of the Town Hall, in South Arm township, located in the village of South Lake, commonly called East Jordan, in said county of Charlevoix, (that being the place and building in which the Circuit Court for Charlevoix County is holden), the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the amount due on said mortgage, with interest at ten per cent, and all legal costs, including such attorney fee provided for in said mortgage as is allowed by the statute in such case made and provided, to wit: All those certain pieces or parcels of land situate in the township of Charlevoix, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, and described as follows, to wit: Commencing at the quarter post between sections twenty six (26) and thirty-five (35), in township thirty-four (34), north of range eight (8) west; thence due south twelve (12) and 25-100 chains; thence east to the shore of Pine Lake; thence north along the shore of Pine Lake, to the section line between sections twenty-six (26) and thirty-five (35); thence west along said section line to the place of beginning, containing eight and 5-8 (8⅝) acres, more or less. Also the north half of the north east quarter of the north west quarter, all of which is contained in section thirty-five (35) in township thirty-four (34) north of range eight (8) west, containing twenty-eight and ½ acres, more or less, together with the hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto belonging or in any wise appertaining.

Dated January 20th, 1886.

Card of Thanks.

We give below two letters from Geo. E. Bardeen, secretary of the Charlevoix resort association, which explain themselves; also a copy of the resolutions of thanks passed by the fire department. On behalf of the citizens of Charlevoix we desire to thank the resort association for their substantial expression of appreciation, and assure them that in the future as in the past their property will have our most watchful care and protection.

KALAMAZOO, MICH., April 10, 1886.

Chief Engineer, Charlevoix Fire Department: Charlevoix, Mich.,—Dear Sir:—At a meeting of the directors of the Charlevoix summer resort held last evening, it was voted that I express to you the votes of the association for the great services you must have rendered at the Belvedere House fire.

When I got Dr Crouter's telephonic message at 11:30, I expected all would be destroyed; and when he wired me at 4:00 p. m. I could hardly believe that so much was saved.

As a small appreciation of the services you rendered us I am instructed to present you the enclosed draft for fifty dollars, which you will please use for the benefit of the engine company as is deemed best.

May you ever be successful as at this fire; and may all your members be protected from accident.

Yours truly,
GEO. E. BARDEEN,
Sec'y Charlevoix Summer Resort.

KALAMAZOO, MICH., April 10 1886.

MR. CHAS. KELLY, Charlevoix, Mich. Dear Sir,—The directors wish me to express to you their appreciation of your fidelity to our interests during the late fire, and in view of your loss, to express a part of our sympathy by inclosing a draft of $25 to help restore what was destroyed.

Yours, etc.,
G. E. BARDEEN, Sec'y.

At a meeting of the Charlevoix Fire Company, held April 12, 1886, it was resolved that the thanks of the company be expressed to the Charlevoix Summer Resort Association for the substantial appreciation of services rendered at the late fire.

B. F. BISBEE, Sec'y.

Boat Livery.

Late last fall, Joe Beauvis bought three new lots near the Kalamazoo resort, and has built a nice boat-house thereon, besides building an addition to his boat house on the Chicago resort. During the winter, he has been engaged building new boats at his shop, back of Crouter's drug store. He now has 42 boats altogether, the greater number of which are light row-boats, 12 to 14 feet in length, but some of which are 6 ft beam, and 16 to 20 feet long, and rigged for sailing. Mr. Beauvis has a reputation in boat building not excelled by any. In point of utility, he has made a thorough study of patterns, and has attained wonderful skill in the combination of strength with lightness and that exact shape that conduces to the greatest speed with the the least amount of exertion at the oar. In point of beauty, he has reached the highest degree of perfection found in northern Michigan. One boat which he has just finished for Mr. Crumb of St. Louis, will compare with anything found on Lake George or Lake Winnipisseogee, the famous resorts of New York and New Hampshire. It has 17 different kinds of woods, artistically inlaid according to colors. It is safe to assert that the nicest boat on Round lake this summer, will be out of Joe Beauvis' shop.

From Florida.

GAINSVILLE, FLORIDA, April 3, 1886.

EDITOR JOURNAL,—As we intend to leave here for Jacksonville next week to remain until we leave for Charlevoix, you will please not send any more Journals here, but keep them until we return, which will be about May first; when I hope to see mother earth, clothed in green, instead of white, as I found it one year ago on my return; and the atmosphere warm and balmy, which by the way, we have not seen much of even here in the "Sunny South" the past winter, although the spring so far has been delightful,—about like our pleasant June weather. I have just returned from South Florida, where the cold wave did not seem to do much damage, especially to the orange trees, which are now white with bloom, and as the trees did not even shed their leaves in the vicinity of Barlow, it is causing a big boom there and in all South Florida. Strawberries were plenty there, at thirty cents per quart; but about here the large growers refuse to sell, saying they can realize more for their berries, by shipping to northern cities, where they get from $2 to $3 per quart. I also found new Irish potatoes and other vegetables quite plenty there, but about a month later than usual, and although the cold winter has been a great set back to Florida, the damage is not as great as was at first reported, for many of the trees about here and even farther north that were supposed to be killed, are coming out quite green, and but few are entirely dead. The bodies are sprouting out, and will soon form new tops, bearing as many oranges as ever. Still I consider this part of Florida better adapted to truck farming than orange growing; but were you here to see the beautiful roses and the great variety of flowers now in bloom, both wild and cultivated, you could easily imagine, why the state is named "Land of Flowers."

Yours Respectfully.
L. D. BARTHOLOMEW.

The Historical Society.

Mr. and Mrs. Byron See, entertained the society on Friday last, with President Green in the chair. The program of the evening was as follows:

Violin and Piano duet—Mr. Fred and Miss Alice Cochran.

Selection from Alice Carey—"An Order for a Picture," Mrs. E. M. Clark.

Vocal Duet—"I would that my love," Mrs. R. W. Kane, and W. A. Smith.

Intermission.

Solo and quartet—Mrs. Kane, and Miss Kanagy, Mr. Bradbeer and Dr. Carlstein.

Paper—Mrs. Browning, Clement J. Strang.

Duet—David and Goliah, Mr. Bradbeer, and Dr. Carlstein.

The society will have no meeting this week; but have arranged for a fine entertainment in the Congregational church one week from next Friday evening. It will be free and all will be invited. The program will appear in our next issue.

Metaphysical Bethesda.

Dr. Sweetland has nearly completed the changes and additions which have transformed the Swallow residence into a sanitarium. An observatory has been erected on top of the main building, an addition for bath room on the south side, and the interior of the whole has been rebuilt and finished in a handsome manner. Carpets and furniture are being put in this week, and baths will be given to a limited number every day until all arrangements are completed, when it will doubtless be run to its full capacity.

Webster's New Dictionary.

Is hardly less wonderful than the incomparable language of which it is the perfect embodiment. It is "by far the largest volume published in this country." As far as is known, it contains "very considerable more matter than any single volume beside in the world." It affords an opportunity for comprehending most thoroughly the best language on earth. Use this dictionary if you would have every mystery of words in English books unraveled. Well used in a family it will be of more advantage to the members thereof than hundreds of dollars laid up in money.—Alliance Monitor.

Officers of Ladies Aid Society.

At a recent meeting of the Ladies Aid Society, of the M. E. church, the following officers were elected:

President—Mrs. C. J. Strang.
Vice presidents—Mrs. F. J. Meech, Mrs. O. S. Washburn, and Mrs. J. T. Iddings.
Recording secretary—Mrs. O. A. Cooper.
Assistant secretary—Miss Sadie Miller.
Treasurer—Mrs. J. A. Hawkins.

NEWS CONDENSED.

Concise Record of the Week.

EASTERN.

R. A. Fullgraff, a member of the Board of Aldermen of New York, has been arrested for bribery in connection with the Broadway Railroad franchise.

A train on the Fitchburg Railroad jumped the track near West Deerfield, Mass., the cars tumbling down an embankment 200 feet in height, some of them falling into the river. Reports from the scene of the wreck state that thirteen bodies had been recovered, but it was feared others were swept down the stream. Several persons have died of their injuries, and of the fifty or more wounded, some will not survive.

WESTERN.

The grain-commission firm of Hooker, Crittenden & Co. of Duluth, Minn., which has branch houses in Milwaukee and Chicago, has been forced to suspend, the embarrassment being caused, it is understood, by the unprofitable speculation indulged in by one of the junior members.

Two Western railroads report the following earnings for the month of March: Chicago & Northwestern, $1,988,000, an increase over the same month last year of $2,400; Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha, $517,000, an increase of $57,800.

The labor troubles in the Southwest have had a depressing effect on the lumber trade, and mill-owners in Wisconsin are reported to be undecided in regard to setting the mill machinery in motion.

Flint and Daly, who engaged in a prize-fight in a room at St. Louis, were arrested under the State law making the principals and abettors guilty of felony. A prominent newspaper man held the stakes.

A fire which broke out at La Crosse, Wisconsin, in the mill of John Paul extended to the yards of C. L. Colman, and thence to the soap factory, until the entire city was threatened. Assistance was sent from St. Paul, Milwaukee, Sparta and Winona. The losses are estimated at $1,000,000.

Mrs. Grindal, residing on a farm near Eau Claire, Wisconsin, gave birth to four healthy male babes.

At Chariton, Iowa, an old man named Charles Archibald was beaten to death with a soldering-iron. Thomas Kelley and wife were arrested for the crime, on overwhelming evidence. In a tin can in Kelley's coal-shed was found $1,230, which is believed to have been the object of the murder.

After listening to a number of speeches at a meeting in front of the City Hall, a large body of East St. Louis strikers marched to the railway yards with the avowed determination of making every man on duty quit work. Most of the engineers, firemen, and freight handlers obeyed without opposition. Sheriff's deputies, with drawn revolvers, were hooted at, pushed aside, and in some cases disarmed. Finally a few determined men with leveled Winchesters overawed the strikers, and they withdrew.

The steam-yacht Welcome arrived in Chicago the other day with clearance papers direct from Mobile, the trip having been made via the Gulf of Mexico and the Mississippi and Illinois Rivers.

The Gem City Flouring Mills at Quincy, Ill., were burned, the loss reaching $200,000. Fire also swept away the iron works at Florence, Wis., entailing a loss of $50,000.

SOUTHERN.

John Baxter, District Judge at Knoxville, Tennessee, died of congestive fever at Hot Springs, Ark., in his sixty-eighth year.

Before the Grand Jury at New Orleans two women named McMahon and Smythe made a full confession of their part in a scheme of perjury designed to secure the acquittal of the assassins of Captain Murphy. On one of a number of bench warrants Dr. Emanuel E. Dreyfus was sent to the parish prison in default of $20,000 bail. Judge Thomas Ford, the chief of the band of assassins, is Commissary of the Louisiana penitentiary, and has never been compelled to wear the uniform.

The great railway strike has culminated in bloodshed at Fort Worth, Texas. A posse of deputies from the Sheriff's office were detailed to protect a train which was pulled out of the Missouri Pacific yards. They were fired upon from ambush by the strikers and one of the officers was killed, two were mortally wounded, and one of the strikers was hurt. It was rumored that the strikers threatened to burn the town. The Governor ordered out the State troops.

The merchants of Key West, Fla., have issued an appeal to the benevolent citizens of the United States for subscriptions in aid of those left destitute by the recent conflagration there.

Dr. Brinton H. Warner, of Baltimore, Md., who was bitten by a dog Christmas Day, died last week of hydrophobia.

Fire in the Central Railroad warehouse at Savannah, Ga., consumed forty-five carloads of corn and damaged 300 bales of cotton.

WASHINGTON.

A general order has been issued by the War Department announcing the following assignments:

Maj. Gen. J. M. Schofield to the Division of the Atlantic. Maj. Gen. A. H. Terry to the Division of the Missouri. Maj. Gen. Howard to the Division of the Pacific. Brig. Gen. Crook was relieved of the command of the Department of Arizona, and assigned to the Department of the Platte, formerly commanded by Gen. Howard. Brig. Gen. N. A. Miles, now in command of the Department of the Missouri, has been assigned to the Department of Arizona.

The majority of the House Committee on Elections has decided to reject the claims of Frank H. Hurd to the seat from Ohio now held by Roncis.

The House Territory Committee has decided to report adversely all bills to create the Territory of Oklahoma on the ground that the Government has no right to the land under existing treaties.

Solicitor General Goode testified before the Pan-Electric Investigating Committee at Washington, on cross-examination, that he was not aware of using any undue or unusual haste in ordering the suit against the Bell Company. If he had known of the Attorney General's connection with the Pan-Electric Company, and an application for a suit had been made, his action would have been the same as it was. When asked if it had not occurred to him that it was late in the day to charge fraud against the Bell patents, witness replied: "No; and I want to say further that I did not know that the Bell Company was hedged about with such divinity that it could not be brought into court like other companies. There is one point I desire to make clear, and that is that the Attorney General had no more to do with the institution of this suit than any member of the committee." Witness admitted that he could not recall a single case where a patent suit had been ordered without reference of the papers to the Interior Department, but the practice, he said, was merely one of courtesy. The witness said he had directed the discontinuance of the Memphis suit because he knew it would be agreeable to the President.

The House Committee on Coinage has voted to report favorably a bill for the establishment of a sub-treasury at Louisville.

The Secretary of the Interior has revoked the order of Commissioner Sparks of the General Land Office of April 3, 1885, suspending final action upon entries upon the public lands.

Gen. Joseph E. Johnston, Commissioner of Railroads, testified before the Telephone Investigating Committee that the idea of using official influence to further the interests of the company had never been thought of by his associates. He had never heard until now that Senators Garland and Harris had written professional opinions touching the validity of the patents. He saw now that the opinions of the associates as to the value of the Rogers patent were highly extravagant. Witness remembered that a suit before Judge Baxter was not regarded as particularly advisable, because he was said to be hostile and antagonistic to Senator Harris.

POLITICAL.

At a caucus of Republican Senators in Washington, a majority expressed themselves in favor of open executive sessions. At this caucus, says a Washington dispatch, "more than a dozen Senators said frankly they would vote for every nomination on its merits, regardless of whether it was made in the place of a suspended ex-soldier or not, or whether the Executive had given his reasons for making the suspension or not. Among these Senators were Morrill, Platt, Plumb, Van Wyck, Hale, Dolph, Mitchell (Oregon), and Don Cameron."

In the contested election case of Campbell vs. Weaver, of the Sixth Iowa District, the House Elections Committee at Washington has decided by a party vote in favor of Weaver, the sitting member. An extension of time has been granted to the parties to the case of Page vs. Pierce, of Rhode Island, to collect additional evidence.

The annual State election in Rhode Island resulted in the success of the Republican ticket, which is mainly made up of the present officers. An amendment to the Constitution providing for prohibition was also successful. This latter feature of the voting made the election extraordinarily exciting.

At the municipal election in Dallas, Texas, on the heaviest vote ever polled, the Knights of Labor made a clean sweep, every candidate supported by them being elected by majorities ranging from 600 to 1,000. The result was a great surprise. Dallas is the point at which the big public meetings about a month ago started in Texas to denounce the strike and uphold and indorse the attitude of the railroad companies, which was done by the Merchants' Exchange, and many other meetings in the State followed the example. At Fort Worth the candidates of the Knights of Labor were also elected to a man. Henry C. Krumpp, Republican, was elected Mayor of Kansas City, while the Democrats obtained control of all the remaining offices.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Prof. Foster, meteorologist of Iowa, makes the following predictions: Great storms will pass over the United States in rapid succession during the last ten days of April, and all shipping interests, especially in the Northern States, should prepare to protect their property from heavy rains, high winds, floods, sleet, snow, and extreme changes of the weather on land, and from dangerous gales on the lakes and Atlantic coast. The heaviest of these storms will be over the Mississippi basin, about April 25 or 26; west of that earlier, and east later.

A St. Louis dispatch of the 6th inst. says: "The following notice was read at the meetings of the several assemblies of the Knights of Labor: 'The strike is still on on the Gould southwest system, and all men looking for work will stay away until official notice from the Knights of Labor Executive Board. By order Executive Board Knights of Labor.' Secretary Turner, of the Knights' Executive Board, states the struggle with the Missouri Pacific has just begun, and will be fought to the last ditch. The interview which the National Committee was to have had yesterday with Mr. Hoxie was given up. The policy of the national as well as of the local executive committees now is to induce all of the employes they can to quit work. The only means which will be used, they say, is persuasion, and they think that they can induce enough of the present employes to quit work to seriously cripple the road and eventually bring the company to terms. A new development in the strike in East St. Louis, and one which occasioned considerable surprise and uneasiness among railway officials, occurred yesterday, when the Chicago and Alton switch engineers struck. They say they will not go back to work until the trouble between the railroads and their employes shall have been settled. Reports from Kansas City and Parsons show that the situation at these points was quiet. At Parsons the militiamen were running trains, and no interference was offered by strikers. The Knights of Labor declared, however, that none of the strikers should resume work. At Kansas City many of the striking employes were paid off and discharged." A Fort Worth dispatch reported the situation strained. Five hundred militia and 200 armed citizens were patrolling the city, which was virtually surrendered to the State authorities. Every male citizen of mature age has secured arms, and there were more than twenty organizations of citizens in process of formation. The Knights were ugly and defiant, and open expressions of communism were heard on all sides. Jay Gould said, in an interview at New York, that Mr. Hoxie would not meet the strikers, but that such of them as applied for work and were needed would be taken back. More than this, he said, the Pacific management will not do. It was clearly understood in New York that Mr. Gould proposed completely to ignore the strike.

The Governor of Texas has withdrawn from Fort Worth all the militia used in suppressing the railroad strike, except two companies of rangers. A St. Louis dispatch of the 7th inst says: "It is reported that the locomotive engineers contemplate taking a hand in the Missouri Pacific strike. The Knights' executive have issued an address to the working men of the world denunciatory of the doings of Mr. Gould. No attempts to prevent the movements of trains are reported, but the strike of the Bridge and Tunnel Company's men at St. Louis has had a bad effect upon the business of that concern. H. M. Hoxie, of the Missouri Pacific Railway, telegraphed Jay Gould that 258 trains were moving on the various lines, and that seventy-six more were ready to start.

Telegrams to Bradstreet's report a less satisfactory condition of general trade, due in large part to the continuation of strikes at various centers, as well as to the interruption of railway traffic in the Southwest. Floods in the Central, Southern and Western States have helped depress trade through the destruction of bridges and overflowing of country roads. At large Eastern cities the volume of merchandise moving is of only moderate proportions. At Western centers the demands are quite as much for near-by wants as they were a week ago. In general, it may be stated that the progress made thus far during 1886 has been disappointing. There was a gradual falling off in the number of failures.

A Paris dispatch says that M. M. Roche and Duquercy have been arrested at Decazeville and taken in fetters to prison. Socialist leaders have also been arrested in Brussels.

The Right Hon. William E. Forster, who was Chief Secretary for Ireland under the previous Gladstone Ministry, is dead. He had been ill for some time. Mr. Forster was 68 years of age. When Mr. Gladstone retired from the leadership of the opposition in 1875, Mr. Forster declined to become the leader of the Liberal party, and the Marquis of Hartington was chosen. Nov. 13, 1875, Mr. Forster was elected Lord Rector of the University of Aberdeen. He married in 1850 the eldest daughter of the late Rev. Thomas Arnold, D. D., head master of Rugby School.

LATER NEWS ITEMS.

Mr. Gladstone's long-expected plan for home rule in Ireland is at last before the world. Amid scenes of excitement, such as have been rarely witnessed, the "grand old man" laid his measure before the British House of Commons on the 8th inst. Its foundation may be described in his own words: "The mainspring of the law in England is felt to be English; in Scotland to be Scotch; but in Ireland it is not felt to be Irish." That mainspring he announces to be a Parliament in Dublin "for the conduct of business both legislative and administrative." In detail, the Parliament, should the scheme be carried, will consist of two orders sitting and voting together, except when they may disagree, each order to have a veto on the legislative action of the other for a period of three years, or until dissolution. The first order is to consist of the twenty-eight representative Peers of Ireland—all Tories, by the way—should they choose to sit in the new Irish Parliament, and seventy-five members elected by ratepayers taxed on an assessment of $125. The second order will consist of 206 members elected on the present Irish franchise. The duration of the Parliament will be five years. It will have no power to establish or endow any religious sect, to interfere with the prerogatives of the Crown in army or navy affairs, or with the foreign or colonial policy of Great Britain. Its prerogatives are to be purely local, such as the passage of laws affecting trade and navigation, weights and measures, local taxation, and postal arrangements. It does not contemplate such relations between Ireland and Great Britain as exist between one of our States and the General Government. Mr. Gladstone says: "As Ireland is to have a domestic Legislature, it will therefore be impossible for the Irish representatives to come here," meaning that there will be no Irish membership in the House of Commons, leaving Ireland in the condition Illinois would be if it had no representative in Congress, free to regulate its local affairs, but having no voice in national. Other details of the bill provide that the office of Viceroy shall continue, but be made non-political, while the control of the constabulary remains, for some time at least, as at present, which will not be very palatable to the radical Home Rulers. The fiscal unity of the empire is to be preserved, but the revenue from customs and excise duties is to be held for the discharge of Irish obligations. The general power of imposing taxes is also vested in the Legislature.

"I think the railroad managers are making a big mistake in the course they are pursuing," said Mr. Powderly, in an interview at Scranton, Pa. "Suppose Mr. Hoxie does succeed in crushing out the Knights of Labor in that section? It will avail but little. The men that are crushed under will never forget it, and would be likely to repay him in the future should the opportunity present itself. Then, the men they leave are not organized, and care nothing for the railroad company. They will be apt to fall out at any time, or finally become members of our order. I repeat, the railroad managers would have been wise to accept the terms offered two weeks ago."

The Washington Territory bill was placed before the Senate on the 8th inst., and Mr. Voorhees spoke in advocacy of his amendment, which consists of an enabling act for the admission of Montana Territory, but the amendment was voted down by a party vote—yeas 19, nays 23—the Democrats voting in the affirmative, the Republicans in the negative. The Senate passed a bill granting to the Kansas and Arkansas Railway Company right of way through Indian Territory, and the House measure to erect a building in Washington for the Congressional Library at a cost of nearly $3,000,000. By a vote of yeas 81 to nays 201 the House of Representatives defeated the amendment offered by Mr. Dibble of South Carolina, suspending the further coinage of silver under the Bland act after July 1, 1889. The House also defeated the free coinage bill by a vote of yeas 126 to nays 163. The Judiciary Committee authorized Mr. Culbertson to report his bill relating to captured and abandoned property, involving over $10,000,000, with the recommendation that it be passed.

NATIONAL LAW-MAKERS.

Brief Summary of the Proceedings of Congress.

THE Labor Committee's arbitration bill occupied the exclusive attention of the House on the 2d inst. Various amendments were offered, nearly all of which were voted down as fast as they came up. Mr. O'Neill, of Missouri, said that people were suffering for food in the West on account of the strike, while constitutional cranks stood quibbling on the floor of the House. He begged the House to crush out the obstructionists. Mr. Lawler of Illinois spoke in support of the bill. He said that its opponents had had three long months to prepare something upon the question and had not done so. But now they insulted the intelligence of the well-meaning men on the Committee on Labor who had given it their attention. Passing on to the consideration of the strike on the Missouri Pacific, he declared that without wishing to become communistic in his utterances he was free to say that if Jay Gould was hung to a lamp-post in New York it would be a blessing to the community known as the United States. [Laughter.] The action of Jay Gould might cost hundreds and thousands of lives throughout the Western States. The death of a man like this was nothing compared with what might occur if the difficulties were not settled in those States. Mr. Farquhar, of New York, supported the bill. Mr. Glover, of Missouri, declared that it was a constitutional abortion. He denounced it in the name of capital. He denounced it in the name of labor, because it offered a stone, and not bread. The first four sections of the bill were adopted, with slight amendments, and pending consideration of the fifth section the House adjourned. The Senate was not in session.

ONLY the House of Representatives was in session on the 3d inst. When the labor arbitration bill came up in committee of the whole, Mr. Warner, of Missouri offered an amendment providing that the members of the tribunal of arbitration shall receive a compensation of $10 a day for the time actually employed. It also prescribes the fees and compensation to be allowed the clerk, stenographer, constables, and witnesses, provides that the tribunal shall have the power to limit the number of witnesses in each case whose fees shall be paid by the United States, and appropriates a sufficient sum to carry the provisions of the bill into effect. Mr. Tillman of South Carolina, offered an amendment to the amendment providing that not exceeding $4,000 shall be paid out of the Treasury to defray the expenses of any single arbitration. The amendment was agreed to, and Mr. Warner's amendment, as amended, was adopted. The committee then rose and reported the bill to the House. It was immediately passed—yeas 195, nays 28. The following is the negative vote: Allen (Miss.), Barnes, Belmont, Bennett, Brockinridge (Ky.), Crisp, Croxton, Davidson (Ala.), Daniel, Foran, Forney, Glover, Hale, Henderson, Harris, Hemphill, Hill, Hutton, Irion, Jones (Ala.), Norwood, O'Ferrell, Perry, Reagan, Rogers, Sadler, Skinner, Tillman, and Tucker. On motion of Mr. Kelley, of Pennsylvania, the title of the bill was amended so as to read "To provide a method of settling controversies and differences between railroad corporations engaged in interstate and territorial transportation of property and passengers and their employes."

SENATOR LOGAN'S army bill was again discussed in the Senate on the 5th inst. Mr. Cockrell spoke in opposition to the bill. There was he said, ample power to protect our institutions without a single regular soldier. Our foreign wars had been fought by volunteers; our civil war—the greatest war in history—had been fought by volunteers. The people of this republic could successfully resist the combined nations of the earth. Mr. Logan spoke at considerable length in further explanation of the details of the bill, and in reply to criticisms made against it. He believed fully in relying on the citizens in time of trouble, and whenever a large army was wanted, but said citizens to be effective had to be organized. Mr. George reported in the Senate, unfavorably, a bill from the Committee on Territories to enable the Northwest Trading Company to purchase certain lands in Alaska, indefinite postponement was recommended. The President sent to the Senate the following nominations: Caleb W. West, of Kentucky, to be Governor of Utah; Edward R. Fogg, to be Receiver of Public Moneys at Beatrice, Neb. Consuls—Louis D. Brigaut, of Pennsylvania, at Kingston, Jamaica; L. J. Dupre, of Alabama, at San Salvador; J. Cecil Legare, of Louisiana, at Tampico; H. Sawyer, of Connecticut, at Trinidad. Postmasters—M. Weismantel, at Naperville, Ill.; Herndon C. Travers, Rockdale, Tex.; J. H. Woodman, Northville, Mich.; Clayton E. Collins, Homer, Mich.; John H. Saxton, De Witt, Iowa; Shannon Clements, Smyrna, O.; John W. Davis, New Richmond, Ohio; Eugene C. Wilson, Clay Center, Kan.; George W. Clark, Lyons, Kan.; W. H. L. Peperill, Concordia, Kan.; Henry C. Hunt, Delaware, W. T.; Samuel Chamberlain, Waupun, Wis.; Wesley E. Hughes, Fresno City, Cal.; James Tyson, Placerville, Cal.; John McCann, Monterey, Cal.; G. L. Evans, Hastings, Neb.; Frank Abt, Lead City, Dakota. The Senate confirmed William F. Tremlolin as Comptroller of the Currency. The House of Representatives passed the Mexican Pension Bill by 158 to 68, as also bills for public buildings at Duluth and San Antonio, Tex. Mr. O'Hara, the colored member from North Carolina, introduced a resolution for an investigation of the massacre of negroes at Carrollton, Miss. Among the new bills introduced in the House was one providing for the reduction of letter postage to one and a half cents per ounce. Representative Herbert introduced a resolution to appropriate $50,000, to be immediately available, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War in the purchase and distribution of subsistence stores and other necessary articles to aid in the relief of destitute persons in the overflowed districts of Alabama.

GENERAL LOGAN'S army bill was again the subject of debate on the 6th inst. General Logan and Manderson spoke in favor of and Messrs. Hale and Teller in opposition to the measure. Mr. Blair presented a memorial from the Mormon women of Utah, complaining that the Edmunds law has been so construed as to bring its penalties to bear on the innocent, and has inflicted upon the women unprecedented indignities and unnecessarily sorrow. Mr. Blair reported favorably, without amendment, from the Committee of Education and Labor the arbitration bill recently passed by the House of Representatives. The postoffice appropriation bill passed the House after amendments to increase the appropriations for postal clerks and the transportation of foreign mails had been rejected. During the debate of the measure Mr. Phelps attacked Postmaster General Vilas, calling him the Pooh-Bah of the administration, who usurped the functions of the President and of Congress to defeat the laws. Messrs. Hoar and Randall defended Mr. Vilas. Mr. Lawler, of Illinois, from the Committee on Labor, reported back to the House a resolution for a Congressional investigation of the causes underlying the differences existing between employers and employes on railroads, and it was referred to the committee of the whole.

GEN. LOGAN'S bill for an increase of the army was defeated in the Senate on the 7th inst. by a vote of 31 to 29. A bill appropriating $200,000 for a public building at San Antonio, Tex., was passed. Mr. Blair introduced a bill to provide that eight hours shall constitute a day's work for all letter-carriers, and that their salaries shall not be reduced by reason of the decrease in the hours of labor. The President sent to the Senate the following nominations: John A. McClernand, of Illinois, member of the Board of Registration and Election in the Territory of Utah; Obadiah W. Cutter, Collector of Customs for the District of Niagara, N. Y.; Edwin Warfield, Surveyor of Customs at Baltimore; Thomas G. Hayes, United States Attorney, District of Montana; George H. Barnes, United States Marshal, District of Maryland; Cyrus P. Shepard, Register of the Land Office at Worthington, Minn.; Edmund James, receiver of public moneys at Cheyenne City, Nev.; Samuel L. Lorah, receiver of public moneys at Central City, Col.; C. S. Lake, pension agent at Des Moines; Charles W. Johnston, register of the land office at Roseburg, Oregon; William T. Barney, register of the land office at Oregon City, Oregon; Charles R. Shuser, of Ohio, agent at Yakima Indian Agency, Washington Territory; James L. David, of Michigan, agent at Osage Agency, Indian Territory. The House did nothing worth recording, the business transacted being purely routine, and relating to matters of no interest.

SPRING ELECTIONS.

Result of the Contests for Municipal and Township Officers at Various Points.

Chicago and Cincinnati Go Republican—The Knights of Labor Cause Several Surprises.

Illinois.—At the municipal and town elections in Chicago 66,000 votes, out of a total registration of 81,000, were cast. Of the eighteen Aldermen elected, twelve are Republicans and six are Democrats. The new Council will stand twenty-three Republicans to thirteen Democrats. The present Council is Democratic by a small majority. The Republican town-tickets were successful in West and South Chicago, the Democrats carrying the North Division. A number of candidates for Aldermen of both parties, whose characters were not above suspicion, were elected to stay at home, through the instrumentality of the Independent voter. George B. Judd, Democrat, was elected Mayor of Peoria. William D. Mathers, Republican, was chosen Mayor of Jacksonville by 412 maj. New Council stands five Republicans and three Democrats. At Sidney the anti-license party elected every Alderman and the City Marshal. At Canton the anti-license party elected the Mayor and two Aldermen. The majority against license was 182. Mount Carroll elected a Mayor and Aldermen pledged to license. The town election of Joliet was a one-sided affair. There was no opposition to the Democratic ticket, and it swept the board from the Supervisor down. Both parties made a hot fight at Carlinville. The Democrats elected the Mayor, City Treasurer, Attorney, and one Alderman; the Republicans the City Clerk and Marshal, and three Aldermen. The next Council will be Republican by a majority of 6 to 2. The township election at Carlinville was very quiet. The majority of the candidates elected are Republicans. At Kankakee the entire Republican ticket was elected by a majority of 200. Republicans elect a Supervisor for the first time in seventeen years. The town elections in Logan County resulted in a substantial Republican victory. Ten of the eighteen members of the Board of Supervisors are Republicans. By the election in Springfield the Democrats gain one Alderman, reducing the Republican majority in the City Council to one vote. Shelbyville elected the Democratic ticket and voted in favor of license. At Decatur the Republican ticket was opposed by the Labor ticket, and the former was successful with one exception. Clinton, Clinton, Monticello, Elgin, Rock Island, Moline, Hillsboro, Mattoon, Champaign, Ilijoodis, Tobacco, and El Paso elected the Republican tickets. At Hennepin, Gilson City, Woodstock, and Pekin the Democrats carried the day. At Minonk and Cerro Gordo the honors were about equally divided. The Democrats made a clean sweep at East St. Louis, and also at Freeport. The Republicans swept the platter at Waukegan and Peotone. The election at Marion resulted in an anti-license victory.

Michigan.—Dr. Daniel Todd, the Democratic candidate, was chosen Mayor of Adrian by 326 majority. Battle Creek elected the entire Republican ticket. The Republicans and Prohibitionists polled their issues at Benton Harbor and carried the day. The Union ticket triumphed at Big Rapids. The Democrats of Hillsdale elected the Mayor and three of the five Aldermen. The Republicans secured the Justice, School Inspectors, Treasurer, and Constable. At Lansing, the State capital, the Democrats elected their entire city ticket, and every Alderman but one. There was a large Prohibition vote. The Republicans were triumphant at Kalamazoo, electing the Mayor and nearly all the Aldermen. The Democratic ticket was chosen at St. Joseph. The Prohibition vote was the largest ever cast there. Youmans, Democrat, was chosen Mayor of East Saginaw by a plurality of 550. The new Common Council stands eight Republicans, eight Democrats, and one Knight of Labor. There was a drawn battle at Grand Haven, the offices being about evenly divided between Democrats and Republicans. The People's or liquor-license ticket defeated the Law-and-Order or anti-license ticket in East Tawas. The Citizens' ticket was elected at Carlisle by a large majority. Clarence H. Bennett, Democrat, was chosen Mayor of Jackson. The Democratic succeed a majority of the City Council. Lucas elected a Democratic Mayor, Treasurer, Collector, Supervisor, and three out of four Aldermen. At Negaunee the Knights of Labor elected the Mayor and entire city ticket by big majorities. At Ishpeming also the Knights made a clean sweep, electing every man on their ticket. Baraga elected a Democratic Mayor and Recorder, the Republicans securing a majority of the council. Holland elected the Republican ticket. At Niles the honors were divided between Democrats and Republicans. At Mason there was a tie vote for Mayor. The balance of the offices were about evenly divided between the Republicans and fusionists. There were six tickets in the field at Manistee. The Democrats elected the Mayor and a majority of the other officers. The Knights of Labor secured two Supervisors and one Alderman. At Muskegon, L. C. Mason (Democrat) was elected Mayor by a majority of 300. The Democrats also get three out of four Aldermen. At Grand Rapids the Fusion ticket was elected with the exception of the Police Justiceship, which was secured by an Independent Democrat, while a Republican was elected Director of the Poor. At Saginaw City the Democrats and Republicans fused to oppose the Labor party, and the Fusion candidate was elected by a majority of 311. Democrats elect a majority of the Aldermen. At Bay City the contest resulted in the election of a Greenback Recorder, a Democratic Justice and three Supervisors and one Republican Supervisor. The new Board of Supervisors elected in Lenawee County stands thirteen Republicans, twelve Democrats, and one Prohibitionist. Last year the Republicans had the Board by a small majority. The Republicans of Coldwater elected the Mayor and all the local officers. At Saugatuck the Republican ticket was elected.

Indiana.—C. N. Towle, Republican, was elected Mayor of Hammond by 311 majority. The Democrats of La Porte elected their entire ticket. Greenfield elected the whole Democratic ticket. In Fort Wayne there was a complete turning over in municipal politics, the entire Republican ticket being successful by majorities of about 400. The city usually gives a Democratic majority of 2,000. Huntington elected the Democratic ticket. The Knights of Labor carried the day at Michigan City. The Republicans of Evansville elected their candidate for Mayor by 400 majority. At Elkhart the Democrats were successful. At Logansport the whole Republican ticket was successful. The township election at Indianapolis resulted in the choice of the entire Republican ticket by about 700 majority. The Republicans in Knox County won an unprecedented victory in the township election, electing seven out of the ten trustees by good, substantial majorities—something that has not been done in twenty-five years. The Democrats carried South Bend by 500 majority, a gain of nearly 700 over the vote of two years ago. In Tippecanoe County the Republicans elected ten out of thirteen Township Trustees.

Wisconsin.—At Madison Mr. Keyes, the Republican candidate, is elected Mayor by nearly 500 majority. The Milwaukee election resulted in the choice of Emil Walber (Republican), Mayor re-elected; George W. Forth (Democrat), Comptroller; William Mayworm (Dem.) Treasurer; Eugene S. Elliot (Rep.), City Attorney; Clerk of Municipal Court, Julius Meiswinkel (Dem.). At Fond du Lac Dr. Mayhum, who was removed from the position of Pension Examiner, through Gen. Bragg's influence, is elected Mayor by Democratic votes, and Gen. Bragg is thus rebuked. At LaCrosse Dr. Powell is re-elected Mayor, and the rest of the labor ticket is successful, a result which is reported to be very surprising to many LaCrosse people. At Antigo the no-license issue won the day, at Stoughton a license board was elected, at Sparta the Prohibition ticket was defeated, at Baraboo, Delavan, Fort Atkinson, Kenosha and Janesville the Republican tickets were successful, while at Watertown, Plymouth and Delavan the Democrats swept the field. At Eau Claire the Democrats and Knights of Labor made a clean victory. At Beloit the Republicans elected the Mayor, and the Democrats four out of five Aldermen. Beaver Dam, Oshkosh, Racine, Elkhorn and Whitewater divided the offices about equally between the two parties. Waupun elected the whole Republican ticket. At Hudson the People's ticket, backed by the Knights of Labor, was triumphant. D. F. Powell, who was supported by the Knights, was chosen Mayor of La Crosse.

Ohio.—Complete returns from the election in Cincinnati give Eshelby, Republican candidate for Comptroller, a majority of 3,786. Charles Hess, for infirmary director, has 2,075 majority, the lowest majority on the Republican ticket. Frank Tucker, Republican candidate for the Board of Public Works, has 5,782 majority. Of the eighteen Aldermen to be elected the Republicans elected seventeen, making the new Board stand 20 Republicans to 10 Democrats. Of the twenty-five Councilmen the Republicans elected twenty-one, making the new Board contain 36 Republicans to 13 Democrats and 1 Independent. The municipal election at Toledo shows Republican gains. The City Council, a tie last year, now has a Republican majority of 6 on joint ballot. Findlay elected the entire Republican ticket. Youngstown elected a Democratic Mayor. The candidate of the Republicans for Mayor of Newark was elected by 10 majority. The Knights of Labor, at Akron, caused the election of a striker named Anderson as Justice. At Columbus a very light vote was cast. The Democratic city ticket was elected by majorities ranging from 300 to 500. At Dayton, Ira Crawford, Republican, was elected Mayor; A. B. Ridgeway, Democrat, Police Commissioner; and John Tessyman, Republican, Water-works Trustee. At Sandusky the Republicans gained one member of the Water-works Board and one member of the School Board. The Democrats elect the balance of the ticket and control the Council. The Democratic majorities range from 200 to 580. In Cincinnati the city election passed off quietly, save for a shooting affray in Precinct A of the Fourth Ward, in which two men were shot, but neither seriously. There were very few attempts at illegal voting. Edwin E. Shelby, Republican, was elected Comptroller by 5,000, and all the Republican ticket was elected except the members of the School Board.

Minnesota.—At Winona the entire Knights of Labor ticket, headed by Henry J. Willis for Mayor, and indorsed by the Republicans, was elected. Winona is a strong Democratic city, but the 2,000 Knights there supported their ticket solidly. At Minneapolis Mayor Pillsbury (Republican) was defeated by Dr. A. Ames (Democrat) by 1,401 majority. The Democrats also elect the Comptroller and gain two Aldermen. The license ticket swept the field by a large majority at Anoka.

Missouri.—The city election at St. Joseph was the most hotly contested and closest in years. Thomas H. Doyle, Democrat, was elected Mayor over George Engelbert, Republican and citizens' candidate, by fifty majority. The Democrats elect the City Auditor and four out of ten Councilmen. E. W. Stevens, Democrat, was elected Mayor of Sedalia over Anderson, who was supported by the Republicans and Knights of Labor.

Iowa.—At Keokuk the entire Republican ticket was elected. James C. Davis' majority for Mayor is 557. The Republicans carried four out of six Aldermen and gain control of all departments of the city government. At Dubuque the whole Democratic ticket was chosen.

Texas.—At the election in Fort Worth every Alderman elected is a Knight of Labor, while the Mayor-elect is a sympathizer. Daniel C. Smith, Democrat, was elected Mayor of Houston.

Nebraska.—At Omaha a very light vote was polled. The Republicans elected four out of six Councilmen and the entire School Board. The next Council will stand seven Republicans and five Democrats.

Dakota.—At the city election in Mandan the entire Republican ticket was chosen, except Comptroller.

Montana.—The city election at Helena was carried by the Republicans by 200 majority.

KNIGHTS OF LABOR.

An Appeal to Laboring Men—Jay Gould Denounced in Strong Language.

The Joint Executive Board of District Assemblies 101, 93, and 17 of the Knights of Labor have issued at St. Louis an earnest appeal to their brother-laborers for support in their contest with Jay Gould. The text of the address is as follows:

To the Workingmen of the World:

Friends and brothers, hear us, for we plead for our rights! Men of equity, look upon us, for we struggle against giants of wrong! Mad with the frenzy of pride and self-adulation, begotten as it is of the success of outrage and infamy, there stands before us a giant of aggregated and incorporated wealth, every dollar of which is built upon blood, intimidation, and outrage. That giant of corporate wealth has centralized its power in and is impersonated by the eager fiend who grants as he grinds the life out of his fellowmen, and grimaces and chuckles as they writhe upon his instruments of torture. Oh, ye workingmen of America, who love your liberty and your native land; ye great creators of wealth, who stand as the foundation of all national good, look upon your brothers to-day.

Gould, the giant fiend, Gould, the money monarch is dancing, as he chains, over the face of our order—over the ruin of our homes and the blight of our lives. Before him the world has smiled in beauty, but his wake is a graveyard of hopes, a cyclone's path of devastation and death. Our strong arms have grown weary in building the tower of strength, and yet he bids us build on or die. Our young lives have grown gray too soon beneath the strain of unrequited, constant toil. Our loved ones at home are hollow-cheeked and pale with long and weary waiting for better days to come. Nay, more than this, the graveyards are hiding his victims from our longing eyes.

Brother workmen, this monster fiend has compelled some of us to toil in cold and rain for five and fifty cents a day. Others have been compelled to yield their time to him for seventeen and thirty-six weary hours for the pittance of nine hours' pay. Others who have dared to assert their manhood and rebel against his tyranny are black-listed and boycotted all over the land. He has made solemn compacts with the highest authority in our order, and then has basely refused to fulfill his pledge.

He lives under and enjoys all the benefits of our republican form of government, and yet advocates and perpetuates the most debasing form of white slavery. He robs the rich and poor, the high and low, with ruthless hand, and then appeals to corrupt and purchased courts to help him take our little homes away. He breaks our limbs and ruins our bodies and then demands that we shall release him from every claim for damages or be black-listed forever. He goes to our grocers and persuades them not to give us credit, because we refuse to be ground in his human mill. He turns upon us a horde of lawless thugs, who shoot among our wives and children with deadly intent, and then he howls for Government help when he gets his pay in like coin.

Fellow workmen, Gould must be overthrown. His giant power must be broken, or you and I must be slaves forever. The Knights of Labor alone have dared to be a David to this Goliath. The battle is not for to-day; the battle is not for to-morrow—but for the trooping generations in the coming ages of the world, for our children, and our children's children. 'Tis the great question of the age. 'Shall we, in the coming ages, be a nation, of freemen or a nation of slaves? The question must be decided now. The chains are already forged that are to bind us. Shall we wait until they are riveted upon our limbs? Nay, God forbid. Workmen of the world, marshal yourselves upon the battlefield! Workmen of every trade and clime, on to the fray! Gould and his monopolies must go down, or your children must be slaves. Think of the little olive plants around your hearthstones that will be blighted by his curse. Think of the little home he is seeking to rob you of. Think of the wife from whose eyes he has wrung floods o' tears, and from whose heart he has tortured drops of blood. Who can look calmly upon his perfidy, his outrage, and his crime? For he has sought to incite felony among our rank and file; he has bought the perfidy of vile men to entrap the unwary that he might stain our fair name and gloat over our misfortunes. Once for all, fellow-workmen, arouse. Let every hand that toils be lifted to Heaven and swear by Him that liveth forever that these outrages must cease. Let every heart and brow be turned toward our common foe, and let no man grow weary until, like Goliath, our giant is dead at our feet.

EXECUTIVE BOARDS D. A. 101, 93, 17.

MR. SYDNEY DILLON, of New York, has been elected President of the Grant Monument Association, in place of Chester A. Arthur, resigned.

OSCAR WILDE and Matthew Arnold will both visit America again at a near date. Each announces that he will not lecture.

RAILROAD HORROR.

Six Cars Roll Down an Embankment Two Hundred Feet in Height.

All but Three of One Hundred Passengers Injured or Missing.

[Greenfield Mass.] dispatch.]

A terrible disaster occurred on the Fitchburg Railroad midway between Bardwell's Ferry and West Deerfield station, the eastbound passenger train going over an embankment 200 feet high. Ten bodies have already been taken out of the ruins, and it is not known how many others were killed.

The train was the eastern express, and consisted of a baggage car, a smoker, a sleeping car, mail car, and two ordinary passenger cars. It was in charge of Conductor Foster, with Herbert Litthejohn as engineer. The point where the accident occurred is the most dangerous on the road, as the track runs on the edge of an embankment 200 feet above Deerfield River. The bank is steep, and is covered with huge bowlders and masses of rock. When the train arrived at this point the track commenced to settle under it for a distance covering its entire length. The coaches broke from their trucks and went rolling over and over down the precipice. The engine broke from the tender, tearing up the track for twenty feet. Below rolled the Deerfield River, on the very edge of which the cars were thrown. As soon as they struck they caught fire from the stoves. The sleeping-car was an entire wreck. It was occupied by several passengers, not one of whom at this hour is known to have escaped injury.

As soon as the news reached Greenfield a special train was made up and sent to the scene of the disaster, having on board several physicians, section men, and a few citizens. On arriving at the wreck a horrible sight was witnessed. Darkness had settled over the spot. Far down on the river bank could be seen the smoldering embers of the ill-fated train. It was impossible to tell who was hurt and who was killed. Stout-hearted trackmen were lowered cautiously down the treacherous height, and the work of rescue began.

The Fitchburg coach was the only one that escaped the flames. Near it lay the dead body of a little girl. Merrill Seeley, of the National Express Company of Boston, was found in the wreck and taken into the relief car. He had a wound four inches long and half an inch wide over his left temple. His left thigh was broken and also his left leg at the knee, besides which he sustained internal injuries from which he will die. D. Crandall, postal clerk, was plunged into the river, and got ashore with difficulty. He was wounded about the head and his arm was fractured. Deputy Sheriff Bryant, who was in this car, rescued two children from the flames, but one was dead and the other dying. Their parents were on board, but cannot be found. Some of the injured and dead were taken to Shelburne Falls and some of the wounded to Greenfield.

C. P. Bell, of Nashua, N. H., was cut slightly on the head and leg, but not seriously hurt. He was thrown headforemost into the river, and went to the bottom, barely escaping drowning. Conductor Foster is reported safe, and but slightly injured. D. C. Wells, of Andover, had his shoulder hurt and his head cut. The car in which he was riding was broken in two, and stood on end within a few feet of the river bank. Nicholas Dorgan, of Greenfield, had his left arm and ankle broken, and was seriously injured internally. A little girl who was a passenger on the train died in his arms from injuries received. J. E. Priest, of Littleton, N. H., had his face and head cut. Engineer Lattlejohn, of North Adams, was badly scalded, and has since died. A. K. Warner, Chairman of the Greenfield Board of Selectmen, was badly hurt, but his injuries are not fatal. Great excitement prevails all along the road between here and North Adams.

Being interviewed at Shelburne Falls Conductor Foster said: "I am unable to state how many were on the train. Only three men have thus far been found who escaped injury, and they set the number of passengers all the way from twenty-five to a hundred."

The locomotive is a complete wreck, but remains on the track, while the tender is down the bank. The following persons were taken to Shelburne Falls, more or less injured: H. G. Lattlejohn, brother of the engineer, with his wife and two children, all of whom have since died; A. D. Cornell, Allen Lewis, E. B. Stowe, A. C. Harvey, of Boston, badly hurt; J. P. Fowler, A. R. Warner, of Greenfield; H. Conillard, Charlemont; E. W. Dunnells, Waltham; Miss Darby and May Gowing. A Miss Cornell is badly hurt, as is Mail Agent Putney. A. M. Waterhouse is missing. It is reported in Shelburne Falls that thirteen persons were killed outright, but this cannot be verified.

At midnight it is reported that four more dead bodies were removed from the wreck, and it is believed that others have been swept down the river.

The train at the time of the accident was running at the rate of about twenty miles an hour.

POWDERLY FOR GOVERNOR.

The Pennsylvania Democrats Tilak Seriously of Nominating Him.

[Pittsburgh special.]

Leading Democrats in this city are talking of nominating General Master Workman Powderly for Governor. They think he could carry the labor vote as well as the Democratic, which would insure his election. James H. Hopkins, who has been spoken of for the position, positively declines, and his friends say he will throw his influence in Powderly's favor. The only other prominent Democrat now mentioned for the office is ex-Senator Buckalew, but as he would be antagonized by the Barse faction his chances are slim. There is very little doubt that Mr. Powderly will be honored with the nomination, if he will consent to accept. He will be sounded on the matter in a short time.

SHOOTING TO KILL.

A Posse of Deputies Protecting a Train Fired Upon at Fort Worth, Texas.

One of the Officers Killed, Two Mortally Wounded, and a Striker Killed.

[Fort Worth (Texas) dispatch.]

The first tragedy to result from the strike on the Texas and Pacific occurred Saturday afternoon, when a group of strikers, lying in ambush a short distance south of the city, fired on a portion of the Sheriff's posse, fatally wounding Officers Townsend and Snead, and sending a bullet through the thighs of Policeman Fulford. One of the strikers, Frank Pierce, a switchman, was killed, and Tom Neece, another, was shot in the groin. Two other strikers are believed to have been wounded. Officer Townsend is dead, and Officer Snead is now lying at the point of death.

Owing to the bold stand taken by the strikers during the week it was feared that serious trouble would soon ensue, and when it was known Friday night that warrants of injunction had been served on many of the strikers, and that the company would make a desperate effort to get out trains in the morning, under the protection of the Sheriff, bloodshed was deemed inevitable. At 10 o'clock yesterday morning officers began to collect at the Union Depot and in the yards, and a few minutes later Engine 51, loaded with armed men, steamed down into the Missouri Pacific yards amid the derisive shouts of the spectators. The engine was then backed up to Hodge, from which point it was to pull a freight train into the city. At 11:35 the train came into the yards unmolested by the crowd. A woman waved a red flag as a signal for the engineer to stop, but he paid no attention to it. Proceeding on its way by the Union Depot, the train passed on south, guarded by twelve officers, armed with revolvers, under the command of Special Deputy Marshal Courtwright. At the crossing a mile and a half from town a switch was found open and the train halted. The officers approached the switch and discovered about twenty of the strikers lying in ambush, with their Winchester rifles aimed, ready to shoot. Firing was opened by both sides almost simultaneously, and after about fifty shots had been fired the officers retreated to the train and returned with their wounded comrades to the city.

The tragedy occasioned terrible excitement throughout the city, and Sheriff Maddox at once armed two companies of citizens with carbines and stationed them at the depot to be ready for future emergencies. The Mayor issued a proclamation appointing seventy-five special policemen, and telegrams were sent to Gov. Ireland urging him to hurry on a regiment of militia at once. He immediately ordered out the troops. The troops here now number 235 men. Adjt. Gen. King, Brig. Gen. A. S. Roberts, Attorney General Templeton, Inspector General P. Smyth, and Col. W. P. Gaines are on the ground. Two companies of rangers accompanying Gov. Ireland are on the way to the city from Austin.

District Judge Peckham was called into consultation with the railroad officials this morning, the result being that about 12 o'clock a freight train was sent south under guard of the Grayson Rifles and a special force of fifteen citizens. Another train was at once made up and sent north, also under guard, and at 5 o'clock a third train pulled out, going south.

The statement is made that the Knights of Labor have determined that Fort Worth shall be the point where trains shall be stopped at all hazzards and that there they will win or lose their battle. On the other hand, it is said the citizens declare that the Missouri Pacific trains shall move, even though it costs scores of lives to accomplish it. No one is allowed to stand on the streets. The officers are in citizens' dress, and nearly every man in town not known as a striker has a permit to carry concealed weapons. Attorney General Templeton, who is here with Adjutant General King, says: "Since the authority of the State has been invoked it shall be wielded, and trains must move if it takes the whole military force of the State to do it."

Mr. Hoxie and the Knights—A Cold Reception.

[St. Louis telegram.]

Secretary Turner and William H. Bailey, of the General Executive Committee of the Knights of Labor, arrived from Cincinnati, and after a long conference with the joint committee of the District Assemblies went to the office of Mr. H. M. Hoxie, Vice President of the Missouri Pacific. Their interview was of short duration, and was very unsatisfactory. They say that they were received coldly, and that Mr. Hoxie's demeanor was eminently disappointing. He told them that the company had decided to reduce its force of shopmen by 50 per cent., and that a large number of men had already been employed to fill the places of the strikers. Such of the old employes as wished to return should apply for a position, and their applications would be considered, without regard to their connection with the strike, but the company reserved the right to reject any objectionable applicant. These terms were not what the committee expected, and they accordingly withdrew. Mr. Hoxie was very cool. He did not even ask the committee to be seated.

The World of Labor.

The Eureka Iron Company, of Wyandotte, a suburb of Detroit, has recognized the right of its employes to join the Knights of Labor.

Journeymen bakers, of New York, to the number of twelve hundred, have determined to strike, on May 1, for twelve hours' work five days a week, and fourteen hours on Saturday.

E. P. Allis, of Milwaukee, informed eight hundred employes of the machine-shops bearing his name that work would be permanently stopped should an attempt be made to enforce the eight-hour rule.

The strike has been crushed at Atchison and Parsons, and the Mayor of the city offers to pay whatever damage has been inflicted upon railroad property within the town by strikers.

The street-car strike at Pittsburgh has been adjusted, except as to one line. The men are to get the same wages as heretofore, and the hour question is to be further arbitrated.

—At an inquest into the recent fire at Bronson, which destroyed the fine new brick block of stores, and resulted in the death of Mrs. Timothy Hurley and her daughter, and the serious injury of Mr. Hurley and the other children, the jury found that the fire was caused by the explosion of a metal lamp in the store, and was accidental, and not the result of any negligence.

—At the March meeting of the Board of Regents of the University the American Medical Missionary Society asked them to empower the proper officers to admit such students to the Medical College as the Society should receive, under a rule requiring them to furnish satisfactory testimonials of earnest Christian character, without charge for lecture fees. The Board decided that the request could not properly be granted. Leave of absence was granted to C. M. Gayley, Assistant Professor of Latin, to pursue studies in Germany, for one year from October 1, 1886.

—Attorney General Taggart has rendered an opinion on the law giving the bodies of paupers to the State University for dissection which will be of interest. The Medical Superintendent of the Northern Asylum asked whether the body of an inmate should be sent to Ann Arbor when the relatives of the deceased request burial at the asylum, but are unable to bear the expense. The Attorney General says: "I do not place this construction upon the statute. The former part of the section places the matter so that two requisites must exist to authorize the sending of such bodies to Ann Arbor; first, that the body is that of a person not claimed by any relative, and, second, one that may be required to be buried at public expense, or at the expense of such institution. It appears to me that the request made should be treated as sufficient 'claim' and 'request' under the statute, and that bodies under such circumstances should not be sent as subjects for dissection."

THE JOURNAL.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

EXPLANATION.

The Boyne City Statesman wastes two-thirds of a column of space in abuse of the publisher of the JOURNAL, for an unfortunate bit of mismanagement, by reason of which our papers for Boyne City, East Jordan, and South Arm were not mailed on Friday, April 2d, and were compelled to lay over until Saturday, the 3d. The whole transaction was accidental so far as we are concerned, and any statement to the contrary will be persisted in only in a spirit of malice. That portion of the Statesman's article charging as a wilful lie, the statement in the JOURNAL that the circular mentioned "bore evidence of having been printed in the Statesman office" is in itself false as well as foolish. The circular in our possession can be duplicated at the Statesman office, as we can show by a comparison of the circular with the pages of the Statesman to any person who can see the difference in the face of different kinds of type, by its impression on paper. Our statement as to the source from which the circular evidently emanated we are prepared to stand by against all opposition.

Notes and News.

The Big Rapids Herald was the greatest kicker against fusion two years ago to be found in the ranks of either party, and the stereotyped phrase "Butler and Begole! Now is the time to kick!" has made the Herald famous. In the election last week, however, the democrats and greenbackers united and swept the board clean. Bro. Nesbitt naturally feels happy over this great victory and we are also happy that he is no longer a "kicker," and is an earnest advocate of fusion in the state.—Independent.

One of the Inter Ocean headlines announcing election news was: "Sweeping republican victories in Michigan;" looking down the column for news, the dispatches gave accounts of uniform republican defeats from all quarters of the state. Even in the upper peninsula the regular republican tickets were routed in nearly every instance by Knights of Labor, or some other form of labor union tickets.

The Mancelona Herald is out in a neat new dress, smaller type than the old, adding a large percentage to the quantity of reading matter.

The Manistique Sunday Sun has been enlarged to six columns to the page and is printed in an office of its own.

The East Jordan Enterprise was in great demand on our streets last Saturday.

Coal for Next Winter.

At a meeting of six or eight gentlemen in the parlors of a New York mansion one evening recently it was decided to limit the supply of hard coal which the American people are to have during the coming year to 33,000,000 tons, and to increase the wholesale price 25 cents per ton. It is alleged that further raise in price will be gazetted further on. Twenty-five cents a ton on 33,000,000 tons would amount to $8,250,000, a snug sum, and a tax which may be increased by doubling or quadrupling at any moment that the six or eight kindly gentlemen feel so disposed.

These men are the presidents of the coal roads of Pennsylvania. They are in combination and they control the anthracite mines as arbitrarily as though they owned them. No coal can go to market unless it passes over their roads, and no owner of a mine can operate it and live unless he accedes to their terms. As at present adjusted the capacity of the anthracite mines in Pennsylvania is about 60,000,000 tons per annum. To work them to their utmost limit would give the miners who are there employed steady work, and with an abundance of coal the people would get it cheaper and consume more of it. But the profits of the ring would be relatively smaller.

The six or eight gentlemen therefore meet after dinner and limit the production. This means idleness and want for thousands of miners and their families for six months of the year that is to come, and with a limited output and a tariff which prevents importations, it means high coal to all the people—as high as the worthy six may see fit to make.

This practice is sometimes called "manufacturing a scarcity." Coal is to be scarce next winter, not because it is scarce, but because the men who who control it wish it to be. In the United States is deposited more than 70 per cent. of the coal yet found on this planet. It is naturally cheap. By just such schemes as are here outlined it has been made unnaturally high, while the men who mine it have been reduced to beggary.—Chicago Herald.

The Federal Circuit Judgeship.

The death of Judge Baxter of the sixth judicial Circuit, which is composed of the states of Michigan, Ohio, Kentucky, and Tennessee, has caused considerable speculation to be indulged in as to whom the president will appoint as his successor. It was thought at first that he would select one of the many distinguished members of the Michigan bar, as this state is really entitled to the appointment. In view of this impression which so generally prevailed, the friends of commissioner of patents Montgomery have strongly urged his pre-eminent merits and fitness for the place. It is understood that he would accept the office if it were tendered to him. A federal circuit judgeship is a most honorable position, it being for life, and carrying with it a salary of $6,000. It is well known that the president entertains a very high opinion of Mr. Montgomery, but he is loth to have him leave an office in which he has proved such an efficient and zealous public servant. However, in consideration of Mr. Montgomery's superior qualifications for a judicial position, he may be induced to send his name to the senate. In that event, we can assure him that no act of his will receive more hearty endorsement from the people of Michigan. Mr. Montgomery is one of the popular favorites in this state, and the people delight to honor him.—Lansing Journal.

Since the above was in type, Senator Jackson, of Tennessee, has been appointed to fill the vacancy, and the appointment confirmed.

Additional Local.

Death of Mrs. E. H. Green.

Never in the history of Charlevoix, has there been a death more touching in its family bereavment, and none fraught with more universal sorrow, thanthat of Mrs. E. H. Green, who quietly passed away at 9:30 yesterday morning after many months of suffering from disease of the heart, borne with remarkable grace and fortitude. The funeral will be to-morrow at the house, conducted in Rev. Mr. Idding's absence, by Rev. C.F. VanAnken.

The maiden name of Mrs. Green was Luna A. Matthews, daughter of Hon. Rufus Matthews of Washtenaw county, this state, who was for a long time county treasurer of his county, and at one time member of the legislature, when that body met in Detroit. Her childhood and youth were passed in the village of North field, where she was born. At the age of 18, her mother died and much of the responsibility of the family and the care of her father who at that time was a cripple, fell upon her. These duties, which some might have found irksome, were a source of constant pleasure to her; and served to train and develope her native graces, and fit her for the useful and influential life she has ever lived. At the age of 22, she went with her family to Ann Arbor; where she became a member of the M. E. church and together with her sister, took the leading parts in the choir. She could point to times of special nearness to the Savior; but to these who knew her best, she was a christian from the day of her birth, developing in the later years of her life, a character sublime in acts of christian benevoleuce. She was always very quiet, unassuming, and unselfish in the highest degree. It was here in Ann Arbor that she met Mr. Green, he being a student of law, in the university. They were married, in September 1868 shortly after he took his degree; and came directly to Charlevoix, whither he had already provided the material nucleus of the pleasant home they have occupied for these 18 years, and from which has gone forth so many happy influences for the good of our village.

Only those who have passed through a similar bereavement, can appreciate the sorrow of the husband and the five children, the youngest of whom has just passed babyhood.

But the loss and sorrow is a public one as well; and there is scarce a member of the church of her choice, in which she has been a most active worker during her whole residence here, (at one time being almost soul and body of its choir), or of the whole christian community, that would be missed as much as she.

"Come then, pure hands, and bear the head
That sleeps, or wears the mask of sleep;
And come whatever loves to weep,
And bear the ritual of the dead."

Cure for Piles.

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he has some affection of the kidneys or neighboring organs. At times, symptoms of indigestion are present, flatulency, uneasiness of the stomach, &c. Moisture, like perspiration, producing a very disagreeable itching, after getting warm, is a common attendant. Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Bosanko's Pile Remedy, which acts directly upon the parts affected, absorbing the Tumors, allaying the intense itching, and effecting a permanent cure. Price 50 cents. Sold by Geo. W. Crouter. 1y

Miscellaneous Marine.

Capt. Louis Geboo commands the Van Raalt this season.

The fish tug Hahn, of Manistique, made her first lift Friday.

The tug Maxwell, from Chicago, arrived in Manistique April 8.

Manistique fishermen are getting about as restless as those of Charlevoix.

Tony Bassete of Cheboygan will wheel on the Van Raalte this summer.

A number of S. H. Davis & Co's. fish tugs arrived at Manistique during the past week.

A fog constantly hangs over Pine Lake, indicating the rapidity with which the ice is melting.

T. D. Smith, telegraphed to Chicago on Tuesday, that vessels can go up Pine Lake by next Monday.

Davis & Co.'s men arrived during the past week, and twice they visited their fishing grounds; but the ice prevented a lift.

The St. Ignace News put the report in print that a contract has been made with Buffalo parties for the construction of a powerful boat which is to assist the Algomah in keeping the straits open in the winter season. She is to have a wheel fore and aft, and will be built the coming summer, ready for service next winter.

A dispatch from Bay City says that vessel owners engaged in the lumber-carrying trade have agreed to not load boats until May 1, and will thus shorten the carrying season, and, it is hoped, maintain rates. Owners from Detroit, Alpena, Port Huron, and St. Clair will be asked to join the scheme.—Manistique Sun.

The Harbor Point dock is badly damaged by the ice, and the shore end of the structure resembles a camel's back. The outer crib is not damaged however, and a few days work with a pile driver will put the dock in good shape again. We understand the Harbor Point association rent the dock of Mr. Allen, of Charlevoix, and if so the loss will fall on him.—Harbor Springs Independent.

The steamer Atlantic, of the Grummond line, which was advertised last week to sail for Alpena and other Lake Huron ports, reached Saginaw Bay, and there encountered such heavy fields of ice that she was compelled to return to Sand Beach, arriving there on the 2d. Navigation is partially open on the Detroit and St. Clair rivers. Steamers between Detroit and Cleveland are running on regular time, as they are likewise doing on the upper end of Lake Michigan. The ice in the straits and St. Mary's river shows but little weakening.—Chippewa Democrat.

E. Carpenter and family arrived on Tuesday.

Effie Crouter is still in a critical condition.

The Champlain is expected from Chicago Saturday or Sunday.

One new team at Burns & Scroggie's, and more expected soon.

Roscuthal will give some lucky patron a new Singer sewing machine.

Read the notice of boiler and engine for sale, in another column.

Prof. Enos has rented the new house of L. E. Allen, and will move in soon.

The time card of Hannah, Lay, & Co.'s steamer line will be found in this paper.

It is estimated that 40,000,000 feet of logs will go down St. Mary's river this season.

The inside of Henry Cooper's furniture store, has been brightened up with paint.

Most of the business men on Bridge street, have raked the street in front of their establishments.

C. R. Bellinger puts a warrant into every watch he repairs, and makes his warrant good for one year.

Miss Gladys Jefferies took the official oath at the postoffice on Monday last, and now waits on the delivery.

Hurd & Co. have just completed an invoice and re-arranged for a new spring stock, which, they inform us, will be a full line in all respects.

Nicholls' started his mill Tuesday. After getting a small stock of hemlock, he will cut the hardwood first.

Mrs. Robert McNeil, of Charlevoix, is in town visiting her mother Mrs. Louis Petoskey.—Petoskey Democrat.

Geo. Wrisley has traded his house and lot on the south terrace for S. B. Thatcher's farm in Springvale township.

Smith & Cooper now employ a first-class dressmaker, and their establishment is now complete in this line, as in the millinery trade.

Capt. Geo. Madison has traded his farm for the house and lot on Clinton street formerly owned by J. A. Gellick, and is preparing to move in.

The Statesman, asserts that at the recent election it was voted to divide Evangeline, but we have not been informed as to the name the new township will bear.

The observatory of the Sweetland sanitarium is an excellent place for a sun bath. The thermometer reached 108° on Tuesday, when it was only 70° to 80° outside.

A. J. Mudge has had a good grocery trade this winter. He will fill up for summer in a short time, and continue to supply that part of town in his usual excellent manner.

All our people will be interested in letters published in another column, from G. E. Bardeen, secretary of the Kalamazoo Resort, both to the fire department and to Mr. Kelley.

W. B. Taylor lost a little book on ornamental gardening, while coming from the Smithson cottage, and will be obliged to whoever may find it and return to him, or leave it at the JOURNAL office.

C. S. Graves has a photographer friend in northern New York, who has sent him about five dozen fine views from the Adirondacks, and Lake George. They constitute a beautiful collection.

One of the attractions at F. W. Craine & Co.'s dry goods store this summer will be the unobstructed view of Round Lake and the resorts through the very fine telescope and a pair of opera glasses, which they have there.

A. D. Bradbeer is doing a fine thing for the Congregational Sunday school in the organization of a Sunday school orchestra. Fifteen minutes of each session will be devoted to this service of praise with the harp and psaltery of modern design.

Miss Aggie Miller begins Monday the study of the art of photography with A. D. Bradbeer. We would have selected Miss Miller as an apt scholar in any thing pertaining to art; and with Mr. Bradbeer as instructor, success is a foregone conclusion.

The genial countenance of Geo. W. Bump, the pioneer groceryman of Petoskey, appeared on our streets Thursday morning. He and his estimable wife have just returned from a protracted visit to the Pacific coast. Mr. Bump is looking well and has gained fifteen pounds since leaving Petoskey.—Democrat.

Mr. Joseph Pappin, is putting up a blacksmith shop back of Burns & Scroggie's livery stable. He has a good location, down next to the beach, and is making a good sized shop,—20x24, with a wagon shop above, which he will keep constantly occupied by a good workman. He will be ready for business in a few days.

Rev. VanAuken gave a splendid sermon to the fishermen last Sunday evening. The house was crowded, and besides the words of hearty appreciation which we have heard from the sailors during the week, we can but think that when the waves run high, some of the truths they then heard will return to them for their good.

"The mills of the gods grind slowly, but grind exceeding small." The JOURNAL's account of the murder of Peter Higgins was noticed in the New York World; whereupon a subscriber wrote the JOURNAL a letter of inquiry concerning Mr. Higgins. We have investigated the matter and now have conclusive evidence that some 15 years ago he lived in Cooperville, Clinton Co., New York, with a true and faithful wife whom he shortly afterwards murdered in order to marry a more fascinating French-Canadian girl, the same who assisted in the horrible Autrim Co. tragedy of last winter. The whereabouts of the runaway pair was unknown until the item above referred to was read in the World. Justice was slow in coming, but came at last.

The Boys' Band are making arrangements to give open air concerts once a week or oftener, as soon as the weather softens so that our people can get out to enjoy them. When they get well started in this extra work, they would make a fine appearance on our streets arrayed in bright new uniforms, and our citizens can show their appreciation of the music in no better way than in helping the boys to get their uniforms.

The term of school taught by Miss Gladys Jefferies, in what is known as the Hopyard district closed on Friday, April 9th, with an exhibtion, in which nearly all the scholars took part, which elicited great praise from a crowded house of spectators The tableaux were especially impressive and meritorious. The following pupils were neither absent nor tardy for the term. Johnnie Struthers, Charlie Struthers, Lennie Cooper, Nora Cooper. Lucy Struthers, was neither absent nor tardy for the last month of the term.

The Gough memorial service, held by the ladies of the W. C. T. U. in the M. E. church on Sunday afternoon, was very instructive, and cannot fail to command reverence and respect for the man who learned by so hard an experience how to say "No," for the honor of his God, and for his own good; and who in gratitude for his own rescue, gave himself so untiringly to the resene of humanity from the greatest curse of any and all lands. Rev. Clark's remarks were right to the point, and heartily appreciated by all. We may not all be Goughs, but we may be Strattons.

Boats and Boatmen of Charlevoix.

During the winter, Washburn & Ackert have been furnished with considerable repairing upon the engines of various tugs that have wintered in Charlevoix, and this spring, as soon as the snow began to subside and the atmosphere warmed up sufficient for out-door labor, the sound of the carpenter's hammer has been heard on all sides of Round lake, getting the various crafts ready for business.

The Gazelle is ready for the season's passenger traffic between Charlevoix and East Jordan. She will leave here at 7 and 2, returning at 11:30 and 6. She will be managed by Capt. Mason.

The Clara Belle is taking a new timber head and new paint, and is re-calked, and ready for the passenger trade between here and Boyne City. Her time is the same as the Gazelle.

Besides the passenger boats of Charlevoix, Capt. Vanderhoef, of Grand Haven, will run the Friant between Harbor Springs and East Jordan on her last year's time. Report comes that she is ready and waiting for the ice to move. The captain has also purchased another boat of about the capacity of the Friant, which will run on the same line, only in the opposite direction. Hannah, Lay, & Co.'s steamers, City of Grand Rapids, and T. S. Faxton, will each make three trips a week between Traverse City and Cheboygan. The former, under Capt. Wilber, will be in Charlevoix on her north bound trip, Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, at 11:30 a. m., returning Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday at 4:30. The latter, under Capt. Aldrich, will make her north trips Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday, being in Charlevoix at 12 m., and returning Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, at 4 p. m.

The schooner Mockingbird, has had more repairs than any other craft here. Every timber of plank weakened by wear or exposure has been replaced by new, and she is recalked, and takes a new coat of paint. Being the property of Upright & Emrey, her first business will be to relieve their dock of the immense pile of ties and posts they bought this winter. She will have an efficient crew and Capt. Madison at the head.

The schooner Hercules was bought last week of Amos Fox by Capt. Dan Way, who will do a general freighting business with her this summer. She required very little repairing.

The schooner Lottie Mason, now owned by Morehouse & Sutton (Mr. Morehouse having purchased Dan Way's interest) required few repairs, and is partly loaded with wood. She will do a general freighting business with Capt. Morehouse at her head.

The schooner Clara is taking quite an overhauling under the supervision of her owner, Capt. Hoag, who will make his first trip to Milwaukee with potatoes, as soon as the ice is out of Pine Lake.

The schooner F. M. Smith takes a few repairs in her timbers, and a new coat of paint. She will run between here and Milwaukee, Capt. Tullock in command.

The schooner Fleetwing has had her quarter deck cut down, and a few other changes and repairs, besides a coat of paint. Capt. Wilson, an "old salt," who has navigated the Atlantic and Indian oceans, but who for the past decade has run on these inland seas, will command her. She is not yet chartered for her first voyage, but will do a general freighting business.

The little schooner Velocipede is also owned by Capt. Wilson. She will do a coast freighting business, and is only waiting for the ice to clear away.

The schooner Union owned by Capt. Frederick Voight, has lain here all winter and is taking some repairs here; but as soon as navigation opens will return to the wood and lumbering trade on the Georgian Bay.

The schooner Sea Gem, owned by T. D. Smith, will be captained by Oscar Smith, and will trade in ties, posts, and wood. With new paint and other repairs she will go out in first class order.

The tug Col. L. S. Payne is taking a new fenderrail, and paint, and with the Frankfort tugs, will go into a general towing service. Eli Toulonse, captain, and Tom Nowland, engineer.

The tug Martin will do a general towing business, with genial Capt. Stephens at the head. She has had a complete overhauling, and begins the season in splendid shape.

The J. L. Higgie, owned by Capt. Roberts, who arrived last Friday, and has this week been looking to the necessities of his boat, will keep the Pine Lake Lumber Co.'s mill supplied with logs and the balance of the time do a general towing business.

The tug Minnie Warren is taking a new fender-rail, deck beams, and new deck forward. With Capt. Dan McNeil in command, she will do a general towing service.

The tug Wayne Isbell looks as bright as new with her new paint. She keeps up steam constantly, and made several unsuccessful attempts to break through the ice. She belongs to Mr. Isbell, of Detroit, who does an extensive fishing business near the Beavers. She is mastered by Chas. Purdy.

The Geo. F. Fisher is another of Mr. Isbell's tugs that laid up in Charlevoix. She is in charge of Capt. Joe Ferguson.

The tug Anspach was one of the first to be ready for business this spring. She too has had a hand in ice-breaking, but to no avail. Capt. Geiken, her owner, will follow fishing the same as last year. He has 45 cords of ice put up, and will run 600 pounds of twine in 400 nets, employing six hands.

But the fishing business is not entirely, nor even mostly carried on by tugs. Pat O'Neil with a little skiff has made three lifts already, getting a fine lot each time. He runs 600 pounds of twine in 300 nets. When the ice is gone he will make trips with a sail boat.

John O'Neil is operating on about the same scale as his brother Pat.

Bedford and Swailes run 200 nets and every convenience for a good business in fresh fish.

Cross & Son do a fair business in herring and other small fish.

Besides these crafts and crews so directly connected with Charlevoix, it is impossible to give any definite account of the numerous vessels from other ports which will take part in our trade and travel.

Twenty-five thousand dollars per annum is a moderate estimate for the amount brought into our vicinity from fisheries alone.

OUR SPECIAL PRICES STILL CONTINUE.

We must have the room for Spring Goods. Now is the time to buy DRESS GOODS, Cloths, Flannels, Domestics, etc., VERY CHEAP.

CROCKERY, GLASSWARE, Lamps, Stone and Rockingham Ware, at Great Reductions.

Our stock of GROCERIES, Flour, Feed, Meal, Pork, Lard, etc., is Complete, and we always name the Lowest Prices.

The only full stock in town of LIME, CEMENT, STUCCO, and PLASTERING HAIR.

☞ Drawing will take place at our Store July 15, 1886. Charlevoix, Mich.

THE SONG OF DON MERAOGO.

BY ELSIE MORTON.

Should you ask me whence this story,
Whence this legend or tradition,
I should answer, I should tell you:—
"From the far, far Western country,
Near the wide, wide Western ocean,
From the mountains, moors, and fenlands
Of the peaceful, calm Pacific."
In the land of fruit and blossom,
In the land of wine and plenty,
In the land of milk and honey,
Dwelt an ancient, high-born noble—
Lived the Spaniard, Don Merago,
In the land of gold and wonder,
In the Alta California.
With him dwelt his dark-eyed daughter,
Wayward was this Guadalena,
With her moods of shade and sunshine—
Eyes that smiled and frowned alternate,
Feet as rapid as the river,
And as musical as laughter.
Now this maiden, she had lovers,
Lovers had she, proud and handsome,
Tall of frame and fair of feature.
And she gave them all a welcome,
Sweetly smiled upon them all;
But at last there came a suitor
Grand and rich, of high degree;
He came to see the lovely maiden,
See her black eyes like the raven,
See her softly curling hair;
Came to hear the low-toned music
Of her light guitar.
Oft he came and long he tarried,
Wooing her with all his might,
In the morning, at the noontide,
In the evening, and at night.
But the father, Don Merago,
Looked upon him with a frown,
Frowning did he look upon him,
Looked upon him hard and long.
Then he talked in harsh Castilian,
And he vowed an awful vow,
Talked of war, and "Guerra!" shouted,
Shouted "Guerra al cuchillo!"
He would fight with him a duel
With his keen Toledo blade;
Long and deadly should they combat,
Like the cavaliers of Spain.
Then a challenge he did send him,
Challenged him to fight at noon.
Him to fight a duel challenged,
At the next new moon.
On the margin of the ocean—
On the long and sandy shore—
There they met for mortal combat,
Until one life should be o'er.
Don Merago drew his sabor,
Drew his highly tempered steel;
Classic poses took upon him,
And then made his victim reel.
Senor Castro! Senor Castro!
You have run your mortal race;
Never more will Guadalena
Gaze upon your still cold face!
Backward to the old San Carmel,
To the mission of the Futhers.
Went a broken-hearted woman,
Went the soft-voiced señorita.
In the Carmelitish convent
Dwelt she there a sad-eyed nun;
Coarse her garb and hard her pillow,
Never looked she on the sun.
In the cloister, dark and dreary,
Prayed she there without repose;
Eve till dawn, from dawn till evening,
Worked she there till life's sad close.

TWENTY YEARS AFTER.

BY THOMAS COLQUITT.

Louis Calvert was fifty years old—gray and aged beyond his years—the night he sat alone by the bedside of his dead wife. The dark, gray shadow of long repressed sorrow which rested upon his face was also set in the face of the dead woman.

For twenty years he had carried a dead heart within his breast—a heart dead to every sentiment of love, hope or aspiration; dead to all feeling but a terrible sense of having loved and lost. A deadly, unavailing regret. The wife, upon whose pale face—still beautiful even in death, though wearing upon it that indefinable impress of silent woe—he often looks, had, on their wedding day, unconsciously dealt the blow which struck all hope and light and joy from his life forever.

But she never knew it.

She never knew what it had been that so suddenly changed the eager, hopeful, demonstrative lover of the morning into the cold, grave husband of the evening. A cloud had suddenly passed over the sun, and the eclipse was to darken all their lives. For a long time the young wife hoped he would, after a while, become his old cheerful, affectionate self again, but it was not to be so—never again. It was evident that he often attempted to shake off the heavy fetters of despair, but always vainly. At these times the efforts of his beautiful and affectionate wife made to cheer him and make him forget his sorrow only seemed in some vague way, she could not understand how, to pain him.

He was a good husband—always kind, affectionate, and faithful, but in every look, or word, or gesture the loving wife instinctively felt a reproach, a repulse. In his saddened voice, in his saddened eyes, in his calm, cold devotion she always detected the mournful refrain of something lost. "A glory and a gladness had passed from the earth." It saddened her early married life; and as she grew older the shadow Fate had thrown across his life fell more darkly still upon hers, until the bright, beautiful girl whom he had married twenty years ago had long been a listless, silent companion to the silent, hopeless man whose life she had so innocently and unknowingly blighted.

To-night, while sitting beside the bed on which she lies with closed eyes and death-cold lips, he has finished reading her letter which caused all their woes. As he reads he gasps, grows deadly pale and trembles violently.—Then, rising, crosses softly to her side and kisses her lips, her cheeks, her eyes; caresses the cold, senseless form far more tenderly than he had ever done the living, miserable woman all the many years of their married life; utters lovingly to the ears forever deaf words of endearment they so long hungered to hear, and which but a few short hours ago would have made the poor, broken-hearted woman supremely happy, even in death.

On their wedding morning, twenty years ago, he had carelessly read the first lines of that letter down to where the sheet was folded, as it lay on the table before him, and had turned away dizzy and heart-sick, believing himself an unloved husband. He could only fear that she had been persuaded by others to wed him while she loved another, or that she was a fair, false-hearted woman who married him for his wealth. So indelibly was this terrible fear stamped upon his heart and brain at that unhappy moment that all these years of love and affection, of tender, wifely devotion, had been unable to erase or lighten it. A woman who could practice such deception could dissemble a lifetime if necessary to conceal her duplicity. So he had reasoned.

Many times the letter had fallen beneath his eyes, among other papers, but he had turned from it with pain and disgust. It was the serpent that had stung him, and he was too proud and honorable to caress the witness of his betrayal. It was a letter written by his betrothed, only a few days before they were married, to an elder sister. In her haste she had blotted and spoiled it and laid it aside, never dreaming that the silly, girlish, blotted letter would blot and darken their lives forever.

To-night he has unfolded the faded, blotted sheet, and read the lines below the fold.

"Oh, my God! my God!" he cries in piteous, heart-broken tones, "if I had only read it all!"

It was too late. Far behind him in the misty haze of memory lay the years his lusty, impulsive pride had made miserable. Before him lay the true, devoted, loving wife his coldness had slain.

As he holds the old, blotted, time-worn letter between his trembling hands, the long, dreary years roll back, and she is again the perfect bride full of youth and hope, who gave her fair self to him. The time which has seemed an eternity in passing, so heavily freighted was it with bitter, hopeless sorrow, evanishes in a moment, and he sees her again, a radiant vision of girlish loveliness, as he tells his story of love and listens to her tender replies. Again he raises her blushing face and kisses her perfect lips; and again he crosses to the bedside and kisses the cold lips which wear in death the drawn expression of mute, hopeless misery.

This letter conjures up strange memories to the lonely man sitting there in that dim light beside the shrouded figure. It is the magic wand which brings the past years with their dead before his view.

He beholds himself again, a young graduate of a celebrated law college, eager to enter upon his career—which, with the confidence of youth and inexperience, he means shall be one continued success; a steady, unbroken progress onward and upward. And it was even so for years. Success, wealth, and honors came rapidly, but only to fan the flame of his unbounded ambition.

Then he met Alice. Ah, how well he remembers that long-gone afternoon! It was a balmy spring, and the drowsy little village seemed half asleep. He was returning from the postoffice and met her on the street. Their eyes met but for an instant and he passed on, only to turn and gaze after her thoughtfully. That chance meeting changed all his after life. The dusty village street, the narrow crossing, the tall sycamore on one side, and the spreading mulberry on the other, beneath whose shades they met—he sees them all. And again he sees Alice's dark eyes and sweet face which seemed that day to possess a "subtle spell of power, that ever to his life has clung," and still rests in the closed eyes of the shrouded figure before him. Again he meets her and feels the wild, strange throbbing of his heart as her dark eyes rest upon him. Again he sees the blooming fruit trees on the left in the lawyer's orchard, and hears on his right the stillicidic hum of bees in the doctor's flower-garden; sees again the long, narrow street bordered with shade trees which before him stretch on past the hotel and red-brick court house; behind him, down to the railway station on the river bank. Then memory reviews everything until his happy wedding morn. He, with his old habit, involuntarily shudders as he recalls it to mind, but looking again at the letter he says, "No, no; I was in the wrong all the time. God bless her, and pity me!"

After their first meeting he returned to his office apparently a different man. A new power had entered his life. To ambition—to the simple desire for power for its own sake—was now joined love. He would, he thought with a lover's extravagance, be great and honorable that he might be the more worthy of Alice. He would win honors to share them with her. It was the grand passion-dream of a man's first love.

He came to know her, to worship her. Calm, grave, self-possessed, and successful in all contests with men, he was a humble, awkward bungler in his love affairs. Certainly, with Alice he always appeared at his worst. It was the remembrance of this that caused him to so readily accept the false meaning of the first few lines of that foolish and really harmless note. It was this self-distrust that blighted her life and his own.

A large group picture, in which both he and she appear, hangs against the wall. It represents the Sunday-school class which he joined, that he might be near her each Sabbath. With the natural timidity of lovers, they are far apart in the picture, but he has had the artist to copy and enlarge their two faces in a single picture, which also hangs before him. All these years the happy love-light in those trusting, hopeful faces has been a reproach to him; now it is a consolation.

He walks rapidly to and fro across the narrow room, restless beneath his load of seemingly unendurable sorrow and regret. At each turn he pauses opposite the door to gaze with a curious expression upon a happy throng in the room beyond, who, in his presence, wear sad faces, and speak in subdued tones, but are now apparently having an extremely pleasant time with wine, cards, gossip, and love-making. He stands again before the pictures for a long, long while, then returns to the bedside, and stands with bowed head and clasped hands gazing upon the dead. Seating himself at the lamp, he again reads the letter slowly and carefully. It was short, and ran thus:

"MY DEAR SISTER: I am very sorry you are opposed to my marriage with Mr. Calvert. I know, as you say, that he is several years older than I am, and that our acquaintance has been very short—but you do not understand me. I do not love Mr. Calvert——"

At this point the letter had been folded, and he, on that long ago morn, had read only so far. Now he unfolded the sheet and read on:

"I do not love Mr. Calvert simply for his wealth and position, but for himself alone, and because I know he loves me and will make me happy. I love him dearly, and will be happy to become his wife," etc., etc.

It was a most affectionate letter, and the strong man's heart broke as he thought how he had wronged and slain her with his coldness and cruelty. When the "mourners" in the next room, after a night's dissipation, came into the chamber of death the next morning, calm and still beside the death-bed, his head resting on his wife's pillow, his face close to hers and her hand clasped in his, sat Louis Calvert—dead.—Chicago Ledger.

IT has been lately asserted in scientific circles that the idea that mammals had passed through a period of aquatic growth, as shown by the existence of the whale, should be exactly reversed. That is, the anatomy of the whale has been found to show that at one time it was a four-footed beast. It retains evidence of having had at one time a hairy covering, while it also retains sets of rudimentary teeth characteristic of a land animal rather than a marine one. These teeth vanish at an early period of the whale's life, often even before it is born.

REMINISCENCES OF PUBLIC MEN.

BY BEN: PERLEY POORE.

The nomination of Andrew Johnson as Vice President, at the National Republican Convention held at Baltimore in 1864, was the work of William H. Seward, who helped thus to secure Southern support for himself in 1868, when he expected to succeed Mr. Lincoln. The New York delegation, however, was not subservient, and at a caucus held by its members on the 6th of June there was an animated discussion, some of the delegates not wanting to throw Mr. Hamlin overboard, while others favored the nomination of Mr. Dickinson, and the friends of Seward advocated the nomination of Johnson. On the first informal ballot there were 16 votes for Dickinson, 28 for Hamlin, 6 for Tremaine and 8 for Johnson. The six votes for Mr. Tremaine were in fact votes for Mr. Dickinson, and some of the eight votes for Mr. Johnson were also votes finally thrown for Mr. Dickinson. After the informal ballot the caucus adjourned to the next day, when the contest was continued. A ballot was finally ordered, and Mr. Raymond nominated Andrew Johnson as the candidate of the delegation. When the vote came in it stood: Dickinson, 29; Johnson, 30; Hamlin, 7; and before it was announced two more votes were obtained for Johnson. Mr. Raymond obtained one of these, and Preston King the other, although Mr. King himself did not vote in caucus for Mr. Johnson. The vote as announced was 32 for Johnson, 28 for Dickinson and 6 for Hamlin. It was then, on motion of Mr. Raymond, I think, ordered that the Chairman report the vote as it stood to the convention as the vote of the State, and the caucus adjourned.

After the adjournment the tide seemed to set strongly for Mr. Dickinson, so much so that on the evening of the 7th his nomination was deemed certain. The Dickinson men were jubilant and the Johnson men despondent. Mr. Weed sought to escape defeat by suggesting other names in the place of Johnson, and spoke of Hancock, of Holt, but left that night for New York expecting that Mr. Dickinson would receive the nomination. Such was also the expectation of Senator Morgan when he went to Washington on that day.

After the departure of Mr. Weed and Senator Morgan, some of the friends of Mr. Johnson began to consider the propriety of throwing the whole vote of the State for Mr. Dickinson. The delegation became heated, and the talk between the members as they met about the hotels was far from conciliatory.

On the following morning the announcement was made that Massachusetts had determined to present General Butler as a candidate for Vice President, and some of the political men of New York at once advocated taking up Butler in place of Johnson, as a way of avoiding the defeat which seemed impending. This new phase of the contest led to a consultation between Mr. Raymond, Mr. Stranahan, and one or two others, which resulted in calling together all the friends of Mr. Johnson who could be found on a short notice, to prevent, if possible, any break in the Johnson vote. This meeting was held in Mr. Stranahan's room, was addressed by him, by Mr. Wakeman, by Mr. Robertson, and others, and resulted in the determination to hold firmly to Mr. Johnson, at least till a recess in the convention. This meeting adjourned only just in time to reach the convention at its opening on that day.

After the convention opened for that day, the influence of New York was first felt upon the question of admitting the delegates from Tennessee. Preston King moved their admission as an amendment to the report of the Committee on Credentials, and displayed great judgment in getting his proposition before the House, for, owing to objections to the competency of Mr. Dennison, of Ohio, as a presiding officer, the convention was in the greatest confusion from the beginning to the end. Mr. King's proposition, in point of fact, was once voted down in the hubbub, but no one seemed to know it, and through the courage of the mover it was again presented. The Tennessee delegation was then admitted, and the New York friends of Mr. Johnson, for the first time in two days, began to smile a little.

When the vote was taken on Vice President, New York voted as in caucus—32 for Johnson, 28 for Dickinson, 6 for Hamlin—and the vote of the convention, as it came in, stood: Johnson, 200; Dickson, 113; Hamlin, 145. But before the announcement, States began to change. Mr. Cameron went over to the New York delegation and was heard to ask Mr. Raymond "who he wanted." On his return the sixty-two votes of Pennsylvania changed solid to Johnson. The result we all know.

Gen. Grant, when he became President, had desired to have his brother-in-law, Gen. Frederick Dent, as his Private Secretary, but the prominent Republican Congressmen objected, saying: "Dent has a good heart, General, and would be faithful, but he can't keep a secret five minutes." Young Robert Douglas, a son of the "Little Giant," was then taken up, but he was not equal to the position, and the President fell back upon Capt. Horace Porter, one of his military aids. He was a graduate of West Point, the son of a Pennsylvania Governor, well educated, well informed, and noted for his reticence, which appeared to be expressed upon his face. There seemed always to be the look upon it which a secret long kept wears there at last, the look not like guilt, yet not frank, the look of avoidance, the habit of digression in talk from the large and immediate to the trivial, a coldness and distance which was no part of his warm temperament. Rawlins, and the old neighbors and servitors of Grant, began to feel the cold, clocklike consciousness of this young captain, so unsocial compared with their Western candor and public spirit, and some of the worser feelings of Rawlins' later days were associated with this still young safe deposit company who had replaced him in Grant's martial confidence. Porter had steadily grown, somewhat as Gen. Hamilton grew, upon the envious admiration of his older rivals in Washington's admiration, except that Hamilton had genius, while all that the public knew of Porter was his reticence. His associate, Capt. Babcock—they were both made generals—got into trouble through his connection with San Domingo, the New York bonded warehouse and the St. Louis whisky ring; but he had amassed a large estate before he was drowned in 1884. Gen. Porter got himself "rotated" from the White House into the Vice Presidency of the Pullman Car Company, and it is understood that he is wealthy. As an after-dinner speaker he has few equals and no superior on this continent.

A Romance of Pretty Feet.

There may be, dear Dorothy, magic in a soft, sweet voice; there may be a wondrous fascination in a sparkling eye (why do people always write it that way, as if one eye sparkled while the other did not?), but certainly a pair of small feet, properly gotten up, will, as far as men are concerned, prove most active weapons in the war called coquetry. Don't you remember the wife of a well-known statesman (I think he was a statesman, but certainly he was a lawyer), fascinating as possible, pretty, bright, coquettish to the last fine degree? Yet now when men speak of her they say: "I think she had the prettiest feet I ever saw." The smaller the feet are the greater seems their power for annihilating the average man; the more slender the ankles, the more certainly do they appear to be able to stand the strain of admiration and the less respect have their possessors for more unfortunate women. If you wish to ruin the shape of your feet, put them in those horrid low, broad shoes that will be too large for them, and in which they will wriggle around and be rubbed out of all beauty. Beautiful feet are held as an evidence of good blood all through the South, and many are the stories told where a lovely foot has betrayed the standing of its mistress.

You remember the Mortons? Well, they had a romance during the war. Young Morton was in love with his cousin, but there was some sort of Montague and Capulet business, and so they could seldom see each other. But when they did it was long enough for them to fall in love, and then one day the army chaplain married them. The gallant Romeo had no place to take his bride, so she had to go home, and, as the camp was within riding distance of her father's plantation, the Juliet used to visit her husband. Her mammy would be with her, and, indeed, was the confidante, for an old darky dearly loves such an affair and will gladly help it along. So Mistress Juliet and her nurse would start off, presumably to visit another plantation, but at dusk Romeo would be looking out for them, and they would never get further than the camp. Here there was a fine old dwelling house which had been deserted by its owners, so that it was easy for the loving visitor to be hid away. One night, however, orders were given for every man to stay in his place, and search was to be made for a spy supposed to be in hiding. At the door of Morton's room stood Romeo, with drawn sword, insisting that no one should go in there. It seemed as if trouble were about to ensue, when Morton said that if they would let him go into the room for five minutes he would take a solemn oath that no one should leave the room; indeed, they could not. The soldiers were gentlemen and believed him. He went in, and in a very few minutes the door was opened and the men filed in one by one; there on the bed, completely covered by a sheet, so that only the outlines of a form were visible, was somebody. The impulse of the first soldier was to draw back the sheet and look at the face—but Morton's hand stopped him and he said: "Gentlemen, I will prove to you conclusively that this is not a spy or a man, but you shall not see the face." Then, going to the foot of the bed, he rolled up the sheet until there was displayed, to just above the ankles, the most beautiful feet you can imagine. There was utter stillness, and then the soldiers marched out one by one, each raising his cap as he passed the bed. Now, wasn't it hard for her to keep still all that time? And wasn't it clever in Morton? Some time after their marriage was told, and the feud was healed, but Mr. Morton says that none of the babies have as pretty feet as their mother, nor will they ever find them of as much use in an emergency. —Bab, in New York Star.

RECENT observations, according to Mr. E. J. Miers, of the British Museum, show that crabs do not reach great depths in the ocean. The Challenger expedition obtained few specimens from points more than 400 fathoms below the surface, and only a single specimen was found at a depth of 1,000 fathoms.

ARE HAIR PINS INJURIOUS?

The largest percentage of neuralgic headache seems to be among ladies, and most certainly they have a cause. Some have attributed it to the hair being tightly drawn over the head and held in place by hair pins; in this way the nerves of the scalp are irritated and neuralgia caused. Relief is sometimes experienced by removing the hair pins, but it is only temporary.

J. P. Mallette, of the Mallette & Raymond Manufacturing Company, No. 329 South Canal street, Chicago, tells us follows how his wife was completely cured of neuralgia:

"Yes; she was sick off and on for a long time, but a half bottle of Athlophoros cured her so that she has not suffered any since. When it was first recommended to her she would not get it, as she was always opposed to taking any kind of patent medicine. But as the treatment she was under gave her no relief, I insisted on her trying Athlophoros. After using half a bottle the neuralgia was gone, and has not returned since. I told a gentleman at the Walnut House, Greencastle, Ind., where I was stopping, to get a bottle, and if it did not cure the intense suffering that he was enduring he could have the cost of the medicine added to my hotel bill."

"Well, did it cure him?"

"Yes; it cured him at once. I have recommended it to at least fifty different persons, and in every case that I know about it has always given the same good results."

James D. Gibbin, room 33, No. 125 Dearborn street, Chicago, Ill., is enthusiastic in his praise of the medicine that has cured him of his rheumatism after he had tried in vain many different remedies as well as physicians.

"It was inflammatory rheumatism that had a firm hold on me," he says. "Many times it laid me aside from my business, confining me to the house and many times to my bed. Medicine did me no good. It looked as if I was doomed to suffer on without any relief."

"How did you come to use Athlophoros, Mr. Gibbin?"

"It was in this way. My occupation being that of a traveling man, I had the opportunity of coming in contact with many rheumatic sufferers, and consequently was recommended to use all the leading remedies on the market, many of which I used with no benefit whatever. During my trips to Beaver Dam, Wis., I became acquainted with a lady who was a confirmed invalid from rheumatism. She could not walk at the time I first met her, but was rolled around in an invalid chair. Whenever I went there we always compared notes on the rheumatic question. One day last winter I was astonished to find her walking around and well from the rheumatism. Upon inquiry as to how she got well she said Athlophoros had done the work. Knowing what a wonderful cure this was, as her case was a very severe one, I at once commenced using the medicine myself. The relief and cure was very quick."

"How much did you take in all?"

"Four bottles."

"Have you had any return of the complaint?"

"Not at all."

A Religious Affair.

"There was a very sad case in police court this morning," said a lawyer to his wife. "A girl was arrested for stealing a fine lace veil. The woman who owned the veil came to court, and, with heartlessness, persisted in prosecuting the poor girl. The Judge, however, would not allow himself to be influenced, so he released the girl."

"She did not prove that she was innocent, did she?"

"Oh, no."

"Then why did the Judge release her?"

"Well, he said that he had no right to interfere with religious matters."

"Religious matters?"

"Yes; he said that the laws of the land grant to every woman the right to take the veil."

The woman did not reply for several minutes. Then she said: "I know a woman who married a fool. I'm the woman."—Arkansaw Traveler.

The Ice-Bag in Cholera.

Dr. Chapman, an English physician who has practiced for a number of years in Paris, but was formerly in India, where he had cholera to treat, has just published a book entitled "Cholera Curable." He is the man who some time ago recommended the use of ice-bags for sickness, and has more recently tried the same method with cholera. He used it in ten cases, with a result of ten cures. The ice-bag is a triple rubber bag, about twenty or twenty-four inches in length, and about four inches wide. Each part is filled with fine pieces of ice, and it is applied to the back along the spinal column. Its application should be constant, so the ice must be changed from time to time. The vomiting was stopped by its use almost at once, while there was a great diminution in the cramp. The patients warmed up, the pulse came back, and all the symptoms gradually disappeared.

When Not in Positive Agony.

The rheumatic are seldom free from a certain soreness or stiffness in the joints or muscles, which serves as a constant reminder that the virus only waits an unfavorable change of weather, or the aid of a cold, to emphasize its presence with excruciating twinges. To prevent the recurrence and mitigate the pain, there is no finer or safer source of relief than Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, a medicine every way preferable to the poisons, repeated infinitesimal doses of which are taken to the prejudice of health and the jeopardy of life, and without a permanently remedial effect. Sleep, banished by rheumatic and neuralgic pain at night, is restored by this beneficent soother of the nervous system, and the slumber which it superinduces is far more refreshing and beneficial than the stupor into which the brain is thrown by a narcotic. Appetite and digestion, as well as sleep, are improved by it, and it is an admirable regulator and tonic for the bowels and kidneys. Use it for rheumatism before retiring.

The Doctor's Endorsement.

Dr. W. D. Wright, Cincinnati, Ohio, sends the subjoined professional endorsement: "I have prescribed DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS in a great number of cases, and always with success. One case in particular was given up by several physicians who had been called in for consultation with myself. The patient had all the symptoms of confirmed consumption: cold night sweats, hectic fever, harassing coughs, etc. He commenced immediately to get better, and was soon restored to his usual health. I also found DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS the most valuable expectorant for breaking up distressing coughs and colds."

A good audience listened to a fine discourse by Rev. C. F. VanAuken, at the church, Sunday afternoon.

The Congregational Sunday school held its second session with an increase in the attendence and a grand corps of teachers.

We notice an advertisment for bids on the new Congregational church. The comittee in charge seem to push the work and hope to see the building completed by July.

The G. A. R. building is nearing completion, and promises to be very inviting, both inside and out. We wish them success in their efforts,

The falling of a kiln caused quite a flurry Sunday morning, as it was full of wood and had been fired a day or more. For a time it seemed as if the wood was likely to burn and the result would have been quite disastrous, as the tram and several thousand cords of wood were near. The company feel under obligations to the men who so faithfully worked. Had they been owners of the property, they could not have done more to save it.

The wood chopping goes on briskly, hundreds of cords being contracted for every day.

An infant child, of John Barr was buried April 10th.

E. L. Burdick lately killed a wild cat, which has been frequenting the wood yard. The cat showed fight but Burdick heroically hit it with a stick of cord wood. As a killer of wild cats, he has few equals.

Hello East Jordan! where's that oyster supper? Arn't yon going to evidence your gratitude for that overwhelming majority? If we can't have a bridge, we ought to have an oyster supper at your expense, at the Lake View House, Ironton. Please say when?

Burgess.

John Simonton is getting things in readiness to raise his house, this week.

Chas. Howe's little boy is quite sick.

The sleighing is all gone, and the ground is rapidly settling and farmers, can soon commence their plowing.

The township board met last Friday, and appointed J. A. Bacot as health officer, and Oscar Tillotson and Isaac Webster, as board of review.

The season thus far has been favorable for making maple sugar.

The exhibition at the Hopyard school house, last Friday evening, was pronounced by those who were present, to be a decided success. Great praise was accorded to the teacher Miss Jefferies for the admirable way the whole performance was conducted. This is her third term in the same school.

Spring has arrived.

Preaching Sunday at two o'clock by Rev. G. W. Howe.

It is to be hoped that the school "storm" will soon be over.

Mr. David Francis and daughter Edith returned from Canada Friday, where they have been visiting friends for the past few weeks.

Ellsworth.

The men have just finished drawing logs to the mill, as the roads are quite bare in places,

Those, who are engaged in making maple sugar, are taking advantage of this pleasent weather and are very busy.

There was a good attendance at Mr. Gordan's dance last Friday night, and the revelers did ample justice to an oyster supper provided for them.

We learn that Orlando Burbank of South Arm, the young man who furnished the music for the dance last week, died suddenly Sunday night and was buried Tuesday.

RUMSELLERS.

BY C. H. DOING.

Hit them again for me, Mr. Blade,
Give it to them lustily, be not dismayed,
Good men and true men all the world o'er
See and applaud, give them some more.

Strike from the shoulder, make every blow tell;
Their armor is tissue, their weapons as well.
You fight in the cause of right against the wrong,
And victory must crown your valor e're long.

I've an unsettled score against these kind of men;
They made me an orphan before I was ten,
Sent my father a wreck to an untimely grave,
A mother beloved to a mad-house to rave.

Shrouded all my young life with the woes that are piled
On the sorrowing head of the poor drunkard's child;
Then no wonder that I rejoice at the view
Of the avenger's strong arm giving demons their due.

Let honest men shun them, as virtue shuns evil;
Let youth pass them by, as truth would the Devil.
Their doom is approaching, there's no one to save,
He alone is their friend, who is likewise their slave.

Prohibition Coming.

Prohibition is an aggressive work. We cannot profess to be interested in the destruction of the liquor traffic and stand still. Each thought and impulse is continuously onward to its final enhmination. It is only necessary that we commence to wish and desire to see this evil crushed to awaken the conviction that prohibition is possible, and a slight examination into the methods of political prohibition, and the conviction will soon become apparent that this is the remedy and the only remedy, and to the mind and heart that seeks for the best weapons and the most effective means to demolish the rum power, political prohibition will be welcomed and cherished as the best and only practical remedy, and our efforts and aspirations will not be satisfied until we attain a full development of the problem. The annihalation of the withering, blighting, blasting curse of the liquor traffic, through prohibition by the easiest, quickest and best manner possible.—Demorest's Magazine.

Six Questions.

Have yon a son?

Do you know that he will not become a drunkard if the sale of liquor is licensed?

Have you a daughter?

Are yon sure she will not become a drunkard's wife?

Do you know if you don't drink liquor will never harm you, if it is sold to other men to drink?

Are yon sure that the party with which you vote will give you the protection against the liquor traffic that you desire?

MORTGAGE SALE.

Whereas default has been made in the payment of the money secured by a mortgage dated the 12th day of November, in the year A. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-one, executed by Mary A. Thomas to John Frenz, which mortgage was recorded in the office of the register of deeds, of the county of Charlevoix, in the state of Michigan, in liber 6 of mortgages at page 494, on the 29th day of November, in the year A. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-one, at two o'clock in the afternoon of said day. And whereas, the said mortgage has been duly assigned by the said John Frenz, to Daniel Head, by instrument of assignment bearing date the 10th day of May, in the year A. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-two, an I recorded in the office of the register of deeds of said county of Charlevoix, on the 14th day of July in the year A. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-three, at two o'clock in the afternoon of said day, in liber 9 of mortgages, at page 101, and the same is now owned by the said Daniel Head. And whereas the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice, is the sum of Thirteen Hundred and seventy two dollars and seventy cents ($1,372.70), principal and interest, and a further sum of thirty dollars ($30), provided by law as an attorney fee in the foreclosure of said mortgage which is the whole amount claimed to be due and unpaid on said mortgage, and no suit or proceeding at law or in chancery having been instituted to recover the debt now remaining secured by the said mortgage, or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described at public auction to the highest bidder, at the front door of the Town Hall, in the township of South Arm, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, which is the place of holding the circuit court for said county, on Wednesday, the 10th day of May, 1886, at twelve o'clock meridian, which premises are described in the said mortgage as follows, to wit: Lot three (3), and the south one-half (S½) of the south-west one-quarter (¼) of section seventeen (17), in township thirty-three (33) north, range seven (7) west, in the county of Charlevoix and state of Michigan, and containing in all one hundred and forty-five and twenty-five one-hundredths acres of land, according to the United States survey thereof, excepting, however, the north one-half (N½) of the southwest one-quarter (¼) of the southwest one-quarter (¼) of said section seventeen (17), and also excepting lots number two (2), three (3), four (4), five (5), six (6), seven (7), eight (8), and fifteen (15), in Scholl'on's addition to the village of Ironton, according to the recorded plat thereof, which have been released from said mortgage by the assignee thereof.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the condition of a certain mortgage, made by Mary Blackbird to John A. Bacot, dated October 30, A. D. 1884, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, for the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, on the 3d day of October, A. D. 1884, in liber 8 of mortgages, on page 522, which said mortgage was on the 22d day of December, 1884, assigned by said John A. Bacot to Frederick W. Mayne, said assignment being on record in the Registers office for Charlevoix county, in liber 10 of mortgages on page 610, and on the 14th day of December 1885, was assigned by said Frederick W. Mayne to Hugh Miller, said assignment being recorded in the Registers office for Charlevoix county, in liber 13 of mortgages, on page 146, on which mortgage there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of Two hundred dollars, and sixty-five cents, as principal and interest, and no suit or proceedings at law having been instituted to recover the moneys secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof. Now, therefore, by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and the statute in such case made and provided, notice is hereby given that on Saturday, the 19th day of June A. D. 1886, at one o'clock in the afternoon, I shall sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door of the town hall in the village of East Jordan, (that being the place where the Circuit Court for Charlevoix County is holden,) the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the amount due on said mortgage, with ten per cent interest, and all legal costs, together with an attorney's fee of fifteen dollars, covenanted for therein, the premises being described in said mortgage as all that parcel of land, situate in the township of Hayes, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, and known and described as follows: The south west quarter (S¼) of the south west quarter (S¼) of section thirty-six (36) township thirty four (34) north of range seven (7) west, containing forty acres, according to the United States survey.

Harding, of Allegan county, Michigan, which said mortgage was recorded in the office of the register of deeds of Charlevoix county, in liber 9 of mortgages, on page 164, on the 31st day of October, A. D. 1885, and whereas the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice is the sum of three hundred and forty-six dollars, and no suit or proceeding having been instituted at law, or in equity, to recover the debt now remaining secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof, and whereas, in and by the conditions of said mortgage it is provided that should any default be made in the payment of the interest due thereon, or any part thereof, on any day whereon the same is made payable, and should the same remain unpaid and in arrears for the space of thirty days, the principal sum together with all arrearages of interest thereon shall at the option of the said obligee or his assigns become due and payable immediately thereafter, and whereas, default has been made in the payment of the interest due on the principal sum on the day when the same became due, and whereas said interest has remained unpaid and in arrears for the space of over thirty days; the said Josiah E. Harding, has elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole amount of said mortgage, principal and interest, due and payable, whereby the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative. Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described, at public auction, to the highes bidder, at the front door of the Town Hall, in village of East Jordan, in the county of Charlevoix, Michigan, (that being the place where the Circuit Court is holden in said county), on the 27th day of April, 1886, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon of that day, which said premises are described in said mortgage as follows: The west half of the southeast quarter of section seventeen, in township thirty-four north, of range seven west, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan.

This new invention possesses many qualities peculiarly adapted to farmers of this vicinity.

TEN REASONS:

1. It sows the roughest or smoothest soils.
2. It sows evenly all kinds of grain and seeds, large and small. Corn, wheat, oats, barley, clover, timothy, ruta baga, etc.
3. It sows any desired quantity. One-fourth pound of ruta baga seed can be spread over an acre of ground with perfect ease and accuracy.
4. It sows rapidly. With wheat it covers 48 feet to the round. Clover 42; clover and timothy mixed 36. Ten acres of clover sowed in 2½ hours.
5. It is not affected by quite a strong wind.
6. It is quickly adjusted to different quantities of grain.
7. It cannot clog.
8. It is easily operated.
9. It is cheap.
10. It is durable.

Mrs. Green's Funeral.

The funeral of Mrs. Green was so well attended that many had to remain in the yard, and even in the street. The services were brief; but Rev. VanAuken paid a glowing tribute to the deceased.

In response to a request by Mr. Green, commander of Baxter Post, G. A. R., the Post acted as escort. Comrades Atchinson, Berdan, Carpenter, Carlstein, Nettleton, and See were the bearers. Floral tributes of respect and love were offered by the school children, as well as by relatives and friends.

Resolutions of the M. E. Ladies' Society.

At a meeting of the M. E. Ladies' Society held at the residence of Mrs. M. J. Stockman April 20th, 1886, the following resolutions were adopted;

WHEREAS, One of those endearing ties formed by the association of many years of active church work, has been severed and our hearts brought to grief by the death of our sister, Mrs. Luna Green, who left the church militant and joined the church triumphant April 14 th, and recognizing the fact that her services were of great value to the church, inasmuch as her life was one of loyalty to Methodism, and true devotion to all her interests, and that her voice will no longer be heard in our councils; therefore, in token of the very great loss we have sustained in the death of our sister, and our heartfelt sympathy for the grief stricken husband and motherless children, the brothers, and sisters, be it

Resolved, That we will ever cherish the memory of our departed sister for the many noble qualities of mind and heart, and pray that her example of piety and rare generosity, fidelity to Christ, and love for the church, may tend to lead us nearer to the Master, and to a more faithful performance of duty and usefulness.

Resolved, That while we deeply sympathize with the family of the deceased, and mourn her loss, which to them is grievous to be borne, we confidently direct them in their sorrow, to Him who has promised to care for those who place their trust in Him, and who alone can heal the broken hearted.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted to the bereaved family of the deceased, and that they be inserted in the minutes of our Society and also published in the Charlevoix JOURNAL and Sentinel.

MRS. MAGGIE L. WASHBURN,
MRS. LOTTIE A. STOCKMAN,

Committee.

Resolutions of Baxter Post, G. A. R.

Resolutions of condolence passed by Baxter Post, 119, at an informal meeting after the burial of Mrs. E. H. Green, April 16, 1886:

WHEREAS, it has pleased the supreme commander of the universe to bereave our comrade and commander, E. H. Green, of his beloved and cherished companion in life, his children of a tender and loving mother, and this community of a kind neighbor and exemplary christian.

Be it therefore resolved, That we, as comrades of Baxter post, No. 119, extend our most heartfelt sympathy and condolence to our beloved commander and his children, and to the sisters and brothers in this their sad bereavement.

Be it further resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be placed in the hands of the afflicted family, and published in the papers of this village.

Metaphysical Bethesda.

Last week we noted the practical completion of the Charlevoix Sanitarium, which will hereafter be known as the Metaphysical Bethesda. Since then baths and other treatment have been given to a large number, with gratifying results. The proprietors have marvelous skill in their profession, great energy, and financial means to bring their art to the front; and while we are instictively skeptical of new theories and novel arts, we can but believe this to be one of the grandest institutions of our fast spreading village; and will bring people here from all parts of this and other lands.

The range of the institution is large, including every disease and weakness that the human flesh is heir to, from diseased scalp resulting in baldness, to an overtaxed or troubled brain, resulting in insanity. Dr. and Mrs. Sweetland have both had many years of experience in Chicago and other cities, and the conveniences of this new establishment are the result of this experience. They have all the apparatus, and every arrangement for giving every kind of bath known to medical science, including vapor, vital, Prussian, ocean-brine, magnetic, electric, and thermal, skillfully combined with massage, magnetic treatment and sun bath. The apparatus for these baths is of the most approved patterns, and the rooms are designed especially for them and have every convenience, including novel ventilators in the ceiling by which the vapor of the rooms pass out and fresh outside air takes its place without danger that the patient will take cold.

And their method of using these baths is not designed to stimulate, and prop the system up for a time simply, but rather to remove the cause of weakness, and restore the native vigor of the constitution. All blood diseases are reached through the lungs and pores of the skin by the effect this treatment has upon the circulation and oxygenation of the blood, and all nervous diseases by their direct effect upon the nerves; while consumption, and cartarrh, have special treatment with an inhaler. They have a thorough mastery of the situation in female diseases and warrant a cure in every case of cancer.

They have testmonials in the autographs of leading merchants, bankers, professional men, and mechanics, and warrent a cure in every case, no matter of how long standing.

These are their claims, made with perfect sincerity, and worthy of all confidence on the part of those afflicted; since if they should fail in any of them, their loss would be greater than that of their patrons, by a measureless degree.

A Raised Draft.

Sometime about the middle of March last, the Trader's Bank of Canada issued two drafts on New York, to a certain individual there who, according to her story, was to pay Mrs. Franey Weimer, who lives near Clarion, $1,015, as her share of an estate recently settled. The amounts of these drafts were respectively $100 and $115, but they were raised to $600 and $415, to make the amount due Mrs. Weimer. (The explanation of the man who bought the drafts has yet to be heard on this point.) The first of these was presented to Brown & Co., of this place, on March 19th, after an identification by Mr. S. B. Thatcher, of East Jordan, with the figure 1 at the corner made into a 6, and the written amount re-written to correspond both in red and black ink. The work had been so dextrously performed as to not be detected, and $600 was paid for the draft.

On March 24, Brown & Co. got credit of the Chase National Bank, N. Y., for the full amount of $600; and in due time they received credit for the same amount of the American Exchange Bank, of New York, who, at the end of the month, settled with the Trader's Bank, returning them their original paper. Sending it back the way it came, with a re credit of $500, the amount that it had been raised, it was again received by Brown & Co. last Saturday, and they immediately took steps to the recovery of their property. In company with sheriff Berdan, as witness and more, if necessary, they started for Clarion Monday morning. Arriving in Petoskey, they found that Wachtel & Co. had just passed through a similar experience with the other draft, which they had cashed for $415. Proceeding to Clarion they made their errand known, and Mrs. Weimer explained that she had presented the paper to the banks as she received it from Canada. She made Brown & Co. perfectly secure by turning over various property to them.

Leaving the matter of locating the guilt entirely to the courts, we add only that, in this day of the world, every bank should use not only protection paper, but an automatic punch, or some equally good device, to prevent the possibility of raising.

Artificial Ice.

Daytona, Florida, has a new industry in the form of an ice factory. These institutions have been a success in various parts of the south. This one at Daytona, while not so large as those in New Orleans and other large cities, is really a first class establishment, requiring a ten horse engine, and running night and day. The water taken from an artesian well is first distilled for purification, and then frozen by the circulation of anhydrous ammonia through the coils of the freezing tank. Its release from heavy pressure and its rapid expansion or evaporation absorbs the latent heat in the water and reduces its temperature, if necessary, to zero, although 12° or 14° is the usual working temperature. After freezing, each mould is lifted in its regular turn—one in 30 minutes, plunged momentarily into a tank of boiling water to loosen the block of ice, which is then turned into a slide carrying it into the ice-house where it is packed in saw-dust.

We congratulate our distant, enterprising sister town; meanwhile we do not think Charlevoix will need such an establishment for some time to come.

After eating dinner at Erie, Pa., the family of Henry McLaughlin were seized with convulsions, and the father, mother, and one child cannot recover. It is evident that poison was administered, but by whom is not known.

The failure of Roger Brothers, of Bristol, Pa., proprietors of very extensive flouring mills, is announced. Their liabilities are over $2.90,000. Assets unknown.

In the railway wreck at Deerfield, Massachusetts, several lives were saved through the heroism of Henry C. Couillard, of Charlemont, who was being taken to jail for selling liquor. The railroad authorities have started a movement for his pardon.

Ex-Alderman William H. Miller, of New York, gave $50,000 bail and was released from jail. It is expected that he will "squeal" upon Alderman Jachne and others interested in the Broadway railway franchise, in which case they can not hope to escape conviction

The Hon. John Welsh, Minister to England under the Hayes administration, died at Philadelphia last week.

Sir Thaddens Fairbanks, inventor of the Fairbanks scale, died at St. Johnsbury, Vt., in his 90th year. Mr. Fairbanks was born in Dedham, Mass., and emigrated to St. Johnsbury, Vt., when 15 years old. After working in a saw and grist mill he started an iron foundry in 1823, making newly invented styles of cooking stoves and cast-iron plows, the first iron plowshares ever made. He invented, in succession, a hemp-dresser, a steam-heating apparatus, an arrangement of refrigerators which has everywhere been adopted, and finally the famous scale. For the last invention he was made a Knight of the Imperial Order of Francis Joseph by the Emperor of Austria in 1873.

Dr. J. H. Arnett, Superintendent of the American Express Company, died at Niagara Falls from an apoplectic stroke.

Five hundred school-boys at Troy, New York, struck for a single daily session of four hours, threw stones and mud at the police, and forced the School Board to listen to a statement of grievances.

The late Ann Jane Mercer, of Phila-delphia, bequeathed her estate in Montgomery County, with buildings, furniture, horses, etc., for the establishment of a home for aged and infirm clergymen of the Presbyterian faith who do not use tobacco in any form, and set aside a sum of $100,000 to maintain the establishment.

At New York warrants were issued for twelve of the Aldermen supposed to have been corruptly connected with the Broadway Surface Railway legislation. Ten of the "suspects" were arrested and gave bail in the sum of $25,000 each. Another surrendered and was also released on bonds. The twelfth man, Reilly, is thought to have fled.

John H. Noyes, founder of the Oneida Community, died at his home in Niagara Falls.

WESTERN.

Two Western railroads report the following earnings for the month of March: Chicago & Northwestern, $1,988,900, an increase over the same month last year of $2,400; Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha, $517,000, an increase of $57,800.

The Court House at Carroll, Iowa, was destroyed by fire, but the records were saved.

The Federal officials at San Fran-cisco unite in a telegram to the Secretary of the Treasury, stating that unusual indulgence was extended to the Chinese Embassy, which landed at that port; that no discourtesy was shown, and that no complaints were made by the envoy.

Charles Pennor, foreman of the hook and ladder company at Battle Creek, Mich., was arrested for incendiarism, and confessed to an attempt to fire the shops of Nichols, Shepard & Co.

In a quarrel on a farm near Falls Creek, Wisconsin, William Wagner killed a laborer named Moe, and then committed suicide.

William Smith, a militiaman of Springfield, Ill., who left his post at East St. Louis to secure the wherewithal to repair a rent in his trousers, has been sent home, and will be court-martialed.

I. T. Koehler, pastor of the Ger-man Evangelical Church at Watertown, Wisconsin, borrowed from various friends small sums aggregating $500, stole the funds of a church concert, beat clothiers and jewelers, and fled. He wrote back from Detroit that he was about to cross to Canada

The Boston Block at Minneapolis, Minn. in which were located the postoffice and business firms, was gutted by fire. The contents of the postoffice were removed, but the library of the Bar Association was consumed. The total loss is about $225,000, well covered by insurance.

John M. Rountree, a well-known lawyer and club member, killed himself with a revolver in a Chicago gun store. He had been suffering from dyspepsia for some time and melancholia had ensued, and it was while suffering from an acute attack of the latter that he committed suicide.

At Golconda, Ill., John Randolph, ex-County Treasurer, shot and killed T. M. Thomas, a deputy Sheriff, in a dispute about a lawsuit.

It is said that several hundred mining experts and capitalists of Michigan are about to start from the Upper Peninsula for Alaska, on account of representations made by Governor Swineford.

A Republican Valley Railroad train was wrecked near Oketa, Neb., two coaches leaving the track and plunging into Blue River. Fortunately the cars burst open in their descent, permitting the rescue of the occupants. A little girl was killed, a babe fatally hurt, and fourteen other persons were more or less injured.

The tomb of Elbert H. Shirk at Peru, Indiana, will be guarded nightly for a year to come, the watchman receiving $100 per month and the use of a cottage near the cemetery.

The Bartal family, living near Braid-wood, Ill., ate wild parsnips for dinner, with the result that two boys, aged twelve and sixteen, have died, and the father is seriously ill.

SOUTHERN.

Ex-Alderman William H. Miller, of New York, was arrested in Florida in connection with the famous bribery cases in the city named. Miller is a Republican, and represented the Ninth Ward in 1884.

Three members of a surveying party were drowned while crossing the New River at Sunnyside, W. Va., by the upsetting of a boat.

On account of the strange order of Judge McKay, of the United States Court, Atlanta, Ga., in postponing certain railroad damage suits, the attorney in the case commenced proceedings looking to adjudging him insane.

WASHINGTON.

Before the House Telephone Investi-gating Committee Stilson Hutchins, of the Washington Post, said he had, in a spasm of generosity, offered to buy Senator Vest's Pan-Electric stock at what he paid for it. The latter finally declined to sell, as he considered the newspaper claim unjust, and would not yield to it. Witness had been offered some of the stock to publish Dr. Rogers' poetry, but thought both the poetry and stock bad.

The majority of the House Commit-tee on Elections has decided to reject the claims of Frank H. Hurd to the seat from Ohio now held by Roberts.

The rupture between Secretary La-mar and Commissioner Sparks is said to be so complete that one or the other must go.

Watson Van Benthuysen, of New Orleans, President of the National Improved Telephone Company, testified before the Pan-Electric Telephone Investigating Committee that his company owned, but did not use, seven of the Rogers telephonic inventions. Witness testified that he and Secretary Young, of the Pan-Electric Company, agreed at Memphis to bring a suit against the Bell Company. Each party was to furnish evidence and a model and divide the expenses, but was to furnish its own lawyers. Notes of this agreement were made, but it was never reduced to writing. Witness having applied to the Attorney General to bring suit against the Bell Company, the Attorney General replied on July 14, 1885, that the matter had been referred to the Secretary of the Interior, to whom it should have been referred originally. When witness afterward called upon Attorney General Garland, that gentleman had courteously, but firmly, refused to hear him on telephonic matters, and witness had become very indignant and threatened to appeal to the President. Within two days witness had called again with Mr. Brierson, an attorney, to secure a promise from the Attorney General that he would promptly make application for suit against the Bell Company if referred to the department through a district attorney. Still the Attorney General had peremptorily refused to touch the matter.

The increase reported in the post-office revenues, inclusive of postage on second-class matter, from thirty of the large offices in the country for nine months ended March 31, 1886, is $924,445. Chicago leads the Western cities with an increase of $151,551; Cincinnati is second, with $59,382, and St. Louis third, with $40,417. The increase at St. Paul is $23,840, and the increase at Minneapolis is $18,230.

The House Committee on Territories has agreed to report favorably a bill to provide for the organization of Indian Territory and the Public-Land Strip into the Territory of Oklahoma. The bill provides that nothing in it shall be so construed as to disturb the existing property or treaty rights of the Indians, and that the Public-Land Strip shall be opened to settlement under the provisions of the homestead laws only. The President is authorized to appoint a commission to deal with the Indians.

The Senate Committee on Commerce has agreed to a favorable report on Representative James' bill to regulate commercial travelers' sales of goods and merchandise. The bill, as agreed upon, reads as follows: "That residents of each State and Territory may, within the other States and Territories, and within the District of Columbia, solicit from dealers or merchants orders for goods and merchandise by sample, catalogue, card, price-list, description, or other representation without payment of any license or mercantile tax."

POLITICAL.

Joseph Pulitzer has resigned his seat in Congress, from New York, as his newspaper, the World, demands his whole attention.

At Effingham, Ill., Mrs. H. B. Kep-ley ran against her husband for School Trustee and "knocked him out," receiving a majority of twelve votes.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A Panama dispatch says an explosion on board the small river steamer Colombia, at the Island of Tomaco, killed fifteen persons and injured twenty-two. The steamer was destroyed.

Everything was quiet at East St. Louis on the 12th inst. Seventeen companies of Illinois State troops, under command of Gen. Reece, covered all strategic points in the city. The funeral of the victims of the recent tragedy occurred on Sunday, and was attended by 1,500 Knights of Labor, Knights of Honor, and other organizations. At Parsons, Kan., and Fort Worth, Tex., several strikers were arrested, and there was more or less excitement. The troubles on the Union Pacific at Omaha were adjusted, and the men will hereafter be paid by the trip system. The freight brakemen on the Mobile and Ohio Road struck for $55 for twenty-six trips of one hundred miles each. The members of the paid fire department of Philadelphia have decided to join the Knights of Labor, in the hope of securing an increase of compensation. At Sedalia, Mo., a woman shot at a Deputy Sheriff who was doing guard duty at the Missouri Pacific shops. Many telegrams from Knights of Labor have been received in Washington, asking for speedy action on the Curtin resolution for a Congressional investigation into the Southwestern strikes. T. V. Powderly has written to Congressman O'Neill that the labor arbitration bill is the best that could have been passed, although it will not be the means of settling all disputes between capital and labor. A New York dispatch says the Vanderbilts, Astors, and Gould are closely guarded by private detectives against cranks. The Executive Board of the Knights of Labor at St. Louis sent the following telegram to Jay Gould:

"To Jay Gould, New York:

"The following advertisement appeared in many of the leading papers of the 7th inst., dated from the office of the agent of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company:

"'Ten good men from here are wanted as Deputy Marshals at East St. Louis to protect Louisville and Nashville employes. Five dollars a day and board will be paid. Also a number of platform men can be given employment. Only men who have plenty of grit and mean business need apply. Apply at once to

T. S. GENUNG, agent.

"How well this advertisement has been answered is seen by their work in East St. Louis. Six men and one woman were murdered by those who 'had plenty of grit and meant business.' By your actions in refusing the peaceful negotiations solicited by the Board of Arbitration you and you alone must be held responsible by the world for the lives of these innocent people."

Jay Gould states that H. M. Hoxie has full powers touching the trouble on the Southwest system, and that he will enter into no further negotiations for the settlement of a strike which, he says, is now a thing of the past. The Central Labor Union at New York adopted a preamble calling Jay Gould "an arch-enemy of the republic," and saying that "it is the intention and purpose of the great energy of the American people to destroy all labor organizations." They adopted, also, resolutions denouncing Jay Gould and his minions for their refusal to treat with the representatives of the workingmen of the Missouri Pacific, and holding him and his representatives responsible for every act of violence. A committee was appointed for executing a general boycott upon Jay Gould. At the regular weekly meeting of the Methodist clergymen of Chicago, where the eight-hour question was discussed with much spirit, Bishop Bowman said he should like to see Jay Gould kicked through the streets of New York. At the inquest on the victims of the East St. Louis emeute, evidence was given to the effect that no attack had been made on the deputies when they began firing. The deputies who did the shooting were released at St. Louis under writs of habeas corpus, but were rearrested and held to await requisitions from the Governor of Illinois. Numbers of coal miners in St. Clair and Madison Counties, Illinois, have abandoned their work, and say they will not resume operations until the railway strike is settled.

The Argentine Republic has request-ed the United States to recall its Minister to Buenos Ayres, Bayless W. Hanna, of Indiana.

A Coroner's jury at St. Louis heard the testimony of Mayor Joyce and other officials of East St. Louis, and decided to hold the nine Deputy Sheriffs for the shooting of C. H. Thompson on the Mississippi Bridge. The inquest at East St. Louis resulted in holding the deputies for the slaughter at Cahokia Bridge. A large number of representative business men of St. Louis met in the court house and set on foot a movement for arbitration of the strike between the citizens, the Knights of Labor, and the railroads. Another of the persons who were wounded at East St. Louis by the Deputy Sheriffs has died, and three others are believed to be beyond recovery.

The April report of the Department of Agriculture showed a decrease of 5 per cent. from last year in the acreage of winter wheat, Illinois leading in the decrease.

The House Committee on Commerce has instructed Representative Dunham to report favorably his bill to authorize the President to appoint inspectors of live stock, dressed meats, and hog products intended for foreign shipment, to a number not exceeding fifteen for any customs district.

The Public Lands Committee of the House have agreed to report the bill repealing the pre-emption, timber-culture, and desert-land laws, the bill forfeiting certain lands granted to the State of Wisconsin for railroad purposes, and the bill forfeiting the Ontonagon and State Line Railroad grant in Michigan.

In the British House of Commons, on Tuesday, the 13th inst., after speeches by Harcourt and Gladstone in favor, and Goschen and Sir Michael Hicks-Beach against the Irish home-rule bill, a motion that leave be given to introduce the bill was put by the Speaker and agreed to without a division. Mr. Gladstone then stated that the second reading of the bill would be fixed for the 6th of May.

LATER NEWS ITEMS.

General Master Workman Powderly of the Knights of Labor has addressed the following circular to members of the order:

"Noble Order of the Knights of Labor of America:

"To the order, wherever found, greeting: You have all read of the great strike on the Gould lines of railway in the Southwest; its history is being written day by day. It makes but little difference now whether the men of the Southwest acted wisely or not. Let us pass that part of the affair over, for it, too, has passed into history. The general Executive Board of the order attempted to settle the trouble and restore harmony. Agreements were made with them by Jay Gould, Esq., but when the board reached St. Louis Mr. Hoxie would not treat with them; not that alone, but he positively refused to employ Knights of Labor, whether they had been active in the strike or not.

"It now becomes the part of every man and woman in the country to take up the fight of the men of the Southwest, and assist them to the full extent of their means. They have been idle for nearly two months. They have had a most trying ordeal to go through, and are in need of funds. It requires no eloquence or rhetoric to plead the cause of these suffering people. They require aid, and it becomes our duty to extend that aid as quickly as possible for us to do so. Send every dollar you can spare to the general Secretary-Treasurer, who will at once forward it to the men at St. Louis for distribution. Remember the men out there do not ask for charity; they do not ask at all. It is your Executive Board that makes the appeal in their behalf. He who gives quickly gives doubly. Act at once.

"Another appeal may be sent to you, and we ask of you to prepare for it now. We must be judged by our actions in this matter. Do not pass resolutions condemning capital, for we are not fighting capital. Do not antagonize the contest we have before us. Let us make a friend of every man who has suffered through monopoly. This battle against the man who represents monopoly must be fought out manfully. Watch his actions everywhere. Keep an eye on the doings of Congress. Urge the committee that has been appointed to do its duty fearlessly; strengthen their hands; give them every aid.

"In conclusion, let us again ask that you send at once every dollar you can at present raise to uphold the men who are now out along the lines of the Southwestern system of Gould's railways. Do not delay, and at the same time, make ready to bring the whole power of the order to bear upon the man who wrecks railroads, homes, fortunes, and lives in his greed for gold. Let us determine to have it go into history that the men of 1886 struck as grandly for liberty as the men of 1776. The men of 1776 broke the power of monarchy and dethroned the king. The power which they wrested from the hands of a king was not so great as that which is now held by one man, who, through the corrupt use of money, has brought manufacturer and workman to ruin. The power of the king has passed away, and it must now be determined whether man shall rule or whether illegitimate wealth shall rule.

T. V. POWDERLY,
"General Master Workman."

J. W. Walters, Company F, Eighth Regiment, Illinois National Guard, while patrolling the Vandalia yards at East St. Louis, was fired upon by an unknown man, who immediately afterward ran. Walters fired after him, but he escaped. A second shot raised another man, who also escaped. Orders were immediately issued to patrol all the yards in the hope of capturing the men; but the search proved futile.

In the Criminal Court at St. Louis, Judge Noonan discharged J. J. McGarry and other Missouri Pacific strikers who had been charged with obstructing traffic, basing his decision on the ground that a coupling-pin is not part of a railroad.

The furniture factory of F. Mayer & Co., in Chicago, employing nearly three hundred men, has been closed because of a demand for 20 per cent. advance in wages and an eight-hour day.

The authorities of Montreal are about to take action against one of the wealthiest citizens for displaying in his residence copies of Powers' "Greek Slave" and other nude works of the sculptor.

The Venezuelan treaty was ratified by the Sen-ate on the 13th inst. The consideration of the treaty with Hawaii was postponed for two weeks. Bills were reported to accept from the Vanderbilt heirs and Mrs. Grant certain objects of art presented by foreign governments to General Grant; to establish a sub-treasury at Louisville, and to organize the Territory of Oklahoma. Mr. Logan made a speech supporting the motion for open executive sessions. He declared that there was not now and never had been any necessity for secret sessions. The Hour electoral-count bill was reported to the House with several important amendments. The river and harbor bill was taken up by the House and explained by Mr. Willis (Ky.). Mr. Anderson (Kas.) criticised items of the bill as wasteful. Messrs. Hepburn (Iowa) and Reed (Me.) attacked the appropriations for the lower Mississippi and Galveston harbor. Mr. Jones (Ala.) and Mr. Stewart (Tex.) defended the bill. Speaker Carlisle appointed the following committee to investigate the causes and extent of the labor troubles in the West: Messrs. Curtin (Pa.), Crain (Tex.), Outhwaite (O.), Stewart (Vt.), Parker (N. Y.), and Buchanan (N. J.).

NATIONAL LAW-MAKERS.

Brief Summary of the Proceedings of Congress.

THE bill to admit Washington Territory was before the Senate on the 9th inst., the pending question being on the proposed amendment of Senator Eustis limiting the right of suffrage in the proposed new State to qualified male electors only. After a somewhat protracted debate the amendment was rejected—yeas 12, nays 45. The yeas were: Messrs. Beck, Berry, Coke, Eustis, Gorman, Gray, Ingalls, Jackson, Maxey, Pugh, Saulsbury, and Wadleigh. Among the Senators voting against Mr. Eustis' amendment was Mr. Edmunds. Mr. Ingalls introduced a bill for the appointment of a board of arbitration to settle differences between railroad companies and their employes. George Hearst was sworn in as Senator from California. The following nominations were sent to the Senate by the President: Lawrence Harrigan to be appraiser of merchandise for the port of St. Louis, Mo.; William H. Waldy, of Michigan, to be a member of the Board of Indian Commissioners. In the House of Representatives Mr. Forney, of Alabama, asked unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution making an appropriation for the relief of sufferers from the floods in Alabama. Mr. Beach, of New York, objected. The House then went into committee of the whole on the private calendar. Several bills were agreed to, when the committee ran against a snag in the shape of a bill directing the Quartermaster General to settle with the McMinnville and Manchester Railroad Company of Tennessee. The amount involved in the bill is $246,000, and a long discussion ensued upon the measure, but no action was taken.

THE bill authorizing the formation of a new State to be composed of parts Washington and Idaho Territories, to be known as the State of Washington, passed the Senate on the 10th inst. by a vote of 30 to 13. Senators Butler, S. C.; George, Miss.; Jones, Ark.; and Morgan, Ala., voted with the Republicans in the affirmative. Senator Hearst, Cal., cast his first vote with his party in the negative. The President sent fifty appointments to the Senate. They include the successors of "suspended" officials whose terms have expired since their names were originally presented. They are now sent in to fill "vacancies." The House passed a bill authorizing the establishment of sixteen new life-saving stations. Bills were passed authorizing the construction of bridges as follows: Across the Mississippi River near Alton, Ill.; across the west channel of the Detroit River, to connect Belle Isle Park with the main land; across the Tennessee River, by the Nashville, Jackson and Memphis Railroad Company; across the Mississippi near Keitlesburg, Ill.; across the Illinois and Des Moines, by the New York and Council Bluffs Railroad Company; over Bayou Barnard, Mississippi; across Red River near Brown's Ferry, Texas; across the St. Croix at some accessible point between Prescott, Wis., and Taylor's Falls, Minn.; across the Mississippi at Winona, Minn.; across the Missouri at St. Joseph, Mo.; across the Missouri at Council Bluffs; across the Missouri at Sibley City, Mo.; across the Kansas by the Interstate Rapid Transit Company; across the Missouri in Clay or Jackson Counties, Missouri; across the Missouri above St. Charles, Mo.; across the Yellowstone in Montana; across the Mississippi at Red Wing, Minn.; across the Missouri near Atchison, Kan.; across the Tombigbee, Warrior, Tennessee, and other navigable rivers in Alabama, by the Gulf and Chicago Air-Line Railroad Company; across Young's Bay, Oregon; across the Missouri near Chamberlain, Dakota; across the Missouri at Pierre, Dakota.

THE Indian appropriation bill, including an item of $20,000 for schools in Alaska, passed the Senate on the 12th inst. Mr. Sherman offered an arbitration bill in the shape of an amendment to the House bill pending in the Senate. Mr. Chace reported adversely from the Committee on Postoffices a bill to increase the rate of postage on fourth-class matter to two cents an ounce. A resolution offered by Mr. Beck was agreed to appoint Mr. Gibson, of Louisiana, to the membership of the Senate Committee on Commerce in place of Mr. Jones of Florida, during the absence of the latter from the Senate. The President sent the following nominations to the Senate: Howell E. Jackson of Tennessee, to be Circuit Judge of the United States for the Sixth Judicial Circuit, vice John Baxter, deceased; Frank H. Dyer, to be Marshal of the United States for the Territory of Utah. The President withdrew the nomination of Orlando W. Powers of Michigan as Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of Utah. Republican Senators and Representatives at a joint caucus in the evening adopted resolutions authorizing each State delegation to select a representative on the Congressional Campaign Committee. In the House of Representatives Mr. Morrison, of Illinois, from the Committee on Rules, reported a resolution for the appointment by the Speaker of a select committee of seven members to investigate the cause and extent of the disturbed conditions now existing in the relations between railroad corporations and their employes. The committee shall have power to send for persons and papers, to sit during the sessions of the House, and to visit such places as may be necessary in order to facilitate the investigation. It shall report during the present session, with such recommendations as it may deem proper to make. The resolution was adopted without division. The Morrison-Hewitt tariff bill was reported to the House with majority and minority reports.

SENATOR FRYE'S resolution, stating that, in the opinion of the Senate, the appointment of a commission in which the Governments of the United States and Great Britain shall be represented, charged with the consideration and settlement of the fishing rights of the two Governments on the coasts of the United States and British North America, ought not to be provided for by Congress, was adopted by that body on the 13th inst. Senator Frye reported favorably from the Committee on Commerce an amendment intended to be proposed to the postoffice appropriation bill. It increases the appropriation for transportation of foreign mails from $350,000 to $1,000,000, and provides that this amount shall include cost of railway transit across the Isthmus of Panama. The President sent to the following nominations to the Senate: Postmasters—Edward Dolan, at Troy, N. Y.; Geo. W. Langdon, at Saratoga Springs, N. Y.; Lathrop S. Taylor, at Clyde, N. Y.; C. L. Colmer, at East New York, N. Y.; Samuel H. Wagener, at San Jose, Cal.; William E. Baker, at Fairbury, Ill.; Charles H. Brown, at Sterling, Kan.; Marshall Birdsell, at Emporia, Kan., and P. B. Gavin, at Corning, Iowa. The President withdrew the nomination of H. P. Albert to be postmaster at Stuart, Guthrie County, Iowa. The House spent the day discussing the Ohio contested case of Hurd vs. Roberts.

MR. CULLOM, of Illinois, called up and explained the provisions of his Inter-State Commerce Bill to the Senate on the 14th inst. Mr. Palmer, of Michigan, also spoke in favor of the measure. Mr. Butler, of South Carolina, addressed the Senate in advocacy of open executive sessions of that body. In the House of Representatives, the Ohio contest of Hurd vs. Roberts was decided by a majority of 62 in favor of Roberts, the sitting member. The score stood 185 to 123 on a resolution declaring that Roberts was entitled to the seat. Messrs. Hatch, Green, of North Carolina and White, of Minnesota, were appointed a sub-committee of the House Committee on Agriculture, to draft a bill regulating the sale of oleomargarine.

Doing Good for Her Neighbors.

Said a Dallas, Texas, woman to a female friend:

"You should make your husband quit chewing tobacco. If you tell him to quit it he will give it up, I suppose."

"Yes, if I ask him to; but I am not going to ask him to quit chewing tobacco."

"When he kisses you don't the taste of tobacco make you sick?"

"Yes, but I want him to keep on chewing. He kisses three or four other women and the tobacco makes them sicker than it does me, for I've got used to it already."—Texas Siftings.

The Railroad King Replies Defiantly—Interesting Correspondence.

Powderly to Gould.

The following manifesto was written by General Master Workman Powderly on the 11th inst.:

"SCRANTON, Pa., April 11, 1886.

"To Jay Gould, Esq., President Missouri Pacific Railway, New York:

"DEAR SIR: The events of the past forty-eight hours must have demonstrated to you the absolute necessity of bringing this terrible struggle in the Southwest to a speedy termination. You have the power, the authority and the means to bring the strike to an end. I have done everything in my power to end the strike. The gentlemen associated with me on the General Executive Board of the Knights of Labor have done the same. Everything consistent with honor and manhood has been done in the interest of peace. No false notion of pride or dignity has swayed us in our dealings with you or the gentlemen associated with you. In the conference with you on Sunday, March 28, I and associates thought that arbitration would be agreed to. The only method of arbitration that was discussed was in line with that suggested in the letter which I sent to you in the name of our board the day previous. There was nothing particularly agreed upon, as you well know. You said that in arbitrating the matter the damages sustained by the company during the strike ought to receive consideration. I said to you that it would not be the part of wisdom to bring that question up in the settlement of the strike. When I called on you that evening you had prepared as the result of your and associates' of the morning's interview a letter which you intended to give me. That letter included a telegram to be sent to Mr. Hoxie, and in that telegram you said that the damages sustained by the company would be a proper subject for the Arbitration Board to discuss. This latter part of the letter or telegram you agreed to strike out. After we had talked the matter over for some time, I left you as you were about to go to your room to rewrite the letter, which you afterward placed in the hands of Mr. McDowell to be given to me, for I had to leave at that time in order to keep an appointment at the hotel where I stopped. The statement which you have since then made, to the effect that you had prepared that letter before I called, is not quite correct or, if you did have it prepared, you changed it after we had talked the matter over for some time. This, I believe, you will admit to be true. In the conference held between the members of our Executive Board and the directors of the Missouri Pacific Company on March 30, you said you understood me to say that the men along your lines would be ordered back to work at once. I then reiterated the statement which I made to you, and I now repeat it: 'The men out along the lines of your railways can be ordered back to work, but if they are given to understand that they are deserted, that we do not make any interest in them it will not in any way mend matters; on the contrary, it will make things worse. There are still along the roads out there some of the men who have no regard for organization or law; men of hardy spirit, energy and daring. Such men as have left the East and have taken up their homes out in a wild romance, will not submit so quietly as the men they have left behind in the East. They are not to do rash things than they would do elsewhere, and I have no doubt we have some of them in our order.'

"Both you and Mr. Hopkins heard me make that statement, and I believe the latter agreed that was his experience also. The danger of the strike spreading was also discussed, and I said to you that it would not spread; that an effort had been made to have the men of the Union Pacific take a part in it, but that the Knights of Labor on that road had a standing agreement with the management of the road that there was to be no trouble or strike until the last effort to effect a settlement had failed, and not then until the court of last resort had been reached.

"You can settle this strike. Its longer continuance rests with you, and you alone. Every act of violence, every drop of blood that may be shed from this time forth must be laid at your door. The Knights of Labor were not founded to promote or shield wrongdoing, and to-day the order of the Knights of Labor stands between your property and ruin. We are willing to absolve the men along your railways from their allegiance to our order; we leave that to themselves. We will not allow any claim which the order may have on them to stand between them and the immediate restoration to their former positions. The order of the Knights of Labor asks of no man to remain a member if it is not to his interest to do so. You may deal with them as citizens if you will. We will surrender our right to claim those men as members if they wish, but we will not surrender our right to see this affair thoroughly investigated. You have said that the order of the Knights of Labor was a conspiracy, a secret menace, etc. I am willing, as its chief officer, to lay everything connected with our order bare to the world if you will, on the other hand, lay open to the public the means and methods whereby you have piled up the wealth which you control, and allow the tribunal of public opinion to pass judgment on the two and say which is the conspirator. Do you accept the challenge? You have instructed your legal adviser to proceed again at every man connected with the Knights of Labor for the damages sustained since the strike began. Two weeks ago I said: 'Do not do this; to-day I say begin at once; lay claims for damages in every court within whose jurisdiction a knight exists. Proceed at once, and in every State where you can recover damages do so if the law will sustain you in it. It is just and right that it should be so. We are willing to face you before the law; we will fight you with no other weapon.

"There are people who say that this struggle is the beginning of the war between capital and labor. That statement is false. This certainly means war, but it is a war between legitimate capital, honest enterprise and honest labor on the one hand and illegitimate wealth on the other hand. This is a war in which we court the fullest investigation of our acts. Do you dare to do the same? This war means no further strike, no shedding of blood. It is a war in which every business man, every commercial man, every professional man, every workingman will be invited to enlist. It will not be a war upon the innocent, and the battlefield upon which it will be fought out will be before the courts of law, and that which makes law, public opinion. There will be no ballots in this supreme hour to silence any man's opinion. No converts will be made by physical force. That flag which floats over press or mansion at the bidding of a mob, disgraces both victor and victim, and under such a flag as that we will not wage the battle; but this battle of the people against monopoly may as well be fought out now as ten years from now, and what field so eminently proper in which to fight it out as before the courts? Let us know whether laws were made to be obeyed or not, and if they were not so framed then the people must make laws that will be obeyed. No man, whether he be rich or whether he be the poorest of the poor, shall in future shirk the responsibility of his acts and shield himself behind the courts. It was to see that the laws were obeyed that the order of the Knights of Labor was founded, and if the day has come to make the trial, so let it be.

"When I say to you that we will meet you in the courts I do not speak rashly or ill-advisedly. I have taken counsel from the best legal minds of the United States. We are prepared to face you before the courts, and now await your action in the matter. This is no threat. I play no game of bluff or chance. I speak for 500,000 organized men, who are ready to pay out the last farthing in order that justice may prevail. You have it in your power to make friends of these men by acting the part of the man; by taking this matter in your own hands. Will you do so, and end this strife in the interest of humanity and our common country? It is your duty to brush aside every obstacle, assert your authority, and take this matter in your own hands, settle every grievance, restore every man to his place except those who have been engaged in the destruction of property, or who have broken the laws. Will you do this? You can then make rules and agreements with your men which will forever preclude the possibility of another such disastrous conflict as this one has proved itself to be. I remain, very truly, yours,

"T. V. POWDERLY, G. M. W. K. of L."

Gould to Powderly.

Following is Mr. Gould's reply:

"NEW YORK, April 11.

"T. V. Powderly, Esq., G. M. W., K. of L.:

DEAR SIR—At 12 o'clock to-day I received from Mr. William O. McDowell, whom you brought with you to our recent conference, a letter to which he says: 'By yesterday's mail I received a letter written by Mr. Powderly addressed to you, inclosed in a letter addressed to me. With this I hand you the letter addressed to you by Mr. Powderly, and a copy of Mr. Powderly's letter to me inclosing the same.'

"The following is a copy of the letter Mr. McDowell sent me as coming from you:

"'GENERAL ASSEMBLY, ORDER OF KNIGHTS OF LABOR OF AMERICA, OFFICE OF GENERAL MASTER WORKMAN, SCRANTON, Pa., April 10.

"'MY DEAR MR. MCDOWELL.—I inclose you a letter which you are to read and deliver to the man for whom it is intended. I do not care whether you deliver it in person or through the medium of another; I only ask that it be placed in his hands. If you have succeeded in effecting a settlement with him do not give it to him. If you think there is a prospect for an immediate settlement do not give it to him; but if such is not the case, then I want it placed in his hands. Allow him to either consent or make a reply. If he consents to an honorable settlement, then the letter will never see the light of day; but if he does not so act, then it will be published to the world, and from the time he spurns up the ball in a legal way we will continue to wage the battle with him.' His wealth cannot save him if this fight is begun. I have no one know of the existence of this letter until after 5 o'clock of the day you deliver it; then if he makes no reply let it go to the world. Let him know the limit of time allowed. I sincerely hope that there will be no more necessity for its publicity. Hoping for the best, I remain, very truly yours,

"'T. V. POWDERLY.'

"'To W. O. McDowell, Esq., New York.'

"I thus received your letter to me dated 'Scranton, Pa., April 11, 1886,' at the same time and by the same agency that I received your foregoing letter of instructions to Mr. McDowell.

"The animus and purpose of your letter to me cannot be fully understood without knowing the contents of that one. I was peremptorily notified at the same time that I must answer your letter by 5 o'clock to-day and I was graciously given until that hour to respond.

"Your letter to me embraces two subjects: one relating to me personally and the other to the relation of the Knights of Labor to a railroad company of which I am the President, and in some degree the representative of its public and private duties. I shall refer to the first subject very briefly. The circumstances above given under which your letter was delivered, as well as its tenor and spirit, place its purpose in writing it beyond a reasonable doubt. It would seem to be an official declaration that the Knights of Labor had duly entered to pursue their purposes against Missouri Pacific Company should yield to its demands in what you call the strike on that road.

"In answer to these personal threats, I beg to say that I am yet a free American citizen. I am past 49 years of age, and was born at Roxbury, Delaware County, in this State. I began life in a lowly way, and by industry, temperance, and attention to my own business have been successful, perhaps, beyond the measure of my deserts. If, as you say, I am now to be destroyed by the Knights of Labor unless I will sink my manhood, so be it. Fortunately I have retained my early habits of industry. My friends, neighbors, and business associates know me well, and I am quite content to leave my personal record in their hands. If any of them have ought to complain of, I will be only too glad to submit to any arbitration. If such parties, or any of them, wish to appoint the Knights of Labor or you as their attorney, such appointment is quite agreeable to me, but until such an election is made, it will naturally occur to you that any interference on your part in my personal affairs is, to say the least, quite gratuitous.

"'Since I was nineteen years of age I have been in the habit of employing in my various enterprises large numbers of persons, probably at times as high as 50,000, distributing often three or four million dollars per month in different pay rolls. It would seem a little strange that during all those years the difficulty with the Knights of Labor should be my first. Any attempt to control me personally with the interstate commerce and consequences of a most vaguely expressed, but not hard to understand, will at the hand of your order be visited upon me. It may be well to remind you that it is an American citizen whom you and your order thus propose to 'destroy.' The contest is not between your order and me, but between your order and the laws of the land. Your order has already defied those laws in preventing by violence this company from operating its road. You hold then that this company should not operate its road under conditions prescribed by law, but only under conditions prescribed by you. You now declare, in effect, that I hold my individual property and rights, not as other men hold theirs, but only at the peril of your letting loose irrevocably, after 5 o'clock, your order upon me. If this is true of this company, and of me, it is true of all other men and companies. If so, you and your secretary let me the law, and an American citizen is such only in name.

"'Already for weeks your order has, in your attack upon this company, not hesitated to dissuade it by violence from rendering its duty to the public and from giving work and paying wages to men at least three times your own number, who, working as they were by your side, were at least deserving of your sympathy. Having pushed this violence beyond even the great forbearance of the public, and found in this direction no cause to hesitate, you now turn upon me and propose that the wrongs you have hitherto inflicted on the public shall now culminate in an attack upon an individual. In this, as I have said, the real issue is between you and the laws of the land. It may be, before you are through, that those laws will effectually advise you that even I, as an individual citizen, am not beyond their care. Very respectfully,

"JAY GOULD."

DEVASTATION AND DEATH.

St. Cloud, Sauk Rapids, and Rice's Station, Minn., Swept by a Fierce Cyclone.

Thirty Persons Reported Killed at the Two Former Towns, and Fifty Others Injured.

All the Inhabitants of Rice's Station Either Dead or Wounded—Ruin in Iowa Sections.

[St. Paul telegram.]

Reports received here give meager details of a cyclone, the most destructive that has appeared in the Northwest for years, which passed over Sauk Rapids and St Cloud this afternoon, carrying death to fully fifty people and destruction to three times that number of residences and other buildings. The day had opened balmy as ever did a spring day, and at noon the sun shone brightly. Soon after clouds began to lower and the atmosphere to change from balmy to stifling. About 1 o'clock a fatal black cloud appeared apparently two or three miles to the southwest of the city and moving with great rapidity. It came in a northeasterly course and swept away everything in its track, which was some 60 yards wide. It lasted but for a few minutes, but in these few minutes it caused destruction which, in the confusion and darkness that followed, cannot be told as yet. In St. Cloud the havoc was the same. Among the structures wrecked are the Manitoba freight house, Sanborn's flouring mill, Briggs & Co.'s hardware store, the Central Hotel, and the Court House at Sauk Rapids. They all lie in splinters and level with the ground. It is reported that twenty-five are killed at Sauk Rapids and as many more at St. Cloud, and that 125 in all are injured. The following are killed at St. Cloud: Nick Tinemann, a farmer; Mrs. Meisman, an old lady, and a little girl; a son, 4 years old, of Bowinski; a son, 7 years old, of Frank Lernskorliski; Mrs. Stein, a widow; a son, 7 years old, of P. Wahlerf; Shoutridge, a young railroad man; Van Hosse, a railroad man; two young children of Mrs. Pens; a baby of August Kinell.

The following were killed at Sauk Rapids: J. Barz, an infant, and two children; John Kinard, County Auditor; George Lindley, County Treasurer; two children of C. G. Wood, merchant; Abner St. Cyr; a child of P. Carpenter, Clerk of Court; President Edgar Hill, of the German-American National Bank. Forty are missing and are thought to be buried in the debris. Freight cars on the Northern Pacific tracks were lifted from the ground and smashed to bits. The appearance of the cyclone, its course, and progress are told by the following graphic special from St. Cloud: "A few minutes after 1 o'clock, the skies became overcast by a dark cloud, and a great black mass rose over the hills southwest of the city and coming with terrible velocity toward the western outskirts in a direct line for the Manitoba freight yards. The clouds hung low and rolled over and over like smoke over a battlefield, and were accompanied by a loud roaring and cracking sound that resembled a conflagration in its fury. The cloud was funnel-shaped and the point dragged along the ground like the tail of a huge aerial beast lashing everything that came in its path into atoms.

Citizens had hardly time to flee to their cellars and seek other points of refuge before the whirlwind was on them, and the air was filled with flying boards, shingles, bricks, and other debris, that were strewn over the country and piled in promiscuous heaps. It came from the southeast and moved in a northwesterly direction until it reached the river, where its course was diverted, and it followed the river banks until it reached Sauk Rapids, where it diverged to the left passing directly through the center of the town.

The utmost excitement prevailed. Women and children fled from their houses and rushed aimlessly about in the midst of the dark cloud of dust and an avalanche of boards and brick. Men lost their presence of mind and stood in silence and inactivity in the presence of the wind demon. It was hardly noticed before it was on the city in all its fury, and people were not warned of their danger before it was upon them, and they fell like grain before a reaper's sickle.

The portion of St. Cloud struck by the cyclone was the southwestern, and was the residence portion occupied by the laboring class of people, a majority of them being foreigners employed on the railroads. Their dwellings were light-built houses, and became an easy prey to the monster that had so viciously pounced upon them. They were like cockle shells in the grip of the whirlwind, and were picked up and tossed in the air and rent into a thousand pieces and scattered to the four winds of heaven. The earth was plowed up in the line of the cyclone, and the path over which it passed, to a width of nearly a quarter of a mile, looks as though it had been upheaved by a terrible volcanic eruption.

It had hardly begun its terrible work before it was finished, and the scene that greeted the eyes of those who had escaped its fury was one that caused the stoutest heart to shudder. Cries and shrieks of wounded rent the air, and the ground was strewn with the bodies of the dead. Among them were stalwart men, weak women, and weaker children. Citizens almost to a man rushed to the unfinished districts, and summoning physicians, began their work of rescuing those who were still living from beneath the piles of dirt and fallen buildings. Brainerd was promptly telegraphed to for medical assistance, and he immediately responded by sending a dozen physicians and surgeons by a special train, but it was late in the evening when they arrived on the scene. St. Paul and Minneapolis were also appealed to, and a special car was sent out with twenty-three surgeons and physicians for the scene of the disaster.

The scene on the streets after dark was impressive. Knots of men stood on the corners discussing the disaster, and speaking touchingly of their friends and acquaintances who had either been killed or terribly wounded. On the grounds the scene was a ghastly one. The rain poured down in torrents, and lanterns of men were seen moving over the ground, many of them carrying lanterns, searching for bodies among the ruins. The hotel lobbies were filled with excited citizens, many of whom yet suspected that some portion of their families or their friends had fallen victims to the terrible disaster. Women, seemingly unconscious of the rain that was falling, were in the streets, and, ignoring the gutters and turbid streams, glided through the streets sobbing and moaning in their fright. The scene defies description.

Gov. Hubbard at once sent messages to the Mayors of all cities and large towns in the State, asking that steps be taken at once to secure money and things needed, and urged them as speedily as possible to Senator Dunn for the sick and dying. Brief dispatches have just been received, saying that between forty and fifty bodies have been recovered from the ruins at St. Cloud, and the search not completed. The town presents a scene of the utmost desolation as seen by light, flickering lanterns, and the groans of the wounded and the lamentations of those who have lost relatives are heartrending in the extreme. Not until daylight will the full extent of the havoc be known.

The Cyclone in Iowa.

[Omaha dispatch.]

The cyclone struck the town of Coon Rapids, Iowa, and completely demolished most of the place. One boy was killed and numerous persons were injured. Twenty-five houses, two churches, one school house, and several barns were destroyed. A freight train—except the locomotive—was blown from the track and demolished and the contents ruined.

The cyclone swept over Western Iowa, doing considerable damage. It started about three miles east of Griswold, then passed north and slightly east, then going about nine miles northeast of Atlantic, and passed two and a half miles east of Brayton. The cyclone had the appearance of a funnel-shaped cloud. South east of Atlantic about four miles Henry Rogers' house was blown away, and his hired man was badly injured. John Kirk's big stable, 300 feet long, was destroyed, together with his house. In Benton Township ten houses were totally destroyed and one woman fatally injured. Near Brayton the dwellings of James Reynolds, William Printner and Bendel Printner were destroyed, and also the Printner school house. The pupils escaped, however, by running with the family into Printner's cave, or cyclone cellar, they having seen the cloud coming. Mr. Northgraves, in that vicinity, was dangerously hurt. Much stock has been killed. Reports from the cyclone are very meager so far, but it is believed that great damage has been done and many lives lost.

IRELAND FOR THE IRISH.

Mr. Gladstone, in an Earnest Speech, Lays Before Parliament His Home-Rule Scheme.

It Contemplates a Dual Parliament at Dublin, with General Power of Imposing Taxes.

It Is Opposed by Mr. Trevelyan and Partially Indorsed by Mr. Parnell.

The Parnellite members of the British House of Commons commenced to secure desirable seats soon after daybreak on the morning of the 8th inst., and held them for eleven hours, until Mr. Gladstone made his appearance. The thoroughfares in the vicinity were so crowded as to cause a suspension of traffic. The Premier was in excellent health, and was greeted by deafening applause, which lasted some minutes. As soon as the cheering ceased Mr. Gladstone rose and moved for permission to introduce a bill to amend previous legislation and to make provision for the future Government of Ireland. On making this motion Mr. Gladstone said: "The time has arrived when both honor and duty require Parliament to come to a decisive resolution. It should be the endeavor to liberate Parliament from the restraints under which, during late years, it has ineffectually struggled, and to restore legislation to its unimpaired course. It is our duty to establish harmonious relations between Great Britain and Ireland on the footing of free institutions, in which Englishmen, Scotchmen and Irishmen have a like interest."

This sentiment was greeted with prolonged cheers.

As soon as quiet was restored, Mr. Gladstone entered upon a brief review of the general features of past legislation for Ireland. He dwelt upon the coercive and repressive measures which had been put in force from time to time, and deprecated any further resort to the rude remedies of intimidation. "Since the year 1833," he said, "only two years have passed without coercive legislation for Ireland; and, in spite of all this, the law continues to be disregarded, because it is invested, in the eyes of the Irish, with a foreign aspect. Were further coercion to be successful, it would require two conditions—the autocracy of the Government and the secrecy of public transactions. [Parnellite cheers.] The misapprehension of the law in England is felt to be English; in Scotland to be Scotch; but in Ireland it is not felt to be Irish. The first condition of civilized life in Ireland demands that the people have confidence in the law and sympathy therewith. The problem, therefore, before Parliament at the present time is to reconcile imperial unity with the diversity of legislatures." He believed that the Government had found the solution of this problem in the establishment of a Parliament at Dublin for the conduct of business, both legislative and administrative. [Loud cheers by the Parnellites.] "The political equality of the three countries," said Mr. Gladstone, "must be recognized. Therefore there must be an equitable distribution of the imperial funds. The peculiar circumstances existing in Ireland also make it necessary to establish safeguards for the minority in that country. The Government will be obliged to consider the class connected with the land and the relations which they will sustain with the Protestant minority. As Ireland is to have a domestic Legislature, it will, therefore, be impracticable for Irish representatives to come here."

"The intention of the Government bill," Mr. Gladstone said, "is that the Parliament at Dublin shall be a dual body. It is to be composed of two orders, each of which shall have the power to veto the acts of the other. The first order will include 103 members; the second order 208. Twenty-eight of the present Irish Peers will continue to sit in the House of Lords, and they will be granted the option to have life seats in the first Irish order. The office of Viceroy of Ireland will not be discontinued. The bill intends that the Viceroy shall remain, and that the office shall be entirely be non-political—that is, the incumbent of the office will not be expected to retire with the downfall of the British Ministry."

Mr. Gladstone continued: "If I read Irish history aright, misfortune and calamity have wedded her sons to their soil with an embrace yet closer than is known elsewhere, and the Irishman is still more profoundly Irish; but it does not follow that because his local patriotism is strong he should be incapable of an imperial patriotism. There are two modes of presenting the subject which I have argued; one of them is to present what we now recommend as good, and the other is to present it as a choice of evils, and as the least among the varied evils with which as possibilities we are confronted. Well, I have argued the matter as if it had been a choice of evils. * * * I do not know whether it may appear too bold, but in my own heart I cherish the hope that this is not merely a choice of the lesser evil, but that it may be proved to be a good in itself. [Loud cheers.]

"There is, I know, an answer to this, and what is the answer? The answer is only found in the view which rests upon a basis of despair, of absolute condemnation of Ireland and Irishmen as exceptions to those theoretical provisions which have made in general Europeans in particular, Englishmen and Americans capable of self-government; that an Irishman is a basis nature; that justice, common sense, moderation, natural prosperity, have no meaning for him; that all that he can understand and all that he can appreciate is strife—perpetual dissension. Now, sir, I am not going to argue in this House whether this view, this monstrous view [Irish cheers], is a correct one. I say an Irishman is as capable of loyalty as another man [renewed cheers]; but if his loyalty has been checked, why it is because the laws by which he is governed do not present themselves to him as they do to us in England or Scotland with a native and congenial element."

In conclusion, Mr. Gladstone said: "I ask that we shall practice as we have very often preached, and that in our own case we should be firm and fearless in applying the principles we have often heralded all over the world—that the concession of local self-government is not the way to sap and impair, but to strengthen and consolidate unity. I ask that we should learn to rely less on mere written stipulations, and more on those better stipulations written on the heart and mind of man. I ask that we should apply to Ireland the happy experience we have gained in England and Scotland, where a course of generations has now taught us, not as a dream or a theory, but as a matter of practice and of life, that the best and sure foundation we can find to build on is the foundation afforded by the affections and conviction and will of man, and that it is that by the decree of the Almighty, far more than by any other method, we may be enabled to secure at once the sacred happiness, the power, and the permanence of the empire."

Mr. Gladstone spoke three hours and twenty-five minutes explaining his measure. He resumed his seat amid bursts of enthusiastic cheers, which were sustained for several minutes.

When the applause had subsided Mr. Trevelyan, who, with Mr. Chamberlain, recently resigned from the Cabinet, addressed the House of Commons in opposition to Mr. Gladstone's bill.

"For my part," said he, "I have no hesitation in saying that I think complete separation of Ireland from Great Britain would be preferable to the plan of government that had just been proposed. We should then know the worst at once."

At the conclusion of Trevelyan's speech, Mr. Parnell rose, and was received with cheers by the Irish members. As to the bill before the House, while reserving his full expression of opinion until he had seen it, Mr. Parnell congratulated the House on the fact that there was still living an English statesman who could devote his attention to this important matter, and begged to thank Mr. Gladstone for what would not only prove a beneficial measure, from the Irish point of view, but which he (Parnell) believed would be found to be of equal benefit to England. The bill, nevertheless, contained blots which the Irish representatives would do their best to remove. On the whole, however, apart from these defects, he believed the measure would be cheerfully accepted by the Irish people and their representatives as a satisfactory solution of the long-standing dispute between the two countries.

MICHIGAN AFFAIRS.

—About eighty Coldwater people have been converted by the Salvation Army.

—Grant Rogers, of Adrian, has succeeded in writing 3,243 words on a postal card.

—Missaukee County has five well-equipped logging railroads in operation.

—The proposition for bonding Lake County for $2,500 for new county buildings at Baldwin was defeated.

—A Hudson man has seventy-five old reliable White Leghorn hens that have laid 1,582 eggs the past month.

—The Globe Flouring Mills, of Tecumseh, have been running on a 5,000 barrel order, to be shipped to Ireland.

—A wealthy farmer of Blackman has been arrested on a charge of cruelty to animals for going off on a prolonged spree, leaving his horses unfed, two of which died from starvation.

—Isaac Rayxin, of Flint, has a bust of Lincoln, made of redeemed greenbacks, which were macerated by the Government, after which the pulp was pressed and molded to form the likeness.

The committee on the location of the central soldiers and sailors' reunion has unanimously decided to hold the meeting at Owosso, Aug. 11, 12, and 13. Citizens have subscribed $3,003.

—Judge Hugh McCurdy's residence, at Corunna, has been destroyed by fire, together with valuable Masonic manuscripts, papers, books, and furniture. The financial loss is $20,000; insurance, $4,000.

—A fire broke out in the dry kiln of Gardner & Peterson's stave mill, at Reed City, by which it was entirely consumed. This is the third time it has burned within three years. The origin is unknown.

—The Rev. J. B. Little, a prominent Presbyterian divine of Adrian, who had just returned from a temporary charge at Santa Barbara, Cal., has accepted a call from the First Presbyterian Church at Davenport, Iowa.

—Henry Wilson, a colored man, at Flint, was arrested and confessed to having murdered his seven-year-old daughter, because, he said, the child had been terribly abused by its step-mother, and he couldn't stand it to see the little thing suffer; so he put her out of misery by forcing down her throat a quantity of carbolic acid.

—For the April crop report the Secretary of State has received reports from 873 townships, the majority being from the southern tier of counties. The condition of wheat in the southern counties is 87 and in the northern 93 per cent., but correspondents state it is too early to make a satisfactory estimate. The roots are believed to be in good condition, notwithstanding alternate freezes and thaws. Ten per cent. of clover is winter-killed, the condition of the remainder being 92 per cent. The total number of bushels of wheat reported marketed from August to March is 2,021,521, or 39 per cent of last year's crop.

—The use of cocaine is becoming too prevalent. A bank cashier named MacDonald and J. A. Fisk, proprietor of the City Laundry, of Detroit, are the two latest victims. Fisk began using cocaine last summer for catarrh by painting his nostrils with it, and later took it internally. A few days ago he was removed to Harper Hospital for treatment. He is full of vagaries, alternately imagining that he is the Almighty, and again asserting that he has been raised from the dead. MacDonald wandered to Toronto while suffering from mental aberration caused by the drug. Several other more or less prominent Detroiters are said to be in a bad way from using the drug.

—The Greenbackers of this State held a conference at Lansing the 13th inst. The Executive Committee of the State Central Committee was reorganized and resolutions offered and adopted inviting laboring men to unite with them in the common cause of relieving labor of the burdens now imposed upon it, that of producing all and paying all and still being denied every luxury that capital enjoys. On making the call for the next convention general enough to include all parties who believe with them, it was also resolved, "that this conference is in deep sympathy with the Knights of Labor and all the laboring classes in their struggle for life, liberty and bread," with only one dissenting vote. A resolution indorsing the issue of gold and silver certificates was tabled.

—The Detroit Assessors are considering an addition to their books, directly involving nearly $6,000,000 in that city and indirectly affecting $20,000,000 throughout the State. Outside banks were restricted—in many States by usury laws and in others by a slack demand—from loaning their funds at more than six per cent. The development of the northern part of the State took about $15,000,000 of this outside money into the State. In Detroit about $6,000,000 was invested. Legal mortgages amounting to many million dollars pay their full rates, but the foreign ones do not. The reason why this enormous sum escaped taxation was that the law provided no means for collecting the tax after it was levied. The lender being a resident of another State, had nothing here on which levy could be made. It is believed that recent changes of the law have provided a means for reaching foreign mortgages, and it is intended to make up a case to test and settle the matter.

THE JOURNAL.

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

Notes and News.

The Petoskey Democrat commenced its twelfth year with the issue for last week. Mr. J. G. Hill, as editor, is keeping the paper up in good shape while the syndicate of owners are casting about for a good man to come and take the business off their hands. It is an excellent opening for a good live democrat.

"When capital organizes, there is no outcry; when men organize for legislation or corruption, there is no outcry; but when workingmen organize, men wonder what it is all coming to."—H. W. Beecher.

The Manistee Advocate and the Manistee Printing Co. have combined their forces, and now claim to have the "largest, newest, and choicest line of job type north of Detroit." Their outfit of presses and engines is also complete.

The name of I. M. Weston, of Grand Rapids, has been put forward for governor on the democratic ticket.

C. J. Pailthorp has been re-elected village attorney for Petoskey for the ensuing year.

Letters are Sacred.

WASHINGTON, April 15.—An interesting story comes to the postoffice department from North Platte, Neb. One of four accessories to a murder near that place a year ago has turned state's evidence. Two of his accomplices have been arrested, but the fourth, Eugene Myers, is still at liberty. The postmaster at North Platte has been requested by the sheriff and the foreman of the grand jury to detain all letters passing through the office to and from Myers' family, believing that Eugene's wife knows where he is, and is writing to him. They desire to open the letters and after reading them send them to their destination. He asks the department whether he is authorized to do this. The department calls attention to the ruling of the department that under no pretext are letters to be opened. Neither postmasters, inspectors, employes or officers of the law can do so under any circumstances, but they must be delivered as addressed. Some other means, they say, must be devised to ascertain Myers' whereabouts.

A Prohibition Straw.

In Otsego the democrats and republicans fused to beat the prohibitionists. The prohibitionists came out ahead.

A Japanese Scene.

About midway in the feast three girls of sweet and serious countenance came in with their musical instruments and played to us divertingly. After one instrumental piece the panels slipped aside and three geishas, or dancing girls, came gliding upon the scene, arrayed in exquisite kimonos, or dresses of pale blue silk, brocaded with flaming branches of crimson and gold maple leaves. Their broad sashes, or obis, confining the folds of the loose dresses at the waist, were the most gorgeous of the rich old gold brocades; folds of contrasting crape were laid in the pointed neck of their kimonos, and the glossy blue-black hair was dressed in elaborate puffs and loops, held by twists of bright crape and thrust full of silver hairpins. They carried fans of gilt paper painted with maple leaves, and to the music of the samisen, and the plaintive voices of the musicians chanting the song of the "Maple Leaf," these lovely creatures danced out that poem. The dancing was all gliding and posing to the slow measures of the song. The little white-stockinged feet slipping over the polished matting and showing in glimpses at the bottom of the long kimonos, the bodies thrown in graceful poses, and the play of the pretty fans were each studies in themselves. The slow and graceful evolutions, the eloquent play of foot and fan, and the exquisite beauty and picturesqueness of the faces and figures were most enchanting, and it was hard to realize that I was not dreaming that this gallery of living Japanese pictures moved before me. It was the realization of all that fancy paints for one who builds up an ideal Japan from the fine decorations of its art works, and instead of disappointing in any particular the three lovely geishas, in their maple-leaf dresses, surpassed all dreams. The second time the geishas came in they were arrayed in kimonos of dark steel-blue crape shot with maple leaves, and their obis were of gold brocade. In those exquisite costumes, with many poses and gestures, they danced for us their song of the four seasons, the maple-leaf fans fluttering finally to the floor as the slender little figures crouched and shivered in the cold winds of autumn. Another dance represented the rainy day, the three pretty creatures clad in plaid dark-blue kimonos and carrying paper umbrellas, as they posed and guided to the twanging of the Oriental lute. The last dance was in solo by one geisha, arrayed in a dark, mysterious kimono, with a piece of crape wound about her head, who sang with the musicians, and in long recitatives told of the woes of the heroine of a sadly pathetic tale from the Japanese classics.—Tokio Cor. Chicago Inter-Ocean-Democrat.

Senator Palmer, of Detroit, Mich., has been prowling about the old homestead at Ashford, Conn., where he was born, and has shipped thence a large number of old household relics, with which he will fill a log cabin which he has built on his grounds at home. The astonished rural expressman told the sender that "the hull lot ain't worth the express cost, stranger." Small trees of every available kind on the old place are to be taken up and transplanted about the log cabin, also huckleberry and blackberry bushes; and, to complete the miniature New England which he proposes to lay out around his Michigan cabin, the millionaire Senator even thinks of shipping a car-load of genuine New England rocks from the old farm to the smooth and stoneless West.

Probably the most fortunate men identified with the turf have been the Dwyer brothers, of New York. In 1876 they started by winning $17,680. Since then their winnings have been enormous. During the year 1880 their winnings amounted to $77,902. In 1881 $84,146 was placed on the right side of their ledger. The year following they won $74,340, and in 1883 they surpassed all records by winning a clear total of $138,000. Their luck was not so good in 1884, as only $60,000 was credited to them. This year their winnings will pass the $100,000 mark, and, having grown wealthy off their fleet steeds, they intend to withdraw from the track.

Here are a couple of anecdotes of the late Emery A. Storrs which appear in the New York Tribune: "We are told of a remark made by Storrs after an incident of Lord Coleridge's visit to this country. Storrs gave him a supper at Chicago. A tailor to whom Storrs owed an account attached the supper at the hotel where it was laid just before it was to be served. Storrs appealed to the friends who had been invited to the dinner, and the money was promptly raised. As he paid the bill he said, 'This is the first time in the history of the world that a Lord's supper has been attached for debt.' Mr. Chance said that Storrs, who was at one time a hard drinker, said to him: 'Chance, I never come to New York and start down Broadway, even in cold weather, without getting on the shady side of the street.' 'Why, what is that for?' asked Chance, when Storrs responded: 'This town is confoundedly demoralizing, and I daren't walk in the sun for fear my shadow will ask me in to drink.'"

Look Out for Them.

We give below a form of contract which has been the means of swindling a great many honest but unsuspecting people. By cutting in two at the space between the two stars it will be readily seen how the contract is changed to a promissory note.

One day after date I promise to pay John Smith or bearer, Thirty Dollars, when I shall sell by order Three Hundred and Twenty-five Dollars worth of PATENT SEEDING MACHINES for value received, at six per cent per annum, said Thirty Dollars, when due, to be payable at Indianapolis, Ind.

JOHN JONES.

Cure for Piles.

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he has some affection of the kidneys or neighboring organs. At times, symptoms of indigestion are present, flatulency, uneasiness of the stomach, etc. A moisture, like perspiration, producing a very disagreeable itching, after getting warm, is a common attendant. Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Boschee's Pile Remedy, which acts directly upon the parts affected, absorbing the Tumors, allaying the intense itching, and effecting a permanent cure. Price 50 cents. Sold by Geo. W. Crouter. 152.

Local Notes and News.

Clement J. Strang, Editor.

Storm houses come down, and awnings go up.

The Smithson cottage is now in the telephone exchange.

W. H. Harris has retired from the Rifenburg Milling Co.

Mr. Chas. Swallow arrived yesterday on the Champlain.

Capt. Aldrich went Monday to take his place on the Faxton.

Ben Weaver's mother was taken quite sick this morning.

Mrs. Aldrich came home from Coldwater on the Friday stage.

Special examination of teachers to morrow at the school house.

Geo. Miller goes to Chicago on the Champlain to buy clothing.

W. H. Carr is building an addition to his residence on Clinton street.

Temperance column and other interesting matter on our supplement pages.

P. L. and W. H. Lanway, of South Arm, were among our callers on Tuesday.

F. J. Meech is grubbing the superflous trees and stumps in his grove on the terrace.

W. A. Cooper of East Jordan will be with us this summer, and operate the skating rink.

There is a fine little girl baby at D. Sherwood's, but we promised to say nothing about it.

The next time the Champlain comes she will fetch a big stock of furnishing goods for Geo. Miller.

A. D. Cruickshank returned yesterday from a three day's stay in East Jordan on legal business.

Among the Charlevoix cargo on the Champlain was six horses, the property of Chas. Swallow.

The Charlevoix Mfg. Co. have run their factory with a small force this week, but expect to increase in a few days.

That duck in Geo. Miller's window, which was mounted by F. A. Cochran, looks as natural as life. It was shot by C. Y. Cook.

Mrs. Phebe Thompson, while climbing over a fence Tuesday, caught her toe in a bush and fell, fracturing the bone near the thigh.

James Hubbard has bought R. Gidley's interest in the Eastport mail and stage route, and made his first trip on Tuesday.

Harry Chamberlin came over from Charlevoix on Saturday. We understand that he contemplates the purchase of a meat market in Charlevoix to start in business on his own account.—Petoskey Record.

Dallas Boudeman, of Kalamazoo, has rented his cottage on the Charlevoix resort to Geo. H. Russel, of Detroit, for the season of 1886.

A special meeting of the members of the Historical society is called for Friday evening, at R. W. Kane's. All are requested to be present.

The jewelry firm of M. S. Moulton & Co., of East Jordan, has been dissolved, and the stock divided. A. D. Cruickhsank, of Charlevoix, was one the arbitrators.

On Tuesday we received from F. W. Hathaway, of Chicago, manager of the western department of the Redpath Lyceum Bureau, a fine large portrait of the late John B. Gough.

Joe Beauvais makes as fine an oar as a man can wish for,—either straight or spoon. His double and single paddles are equally superior. Look over his new advertisement.

The Boy's Band gave the first of their open air concerts on the streets Tuesday evening. Judging from the number they called out, this effort is going to be equally successfull with the others they have made.

Alfred VanDusen has a Leicestershire ewe, nine years old this spring, which has just given birth to her ninth pair of twins,—fifteen rams and three ewes—seventeen of which have been raised.

The orchestra at the Congregational Sunday school was a delight to all. Mr. Bradbeer has gone further with his organization and training this week, and this attractive feature promises to be a grand success.

C. Budd is refitting his agate works with new laps, with iron frames, cast and fitted up by the Charlevoix Iron Works. With the new machinery run by steam he will doubtless make the agate business lively this summer.

An Easter sermon at the Congregational church next Sunday morning by the pastor; and in the evening, the Sunday school will give an Easter entertainment, consisting of songs, recitations, and select and responsive readings, to which all are invited. Be sure you bring your Bibles.

Mr. Stauffer, of Carpenter, Emmet Co., has recently patented, and is now manufacturing, a broadcast hand seeder, which promises to be a grand success, and a profitable machine for farmers to invest in. Read his advertisement in another column. We have one of these machines at the Journal office, and will be pleased to show it to any farmer who will take the trouble to drop in.

Building Notes.

A new sidewalk in front of Geo. Miller's.

Will Ferguson has the frame up for a new barn.

A new wall is being laid under the Fountain City House.

E. E. Mudge is building a new front fence of square pickets.

W. A. Brown has begun work on his new residence on the north side.

J. T. Kirkpatrick, is just nailing the pickets on a to a new front fence.

Harrison Bedford has built a bay window on the south side of his house.

Mrs. Jane Widdifield has the frame up for a new house on Lincoln avenue.

J. A. Hawkins has the foundation for a new porch on the front of his residence.

Chas. See is making some additions and improvements to the interior of his residence.

The Newman House has taken a coat of paint this week, and now looks as bright as new.

C. Budd is putting up a summer kitchen, on Mr. Geboo's lot, occupied by Mrs. A. L. McLain.

Isaac Mills is raising a barn to-day, in hopes to have it finished before the busy summer season.

Street commissioner Suffield is doing some good work on the crosswalks, sidewalks, etc.

A new coat of paint on Stockman & Iddings' front makes it a Quaker's drab with green trimmings.

John Kirby has his house, on Sherman street, enclosed, and with Heath & Francis over the work, it will soon be ready for occupancy.

No sooner is the frost out of the ground, and pleasant days returned than building of various and all descriptions begins in almost every part of town.

J. S. Smithson has given the contract to Mr. Shrier for a new well on his lot near his cottage. Mr. Shrier is also putting new brick in the well of the Chicago Club House.

John Mason has his new house, on the terrace across from Washburn & Ackert's, nearly enclosed. He has a fine situation, and from the frame of his building, it will correspond with the location.

On Dixon avenue, Mrs. Pope is having the siding put on her house that was begun last fall. Mr. Philip Howe, has added a bay window, and veranda; and Geo. Pappin is building a kitchen on the rear of his house.

Upright & Emrey have decided to enlarge their dock, making it 226 feet long and some 40 or 50 feet further into the lake. It will then be the most commodious dock in Charlevoix. They will put a large warehouse upon one side, and prepare themselves in every way for their fast increase in business. The work was begun by L. E. Allen's pile-driver yesterday.

Upright avenue has two new houses under way. One is the property of Mr. Chas. Cook,—a nice cozy little residence which he will be able to move into soon. The other is owned by Mr. Bartlett, who has not begun the work of building, but has the lumber on the ground. Mr. Shrier, on this same street, is putting a wing on his house for a kitchen, bedroom, and pantry.

Miscellaneous Marine.

The familiar whistle of the Clara Belle is heard as we go to press.

The water is 10 ft. deep in the streets of Montreal, and the city is in darkness.

The Mockingbird was the first vessel out by one day, She cleared Monday.

The Friant left Frankfort for this port yesterday, and arrived here as we go to press.

Two of Davis & Co.'s fish tugs, the Grayling and the Fisherman arrived Sunday afternoon.

The familiar music of the Sea Wing was heard for the first time this season on Tuesday.

The Algomah was greeted by a salute from the fort, on Friday after her first trip of the season.

The schooners Mockingbird and Hercules loaded with ties at Upright & Emrey's last Saturday.

P. S. Brown went Monday to take his place as engineer of the Morley, now lying at Traverse City.

Capt. Wilber left Leland Monday, to superintend the refitting of the steamer City of Grand Rapids.

The Champlain reached Harbor Springs and Cross Village with but little interference from the ice.

The schooner F. M. Smith took her first cargo of posts from Carpenter, Bartholomew, & Co.'s dock last Saturday.

There was a hearty good handshaking when Capt. Casey of the Champlain came ashore yesterday morning.

A company has been formed to put in a canal 50 feet wide and 8 feet deep, to utilize the water power of the St. Mary's river. The estimated expense is $500,000.

The first boat in this season was the Evening Star of Sheboygan, which was towed in this port Sunday morning by the tug Martin. She came light, and is now loading at Dwight's landing, with wood and ties for Milwaukee.

The job of swinging the bridge was again given to James Martin, this time at $1 per day of 24 hours, for seven days to the week. This is a little more humane than 70 cents a day paid last year for the same labor; but with nobody at fault, it is a little too low yet.

The oil painting in Geo. Miller's window, representing the entrance of steamer City of Grand Rapids into the harbor of Charlevoix, receives praise from all who see it. It is the work of Mr. F. Lubow, and we predict for him a round sum for it when the resorters come.

The Martin seems to be taking the cake this spring. She brought the first boat in and took the first out. She accompanied the Mockingbird some 16 miles, on Monday; and the little fleet composed of the Hercules, Lottie Mason and Florence M. Smith, 14 miles. We can testify that the captain is an accommodating man, and keeps a crew "after his own heart." and deserves a rich patronage this summer.

On the night of the 1st the steam barge Burlington, en route to Cleveland with the barges Star of Hope and Vannetta in tow, were struck by a gale when off Point Pelee. They anchored one and tried to hold on to the other, but both were driven on shore and completely wrecked. They will prove a total loss. The crews had a narrow escape, but all were saved. One man lost the fingers of one hand.—Manistique Pioneer.

John V. Tuttle, inspector, says that the propeller Lawerance, of the Northern Michigan line, has just completed the most thorough rebuild that he has ever seen on a "canal" propeller or vessel. There is 35 feet of new keel; entire new stern to forward of the fire hold. New stem and entire new bow; new floor timbers; new keelsons and deadwoods, all new ceiling, new arches, new deck beams where needed, new hanging knees on every beam fore and aft, new stanchions, upper stringers, rail and bulwarks, all new gangways, new pawl post, windlass, bits and timber heads, new outside planking from keel to lower wale strike. Hull refastened with seven-eights through bolts from stem to stern (three tons of iron used). Hull and decks caulked all over. Boiler and engine put in best possible repair. General outfit first class throughout in every respect.

☞Elegant styles in new spring parasols just received at F. W. Craine & Co.'s.

Death of Mrs. Lamphear.

Mrs. B. W. Lamphear died last Sunday afternoon, after several week's illness with varions fevers, the latter of which was typhoid.

Mr. and Mrs. Lamphere, (nee, Katie Keyes,) were married last October, and the blow fell exceedingly heavy upon the young husband, and indeed upon the whole family, of which she was the pet. The funeral occurred on Tuesday, at the M. E. church, Rev. VanAuken officiating.

The bereaved family desired the Journal to express their gratitude for the assistance and sympathy offered in their hour of affliction.

Broke His Leg.

Richard Cooper began Monday the work of putting a new wall under the Fountain City House. The party who was hauling the stone having a fractions team, Mr. Cooper undertook to help him unload. After the stones were thrown off, in climbing down, the boards tipped up and he fell, breaking his right leg just above the ankle. The wound was dressed, and he is now doing well; although he got no sleep for two days, and suffered an agony of pain. The confinement at this season of the year is as hard to bear as the pain itself.

Notice.

The school board desire to call the attention of the parents of school children within the district to the following rule which was adopted Nov. 14th, 1880, by the board.

Sec. 1. No pupil shall be admitted to any department of the school under five years of age. Pupils are required to commence attendance promptly at the beginning of each term, to be regular and punctual, to conform to the regulations, and to yield prompt obedience to all directions of teachers.

It is found necessary to enforce particularly that portion of the rule which is in italics above, owing to the crowded condition of the school, but more particularly the lowest primary department, which has 80 scholars as regular attendants.

By order of school board.
J. Milo Eaton, Director.

Ellsworth.

MOTHER'S MENDING BASKET.

BY ABBIE KINNE.

Over and under, and in and out,
The swift little needle flies;
For always between her and idleness
The mending basket lies;
And the patient hands, though weary,
Work lovingly on and on
At tasks that never are finished;
For mending is never done.

She takes up the father's stocking,
And skillfully knits in the heel,
And smooths the seam with a tender touch,
That he may no roughness feel;
And her thoughts to her merry girlhood
And her early wifehood go,
And she smiles at the first pair of stockings
She knit so long ago.

Then she speaks to the little maiden
Learning to knit at her side,
And tells her about these stockings
Uneven and shapeless and wide—
"I had to ravel them out, my dear;
Don't be discouraged, but try,
And after awhile you'll learn to knit
As swift and even as I."

She takes up a little white apron,
And thinks of the woeful face
Of her darling when she came crying:
"O, mamma, I've torn my lace."
So she mended the child's pet apron;
Then took up a tiny shoe,
And fastened a stitch that was broken,
And tied the ribbon of blue.

The maiden has wearied of working
And gone away to her play;
The sun in the west is sinking
At the close of the quiet day.
Now the mother's hands are resting
Still holding a stocking of red,
And her thoughts in the twilight shadow
To the far off future have fled.

"O, where will the little feet wander
Before they have time to rest?
Where will the bright hands be pillowed
When the mother's loving breast
Is under the spring's blue violets,
And under the summer grass,
When over fell the autumn leaves,
And the storms of winter pass?"

And a prayer from her heart she utters:
"God bless them, my dear ones all!
O, it may be many, many years
Ere sorrow to them befall!"
To her work from the mending basket
She turns with a heart at rest:
For she knows that to husband and children
She is always the first and best.

THE WIDOW DURRELL'S MATRIMONIAL PLANS.

BY MISS H. MARIA GEORGE.

"I'm sure, Carrie, I don't know what better you could do," said the Widow Durrell, with a sigh, as she stood in the "smoke-house," or summer-kitchen, one May morning, with her sleeves rolled up, doing the semi-weekly churning; "and he's a good match enough for any girl in town."

"But, mother," said Carrie, throwing her sun-bonnet on a chair and proceeding to wash the greens she had just picked, "how am I to know what his intentions are? He may not want to marry at all."

"There, that's like you, Cad Durrell," groaned the widow. "Not know what his intentions are, and he's been coming here off and on these six months. Of course, Tom is anxious to marry. He's got a large farm, and ain't that kind of a fellow to fool round as some I have known."

"That may be, mother; but, supposing Tom Stapleton don't care anything about me, but does care for somebody else."

Mrs. Durrell stopped kneading the golden mass of butter, and looked her youngest daughter keenly in the face. All of the widow's girls and there were four sisters, were allowed to be comely maidens; but Carrie was decidedly the flower of the flock in that respect, recalling Byron's description of Dudu:

"Large, languid and lazy,
And of a beauty that would drive you crazy."

She was tall and plump of form, with a velvet-complexioned face, soft, dreamy blue eyes, a tipped up, wicked little chin, lips just made to be kissed, and a swath of bronzy hair with sunlight shining in every fold and ripple. "Languid and lazy" she undeniably was—no vulgar haste about her. Her brisk, energetic mother had been heard more than once to wish that a wasp would sting Carrie; just to see if she could get around any faster. A wasp never did sting Carrie, and she never got around any faster.

"Who should he care for if it isn't you, I'd like to know, Cad Durrell?" ejaculated the widow, after a sharp glance. "If you wasn't so mortally slow you might have been settled before this time, same as Phœbe and Sally Ann. But lo! you'll grow gray first."

A ripple of silvery laughter issued from the sweet red lips, and the bronzed head was tossed aloft in pretty scorn.

"Why, mother Durrell, you certainly don't wish me to marry a man who doesn't want me! I think it's Lu that Tom's after, only he doesn't dare speak out."

"Lu shant marry him. I'll be bound," cried her mother, hotly. "You know that all along I've planned for her to be 'Squire Raynor's wife. She isn't strong enough to do the drudgery of a farm."

"But she's got faculty, you've always said that," said Carrie, with a peculiar smile.

"Yes, she's got faculty, which you hain't," declared the widow, emphatically. "Her bread never burns and her cream's sure to come faster. You never did have luck about such things"

Of all human afflictions, a daughter who seemed to be created without the boon of "faculty" was the severest to a driving New England housewife like Mrs Polly Durrell

A slim, gypsy-looking girl, with great dark eyes like sloes, and wearing a crimson shawl coquettishly over her black hair, entered the kitchen at that instant.

"Mother, 'Squire Raynor's asked me, and I am going—"

Mrs. Durrell looked up eagerly and a warm flush crept into her matronly face. "Of course you accepted him," she exclaimed.

"Oh, I don't mean that he has popped the question," said the girl, looking down with a pretty flush. "Why, mother, how you have upset me. As if he could ever care anything for me. He's only asked me to teach the summer term of school. Do you think I can?"

"Of course you'll take it," cried the widow. "Why, it's just the chance you need above all others, and, Lu, if you are smart you can be mistress of Raynor Hall before Christmas."

Lu blushed hotly and drooped her scarlet face, while she gave her shoulders a very slight upward motion. She would have cared more for a look from a certain pair of eyes than for all 'Squire Raynor's wealth, his big house, conservatories, and all; but she did not care to tell her mother so.

"I think I will try the school at any rate," she said, after a pause, very thoughtfully. "It is eighteen dollars a month and board, and I can walk the distance from here easily enough." And without waiting to hear her mother's answer she tripped away merrily humming "Auld Lang Syne."

"Don't you see how luck favors Lu?" said the widow. "She will win the 'Squire, and I don't know of anybody else who'd make him happier or a more careful housekeeper. I've always said she was cut out for a lady. Now, Cad, if you will bring Stapleton to terms, I can go down to my grave feeling easy, as knowing that you are all settled."

"Oh, mother, you mustn't say anything about dying yet awhile," cried Carrie, affectionately. "And I am sure you need not worry about either Lu or me. We can take care of ourselves, I am sure."

"No woman can take care of herself," declared Mrs. Durrell, strongly, "She needs a husband and—and children. I don't believe in single women at all. But it's no use talking with you, I suppose. Some folks don't know what's good for them," with which she gave a ball of butter a finishing slap, as if to give emphasis to her words.

Carrie quietly raised the greens in the water and smiled placidly, her temper not at all disturbed by her mother's imputation concerning her perceptions; but the widow would have had an anopleetic fit if she had known all that was in her daughter's mind.

Lu's school began Monday of the second week after the conversation in the summer kitchen, and Mrs. Durrell was never so proud in her life as when she saw her favorite daughter ride away with 'Squire Raynor in his elegant canopied phaeton.

"Mark my word, she'll ride in that as her own before the year's out," she said to Carrie, "unless she's lost her faculty."

Mrs. Durrell was one of those who thought that faculty had quite as much to do in getting folks married as sentiment. Faculty ruled the world to her mind.

Some three weeks passed, when one night Lu came home with a flushed face and anxious eyes.

"Well, it's my last day of school," she said, as she sat down with a sigh in the large rocker by the window and fanned herself.

"Why, what is the matter, Lu?" asked her sister.

"'Squire Raynor's two boys are sick, and several others have left on account of sickness, and he told me this noon that he did not deem it advisable to continue the term any longer. It is small-pox, so Dr. Jones says, and there's a terrible panic."

"Dear me, the small-pox! Why, that's perfectly awful!" explained Mrs. Durrell. "Like enough we shall all have it, now you have been exposed. There's nothing like using every precaution," and the widow caught up the camphor bottle, and sprinkled them generously with its contents.

"I do hope it won't spread," murmured Lu. "I don't want to be pock-marked for life."

"Goodness knows, we don't want to be down with it, and having coming on, and all the hired help to take care of," ejaculated her mother. "I can stand somethings, but I couldn't that. I wonder how it happened to break out in the 'Squire's family."

"He and little Frankie were in Boston two weeks ago, and I suppose the boy took the contagion some way. It seems real hard for the 'Squire. All his servants have left him and he cannot get anyone to act as nurse for love or money. Not even Paulina Heath, the Poor Farm Hospital nurse, will risk her life at any price. He offered me five dollars a week to go up and do what I could."

"As if his children were anything to you!" cried the widow. "You'd been sure to have caught the disease and perhaps have died with it. You showed your good sense in refusing to go."

"Mother," said Carrie, very abruptly, "I don't think it's Christian to let those children lie and suffer and not stir hand or foot to save them. I think I shall go to Raynor Hall."

Mrs. Durrell gave a gasp of incredulous amazement.

"You go out to nursing 'Squire Raynor's children? You must be crazy, Cad Durrell!"

"I never was more sane in my life," replied Cad. "If he succeeds in getting no one else I shall go to-morrow. I am sure it is my duty."

"Fiddlesticks! It's a duty to take proper care of one's self, and if you go up there I shall know you are not in your right mind." And Mrs. Durrell leaned back with a hollow groan, looking as if she really had doubts of her daughter's sanity.

But Carrie was in earnest, and the next morning she went up to the great house, which seemed very still and deserted.

"Don't ever come back till you have had it and got well, for I won't have you in the house. It's running plump in the face of Providence, and that I don't believe one has a right to," said Mrs. Durrell, as Carrie rode away.

They were cold, cruel words, but the widow considered them eminently generous and practical.

"Of course, she'll have it and die with it; it will be just her luck. I'd just as soon go and take a dose of strychnine."

Carrie had but little time to think of herself or anything else, save her two little patients. It was new work for her, but she had a kind heart and she was strong, and those qualities went a great ways. She made no mistakes, and she had a certain reserve power that made her services doubly valuable.

Frank and Harry Raynor were very, very ill, and for days there was small hope of their recovery. 'Squire Raynor hardly left the darkened chamber, and only to the nurses as the old physician did he speak a word. At the end of three weeks, however, the disease turned and the doctor pronounced the children out of danger

"It is owing more to your care than the doctor's skill, Miss Durrell," said the 'Squire. "How shall I ever repay you?"

"You have paid me for my work; as for the rest, it was my duty," said Carrie.

"The others did not think it was their duty to risk their lives to save an old man's two motherless boys," returned 'Squire Raynor, sternly; "why should you have done so? You are an angel and——"

"Oh, no, 'Squire Raynor, only a very common piece of clay," answered Carrie, hastening away with scarlet cheeks.

But two or three weeks afterward, when Frank and Harry were out at play for the first time on the sunny lawn, and Carrie sat in the porch doing crochet work, the 'Squire came out and gazed thoughtfully at the picture.

"Boys," said he, at length, "how would you like a mother, a real nice, new mother?"

"Oh, ever so much, papa!" cried Harry; "that is, if we could have Miss Durrell."

"Oh, you silly boy," began Carrie, but she was interrupted by the 'Squire. "You have heard their verdict, Miss Durrell—Carrie. You can make them happy, and—and I love you. Will you not stay, Carrie, my Carrie, and be mistress of Raynor Hall?"

And before she had spoken he knew by the look in her eyes that she would not refuse him.

Mrs. Durrell was thunderstruck when she learned the news. To think that after all Carrie, who had no tact, no faculty at all, should have won rich 'Squire Raynor, the great man of the village. "Why," as she expressed it, "it beat all."

But the surprises were not all over, for Lu plucked up courage the same night to tell her mother that young Stapleton had proposed, and that, with her consent, they were to be married at Christmas.

"Go along and marry him if you want to," cried her mother. "Girls are the queerest creatures! I really believe you two have been conspiring against your poor mother, who had the trouble of bringing you into the world and has always done so much for you."

"Why, mother, it is no such thing," said Lu, going and kissing her. "Only we cannot send our hearts where we will. Love goes, you know, it does not come by calling."

For all this, however, Mrs. Durrell insists that her two youngest daughters most willfully and unwarrantably defeated her matrimonial plans.—Chicago Ledger.

Race Prejudice.

In the North American Review Gail Hamilton dwells on the subject of "Race Prejudice," a subject of never-failing interest to Americans—particularly to Americans of the Southern States. She does not believe that the amalgamation of the races is a matter that concerns the churches, even the Congregationalist churches, which are nearer to heaven than any other. The negro, she thinks, hugs his race prejudice as closely as does the Caucasian, and though no one knows what is to come, the white and black should at present be let to work out their salvation each for himself, leaving God to shape the destinies of the races. She says:

"If the races are providential, the race line is providential. If it is God who made the white man white and the black man black, it is God who made each, choose to consort with his own. To say that Providence intended the race line to be perpetuated is not to lay to Providence the bondage, injustice, and anguish which have attended its perpetuation. It is abundantly worth while to throw life and treasure and national existence into the resolution that no human being shall be enslaved. It is better to die a thousand deaths than to do this great wrong against man, and sin against God. But it is not worth while to put even the contents of one contribution box into an attempt to secure by external pressure what is much better left to the working of natural causes, the adjustment of social relations. It is kicking against the pricks where there is no occasion to kick at all."

* * * "Nor will it be bad discipline for the Congregationalists to tarry in Jericho till their beards be grown, and they have learned that while we have the right and are under obligation to demand in the South absolute political equality and civil rights for all, we have no right whatever to meddle with the social relations of the ecclesiastical allinities in the South; that we might just as reasonably refuse to help educate their ignorant masses unless the white will wear a three-cornered hat instead of a derby, as refuse it unless the white and black will go to the same church; that, in short, the pigments of Providence are not obliterated because we stubbornly prove ourselves to be color-blind."

How Bill Lit the Fire.

"Mebby you've seen my boy Bill hanging around here!" queried a farmer of a policeman at the Central Market yesterday. "He's a common-looking chap, a little bow-backed, and has red mittens, a blue comforter and a scared look."

"I saw such a chap about an hour ago, but he's a man grown."

"So's Bill. He's as big as anybody, but he don't know nuthin'. The other morning he got up to start the fire, and come to look around he couldn't find a match in the house. It's half a mile to the nearest naybur's, and what did that smart son of mine do? He put the kindling into the cook stove, tucked some paper under it, and then got down the shot-gun to try a brilliant experiment. He thought the flames of the powder would set the kindlings going and save him a tramp."

"And didn't it?"

"Why, the long-legged ignoramus never stopped to see if the gun wasn't already loaded, when, as a matter of fact, she had a big charge of powder and a handful of buck-shot already down. When that gun went off the report riz everybody out of bed in a twinkling, and away went all the glass in the kitchen windows. We haven't got the house fairly clear of smoke and ashes yet, while the charge of shot blew the whole back of the stove out."

"What did the boy do?"

"He was lying on his back on the floor when I got down. I got some water and put out the conflagration in his hair and eye-brows and goatee, and then I led him to the back door and gave him a lift which lit him over a snow-drift six feet high. I guess I was a little too hasty. I heard he came to town, and I thought I'd hunt him up and sort o' apologize."

At that moment Bill came around a corner of a butcher market, and the father held out his hand and said:

"Bill, you are the biggest fool in the State of Michigan, but you can come back home all the same."

"Do you want me to?"

"Sartin. You don't know 'nuff to chaw gum, and it's a wonder you hain't bin bit by cats since you left home. Git in thar' and mind the team, while I go and price a new cook-stove."—Detroit Free Press.

THE FIRST STRIKE.

The Rebellion of the Factory Girls at Dover, N. H., in 1827.

The first strike among our working people, I think, was at Dover, N. H., in 1827 or 1828. The Cocheco works were established in 1820, and the operatives were a most entirely American girls, who deemed that weaving and spinning were better than farming, and became "factory girls" on the erection of the works at Dover Falls. A small factory up the river was No. 1, and the works at the falls were Nos. 2, 3 and 4, as I believe they are at the present time. Everything went on spinning y and smoothly until the year of which I write. There were exactions on the part of the corporations that the independent spirit of the fair spinners and weavers could not brook. A rule was made that the great gate should be shut at bell ringing, and those who were late should go through the counting-room passageway to be marked for reduction of pay largely disproportioned to the delinquency. This gave great offense, other measures awakened opposition, and on a fine morning the mills were idle. Every operative was out, leaving the overseers to run them alone. They met at some convenient square, and, forming a procession, with a band, and bearing the American flag, they paraded the town, under a leader whom I very well knew a year later, and a stalwart manly guard of one for their protection. The corporation came down at once, the offensive rules were withdrawn for the time, and everything went on harmoniously. But there arose again threats of war between James F. Curtis, a new agent, and Mill No. 2. He was not a fortunate selection for the office, as he had been a sea captain, and endeavored to introduce ship's discipline among his crew of girls. It would not work, and a general irritation prevailed. The climax was reached when he ordered the windows of No. 2 to be nailed down. This was done over night, and in the morning, when they found out what had been done, and one of the loom girls had fainted, their anger knew no bounds. A strike in that mill was the consequence. I saw the excited crowd from an upper window opposite, and such a clatter of tongues has not been heard since Babel. Agent Curtis was sent for, and went among them, angry at first, but that bird wouldn't fight, and he came down to coaxing, begging them to return, arguing the necessity for the nailing down, which excited them the more, until he compromised the matter by allowing the windows to be opened part way. Other inducements were given, and they returned to their work, but during the altercation with him they had spotted his black coat with cotton locks until he looked like a new description of leopard.—Boston letter in Hartford Post.

Skinning Cattle by Electricity.

The depreciation in value of hides from what are known in the trade as "scores," "snips," and "cuts," says the San Francisco Chronicle, is large, and the introduction of improved labor-saving appliances for taking off animal skins without injury to either the hide or the carcass has been so slow and of so unimportant a nature hitherto that the thousands of persons engaged in the industry on this coast can not but experience a certain degree of satisfaction over the introduction in California of an appliance which would appear to be what the trade has been waiting for all along. The invention is called an electric sliding-knife, and is, like nearly all other good inventions simplicity itself, being virtually nothing more than a slight alteration of the Edison incandescent or arc light, with the glass bulb removed. The knife in construction resembles very much the receiver employed in telephone offices, and, like it, has a double set of covered or insulated wires attached to the butt end of the handle, connecting through the body of the same to the cutting, or, more properly, the burning edge or wire, which is composed of platinum. The current is entirely under the control of the manipulator of the knife. After the hide is opened in the usual way with an ordinary knife the current is turned on, and the removal of the hide is begun by long sweeps of the sider. The principle is that of burning, as the platinum edge is brought to an intense white heat, yet the edge is so arranged and protected by non-conducting shields that it is impossible to injure either the hide or the carcass. In fact, the hide seems to be torn or pulled off by some unexplained force of the wonderful agent, electricity. It has been demonstrated that meat will hold its color better and longer where the electric knife is used, this being accounted for by the fact that the pores are closed by the action of the current, which seems to leave a thin, transparent coating over the entire surface. Another advantage is that the beef, after leaving the chill-room, never "sweats," as under the old system of removing hides. Aside from the increased speed with which the skin is torn off, there is another advantage in the use of electricity. It is stated that the value of hides is increased from ½ to 1 cent a pound, as the fleshy side is left as smooth and even as the inner side of a sheep's pelt.

THE JOURNAL

Charlevoix, Mich., April 22, 1886.

Killed by Strikes.

Thirty four years ago a number of prominent Detroit capitalists organized the Detroit Locomotive Works and erected the building on Third street, between Congress and Larned. The cash capital paid in was a quarter of a million dollars. The shop began with about 130 men, but has at times employed nearly 500 at once. It was the first shop in Detroit to abolish the store-pay system and pay every man's wages in hard cash. It was one of the first to advance wages when the war increased prices. Up to last June the works had paid out to the mechanics of Detroit over $2,000,000 in cash. For the first twelve years the stockholders steadily sunk money, but not once in that time were the wages of the men cut down. On the contrary there were three or four strikes which increased wages and made new assessments upon stockholders a necessity.

From 1862 to 1872 the works ought to have made money. They were paying men $2 to $5.50 per day, and paying cash, and had assisted scores of them to buy homes. In 1864 a contract was taken for more than $300,000 worth of work for New York parties. Wages were then at the highest notch, and in taking the contract all figuring was done on the prevailing basis. The work had scarcely entered the shop before there was a strike, and in the space of sixteen months the men struck eleven times. With each strike wages were advanced, until common mechanics were getting their $4.50 and $5 per day. The result was that the works lost $157,000 in clear cash

In all the thirty-four years not a single stockholder has made enough money to buy him a pair of boots. On the contrary his dead loss has been fully twenty per cent of what he put in. There have been in all over twenty strikes, and last June, realizing that the great shop could only be run at a loss as labor matters now are, it was decided to shut them down. There was still a kindly feeling towards the men, and when they proposed to take the shop and run it they were given the chance. It was decided that they should have the use of shops and tools, pay neither taxes nor insurance, and in case they made anything the profits should be divided. The shop is still being run in that way, but with the result that men who earned $3 and $4 per day with the company in control, now receive from $1.25 to $2.50. The profits have not been half enough to pay the taxes saying nothing of repairs and other incidentals. There has been sunk since the shop was established at least half a million of dollars of capital, saying nothing of the money received for work; and one of the officers said yesterday that it was not at all likely the place would ever be opened again. The stockholders would have been satisfied to keep their money in without making a dollar, but strike after strike necessitated assessment after assessment, and the result is that the great works, having a national reputation and giving a good living to half a thousand mechanics, two-thirds of them with families, is practically closed and gone to the dogs.

The history of the locomotive works is the history of three or four other great corporations here which are on the verge of closing and locking the doors. They have been running at a steady loss for years, and whenever a job was taken in which there might have been a profit a strike has occurred to bring about a dead loss. A stockholder in one of these concerns said yesterday:

"I have sunk $30,000 in the last five years. If I can sell my stock for fifty cents on a dollar I will put the money into bonds and never invest another penny in manufacturing of any sort."—Detroit Free Press.

Frauds in Fruit Trees.

Editor Journal, There is probably no other business in which there is such an opportunity for deception and fraud, as there is in the sale of fruit trees, and other nursery stock. And wherever an opportunity is offered, men will be found to do it, therefore it is done. It is your humble correspondent's fortune to be engaged in the sale of fruit trees. It is my experience that when deception and fraud is practiced, the whole business suffers. The public confidence and public faith in the business, and those engaged therein, is weakened, if not destroyed. Hence it becomes not only those engaged in the business, but every lover of fruit, to expose and oppose every fraud which he finds practiced upon the unsuspecting. The agents of the New Carlisle nurseries, of New Carlisle, Ohio, claimed that "the fruit trees that they were selling,- the apples at least, were grown from root grafts, worked upon imported Russian seedlings, and that said use of Russian seedlings secured to their tree perfect hardiness; on that account, their trees would never become black-hearted," etc. As proof of the falsity of this claim, I wish to submit a statement from a letter from Ellwanger & Barry, the famous nurserymen of Rochester, New York, who have been in the business over thirty years: "We do not know of any nurseryman having imported Russian apple seedlings to graft on." Also Storrs & Harrison, nurserymen of Painsville, Ohio: "We do not believe that their is one apple tree in this state that has been worked on imported Russian seedlings." Again, S. G. Bragg, proprietor of the Union nurseries of Kalamazoo, Mich: "The idea of imported roots from Russia is nonsense, and simply a dealer's trick." A. M. Peardy, Editor of the Fruit Recorder, of Palmyra, N. Y., and a nurseryman, adds his testimony: "That stuff about Russian apple trees on Russian seedling stock is a big humbug. There isn't a nurseryman * * * that can show a bill of apple seedling stock bought in Russia." The above is but a part of the testimony received to show the falsehood and deception of these Carlisle agents. Peter M. Gideon, proprietor of Excelsior nurseries, Minnesota, of whom no man living has had larger and more decided experience in testing fruit trees, and learning of the conditions of hardiness with them, writes in substance: "The use of Russian seedlings would be of no advantage to secure hardiness to fruit trees root grafted thereon. But few of the Russian varieties of apple prove hardy with us, and none sufficiently hardy to stand uninjured the cold of last winter. Of 350 Russian varieties, that we have been testing, only about 10 give satisfactory promise."

These men know whereof they speak, and their reputation is at stake in what they say, so that we can put confidence in every word of it; and should use every possible means to rescue our friends from these unprincipled frands. But since we cannot believe what they say concerning apples, are they any more worthy of confidence when they offer currants that grow on little trees, and strawberries that have scarcely any runners, the tops having to be bent down and covered with dirt in order to increase the plants. They also offer curculio-proof plums, in speaking of which, Judge Ramsdell said that "he found that when the curculio could not find a plum to sting it would sting an apple or other fruit, and when it could not find fruit to sting, it would sting the knots on the plum trees, that he had found when it had laid its eggs in them."

To close up, I add that I have before me the New Carlisle wholesale price list sent out Dec. 16, 1885, in which they place on the market their first class Russian apple trees at eight cents each, lower than any reliable first class nurseryman that I know of, put on the market their first class common apple stock, and yet, if said Russian stock cost so much on account of being grown on Russian seedlings, as their agents claimed, they could not sell to those going to set them, for less than 50 cents each, or at a figure over six times above their wholesale price for the same stock.

When a man promises the impossible, it saves disappointment to remember he is going to break his promise.

The office of public printer, now filled by S. P. Rounds of Illinois, has been more eagerly sought than any other one place in Washington. Mr. Rounds four years' term expires this month. To a congressman who was pressing a friend the president impatiently announced that he had made up his mind to make no change in the government printing office until after the adjournment of congress. "I know that Mr. Round's time has about expired," said the president, "but he seems to know how to run a a printing office, and I will make no experiments during the middle of a session."

At the 12th annual session of the W. C. T. U. held in Philadelphia, a short time since, Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith delivered a rousing address on "wings," from which we make the following clippings:

Difference of opinion is no sin, but the moment we allow that difference of opinion to come and touch the self-life then we perceive it. I want these wings so strengthened that we shall all go off on a fly when anything comes up like a mountain in our way. We think sometimes we should not be misunderstood. You will misunderstand me and I shall misunderstand thee. Probably you will have meant something I did not, but if our hearts are right towards each other, and we think we are serving Him, there need be no misunderstanding. We must follow the Lord Jesus. He says, "The servant is not above his Master, nor the disciple above his Lord." If they have called the Master of the house Beelzebub, how much more shall they call them of his household. Now when they call us Beelzebub, what shall we do? We shall be glad of it. He says so. He says in the 6th chapter of Luke: "Rejoice and leap for joy." Now, dear friends, reverse the way you are taking things, if people speak against you, rejoice and leap for joy. I think I take my position for Christ's sake, my sister thinks she takes her position for Christ's sake and we both of us so take our position for Christ's sake, and we must live up to it and be glad of it. It is a wonderful thing that wings are given you when you get to a place to use them. Think how you would feel? You can do it, for I have tested it myself.

Would you like to have God forgive you the way you forgive some of your friends? It would be mighty poor forgiveness for some of us. "Finally, be ye all of one mind, having compassion one for another; love as brethren, be pitiful, be courteous; not rendering evil for evil, or railing for railing; but contrariwise, blessing." That is the one I want you to get at, "contrariwise, blessing." For he that will love life and see good days, let him refrain his tongue from evil, and his lips that they speak no guile." Now dear sisters, another wing is to keep still. Don't defend yourselves, don't argue the matter. I have made this discovery, whenever we defend ourselves we somehow rouse up anger in the person who attacked us, and when we don't do any thing at all, that person soon begins to feel bad. That is a bit of experimental philosophy. If I do anything to a person, and he says nothing, I feel a sore spot right here. Now Christ bore in silence. I have found a new definition for sensitiveness; it is nothing but selfishness. Self is so near the surface that it gets hurt. You remember that verse, "He will hide us in a pavilion from the strife of tongues." Fortunately we have not eyes in the back of our head and we see but one way. If you see one way and I another, determined that there shall be no strife, so far as you are concerned. When we are reviled let us bless, and we shall find our differences of opinion to be wings that will us carry triumphantly over. "Charity suffereth long and is kind; charity envieth not; charity vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, doth not behave itself unseemly; seeketh not her own; is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil." Oh, let these words be true of us. Don't think evil of any one; don't attribute motives to any one.

It makes a difference whether you are looking down from above or whether you are looking from the same level. I imagine when we do get above, we shall look down and say, "Oh, why did I care. It was not worth while," and we shall look upon these things as a blessing for our uplifting. If we had nothing but plain sailing, we would not know how to get on. We women of the W. C. T. U. do profess before the world to be consecrated women; that is what we call ourselves. Whether it is true of every individual I do not know, but we all consider ourselves that, and we want to be considered that. Now, consecrated women, means women who have given themselves to God to be, to do, and to suffer His will. To be, to do, and to suffer His will.

I want to repeat that every heart that believes in the Lord Jesus Christ, in the salvation He has provided, can have this victory. We will apply it to-day. Here we are, somebody is going to propose plans we do not think right and act in a way we do not think right. Let us every time that happens bless that person, pray for that person, love that person, put our mantle of charity over that person, excuse that person, and get in her shoes, look out of that person's eyes. If we will do that we will not only get wings, but as individuals we will get a most glorious victory. Oh, dear friends, I want that we should be women with wings and not women that grope and wabble along the earth. We have flown over many things, but I want that we should fly over each other. If a sister seems to stand in our way, don't knock her down, or go around her, but fly over her by blessing her; no matter what it is, fly over her. Let us make up our minds to this. Let us get our rhinoceros skins on. We have cause enough, we are the oppressed half of humanity, and we have a great deal to suffer and arouse our indignation and a great deal to stir us up. I honestly believe that the reason women are better than men is because we have had to put on this rhinoceros skin, so I thank our dear brothers.

DINNER SERVICE.

Some Hints as to the Solution of This Perplexed Question.

A writer in Good Housekeeping says the solution of the dinner-service question is to insist that the table shall be, when no one is present but the home circle, the model of what it should be when surrounded by guests. Lay a piece of thick Canton flannel under your table-cloth. Even coarse napery will look like a much better quality with a sub-cover than if spread directly over the table-top. Avoid the cheap tricks of hotels and restaurants in the arrangement of napkins and table utensils. Simplicity is never ridiculous, while pretension usually is. Place the napkin on the left side of the plate with a piece of bread in its folds, the fork on the right hand, next to that the knife with the sharp edge turned from the one who is to use it, beyond this the soup-spoon. At the point of these set the tumbler and individual butter-plate. Mats, tablespoons, salt-cellars, and pepper-cruets may be arranged to suit one's own taste. Banish the heavy caster from the center of the table, and put there instead a vase of flowers, if it be nothing more ambitious than some bits of ivy or evergreen, brightened by a spray of bittersweet. At the carver's place spread a white napkin, the point toward the middle of the table, to protect the cloth from splashes of gravy. Let the soup be served by the mistress, and eaten with no accompaniment except a piece of dry bread held in the hand. Buttering is only less vulgar than thickening the contents of the plate with crumbs. When this course has been removed the meat and vegetables may be placed on the table. If there is salad it should be served separately, in a course by itself.

The heavy part of the dinner eaten, the maid should be summoned, and should commence the clearing of the table by carrying out first the meat, then the dishes of vegetables, and after that plates and butter-plates, placing one on top of the other, and using a tray to transfer everything except the large platters. Do not permit her to go through the operation of scraping the contents of one plate into another, with a clatter of knives and forks, and then bearing off the whole pile at once. Two plates at a time are enough for one load. Next after the soiled dishes, have taken off mats, salt-cellars and other table-furniture but tumblers, water-bottle or pitcher, napkin-rings and ice-bowls, and then have the crumb-brush and tray used.

The dessert is then served, and, except at a ceremonious dinner, the tea or coffee, which should never appear earlier in the action, and the work of waiting is done. When one realizes the exceeding simplicity of this much-dreaded branch of domestic service it seems incomprehensible that in so many families dainty waiting should be unknown. I am well aware that the question of serving is generally the sticking point. It is very hard—sometimes impossible—for the mistress with but one maid of all work to demand that that one shall be a practiced waitress. It is much easier to have the food jumbled on the table in a helter-skelter fashion than to run the risk of making trouble by insisting that it shall be served in courses. But the matter is not so difficult, after all, if the servant understands from the beginning that this will be required of her.

Unnecessary Violence,

For which outraged nature exacts heavy penalties, is done to the bowels by persons who with drastic, drenching purgatives make war on those organs in order to relieve their constriction. Constipation is not one of those desperate diseases that require desperate remedies. In fact, it is not a disease at all, but the incomplete discharge of a function, to the healthful renewal of which Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is far better adapted than drugs, whose action is excessive, and consequently debilitating and injurious. Disorder of the liver, contamination of the blood with bile, sick headaches and dyspeptic symptoms are the attendants of costiveness, and are likewise remedied by the Bitters. Its action is not limited to relieving the bowels naturally and without pain. Used with persistence, and as directed, it perpetuates regularity in the habit of body, and in the operations of the digestive organs and liver. Fever and ague, rheumatism and kidney troubles are prevented and cured by it.

The Language of the Cane.

To tap it on the pavement at every step, means: "Object is no money to me—I'm trying to wear out the ferule."

To poke a person in the ribs with it, who is standing up on a chair three rows ahead of the pokist at a slugging match, insinuates: "Down in front."

To hurriedly slip it down the pantaloons-leg and walk along with it concealed therein, evidences that it has previously been feloniously "magnetized" from some hall-rack and the rightful owner is approaching.

To point with it at a rare old painting in a picture gallery indicates that the check-boy was asleep when the visitor came through the entry-door.

To carry the upper end in the overcoat pocket, with the bottom part sticking straight up in front, signifies that the nickel plate has worn off from its bogus leaden head, and the same would blacken the dudelet's tan-colored glove if held in his hand.

To carelessly but gracefully drop it denotes the exhilaration of too much high-priced fine wine aboard; while to awkwardly get it tangled up among the legs and plump the bearer forward on his nasal abutment sadly goes to prove a wholesale consumption of common five-cent red, red liquor!

To pedestrianize on a crowded sidewalk with it run through the akimbocd elbows and across the back, with ends projecting beyond each arm, intimates that there is plenty of room out in the middle of the street for other people who don't care to be swiped off into the gutter in passing.

To hold it in the center, with the handled portion downward, is intended by the effeminate "mower" to demonstrate this: "Aw, this stick is weally so pawsitively top-'eavy, aw, that I—nevah 'having been used to manual labah, aw, find it a widiculously weighty burden, aw."

To present it, nicely engraved, to a trusted clerk on New Year's Day as a recognition of "long and faithful service," conveys the sorrowful fact to the t. c. that ye employer's act is an economical "stave-off" against his hireling's hoped-for raise in salary.—Detroit Free Press.

DROPSY
TREATED FREE.

DR. H. H. GREEN & SONS,
Specialists for Thirteen Years Past,

Have treated Dropsy and its complications with the most wonderful success; use vegetable remedies, entirely harmless. Remove all symptoms of dropsy in eight to twenty days.

Cure patients pronounced hopeless by the best of physicians.

From the first dose the symptoms rapidly disappear, and in ten days at least two-thirds of all symptoms are removed.

Some may cry humbug without knowing anything about it. Remember, it does not cost you anything to realize the merits of our treatment for yourself. In ten days the difficulty of breathing is relieved, the pulse regular, the urinary organs made to discharge their full duty, sleep is restored, the swelling all or nearly gone, the strength increased, and appetite made good. We are constantly curing cases of long standing—cases that have been tapped a number of times, and the patient declared unable to live a week. Give full history of case. Name sex, how long afflicted, how badly swollen and where, are bowels costive, have legs burst and dripped water. Send for free pamphlet, containing testimonials, questions, etc.

Ten days' treatment furnished free by mail.

Epilepsy (Fits) positively cured.

If you order trial, send 10 cents in stamps to pay postage. H. H. GREEN & SONS, M. Ds.,

Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

ORLANDO SNELL, 152 Ford st., Lowell, Mass., was terribly afflicted with Carbuncles on the back of his neck. Ayer's Sarsaparilla cured the Carbuncles, and has kept him free from them.

F. P. COGGESHALL, Bookseller, Lowell, says: I have been taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla for an impurity of the blood, which manifests itself in troublesome Boils and Eruptions, and can truly say that I have never found any medicine so prompt and certain in its curative effect. It has done me great good.

LEANDER J. MCDONALD, Sixty St., Charlestown, Mass., testifies: One year ago I suffered greatly from Boils and Carbuncles, and for nearly two months was unable to work. A druggist advised me to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which I purchased. After taking two bottles of this medicine I was entirely cured, and have remained well ever since.

BRIGHAM AND AMELIA.

While the majority of the "faithful" are agitated and excited over the turn affairs have taken, and not a few of them are packing up preparatory to journeying to the new Mormon stronghold, wherever that may be, Amelia Young, the twenty-third and last wife of Brigham Young, goes quietly and serenely about her household duties as usual. She has no love for the Mormons, and she takes no trouble to conceal the fact. Her present residence is one of the most desirable and handsome in the city, and yet it cannot compare with the palatial mansion which old Brigham had built and presented to her, and which still bears the name "Amelia's palace." Oh! John Taylor holds forth in it at present. But his time, as well as that of the rest of them, bids fair to be short.

The story of Amelia's marriage to Brigham and a few incidents of after life are very interesting. An old lady who at one time was Amelia's schoolteacher at Council Bluffs, Ia., tells me the following tale:

Upon one occasion when Brigham Young was passing through Council Bluffs, on his way to Salt Lake, he caught sight of Amelia's pretty face and fine figure, and immediately resolved to add another one to his harem. The girl's parents were good Mormons and their consent to the union was joyfully given. Not so with the girl. She had a stout will as well as a handsome form and pretty face, and she declared that she would not marry "that ugly old heathen." Her parents, however, were determined not to lose the chance of getting so near heaven by such an alliance, and sternly commanded Amelia to don her robes and take the hand of the all-powerful Brigham. Seeing that she would be compelled to marry him if she staid at home, the girl made her way to a neighbor's, told them her story, and received their sympathy and protection. Her parents instituted a search, during which Amelia hid in a root-cellar, over the door of which was a wood-house. The kind people carried her meals to her without attracting suspicion, until the third day one of the spies employed observed steam arising from a basket which the gentleman was carrying to the wood-house.

This led to her discovery, and, as she was under age, her parents took charge of her.

After a hard struggle Amelia finally consented to marry the great Mormon, but declared: "If I do marry him, I'd have my own way, and he will find it out." He did.

Several years after their marriage, upon one occasion Amelia told Brigham to buy her a Singer sewing-machine. The old man promised to send it up that day, and walked off with his hands in his pocket, thinking, doubtless, how many tithes it would take to pay for it. By the time he got down-stairs he forgot what kind of a machine was wanted, consequently it was a Wheeler & Wilson that the men brought up-stairs to Amelia's sitting-room. As soon as that lady saw that her orders had not been obeyed to the letter she deliberately pulled the offensive machine to the head of the stairs, and, giving it a push, down it went, bumpty-bump, until it reached the bottom, all broken to pieces.

The next day a "Singer" stood in the place allotted for it and nothing more was said of the affair. Upon another occasion, when Brigham had a number of distinguished guests, Amelia, who was present at the dinner-table, amused herself by hulling some nuts that were on the table and throwing the shells out of the window. Brigham manifested his annoyance at this proceeding without effect, when finally he exclaimed: "Amelia, my dear, I wish you would not throw those shells out upon the grass. They make such a muss."

"If you don't like to have them there you can pick them up," said the wayward favorite, and she arose from her chair and left the room.

When she had left Brigham turned to his guests and said:

"I hope you will excuse my wife. She is so headstrong that I cannot control her."

Chinese Veracity.

If we did not know, on the authority of Bret Harte, that the Chinamen is childlike, as well as bland, we should be compelled to believe that some of the Chinese who testify in the United States courts in this city are chaffing justice and trying to reduce the proceedings to a farce. The testimony of some of them has been grotesque enough. Several have recently sworn that scars and other permanent physical marks, which, as holders of descriptive certificates, they ought to be wearing, were removed in China by surgery or witchcraft. One who, according to his statement, wore an ineffaceable India-ink mark on his arm during two years in this country, informed the court that it had washed off in China, and when asked why it did not wash off in this country, stated, without change of countenance, that he had never washed his arm in the United States. But the most humorous, if not the boldest, perjurer was the one who explained the loss of his queue by saying that the rolling motion of the ship in which he came over caused it to fall off. For examples of perjury which is amusing by reason of its barefacedness these cases would be difficult to beat anywhere.—Alta California.

"He was a most peculiar fellow about his clothes," writes a Washington correspondent, speaking of no less a person than the Father of His Country, "and some of his brass buttons he had cast with his initials, G. W., and around their top the legend 'Long Live the President.' Such a button lies before me as I write."

The Mexican Hacendado.

The following interesting interview with a Mexican farmer appears in a recent number of the City of Mexico Two Republics: "What salaries are earned by the farm-hands in your district?"

"They earn 25 cents a day to $5 a month, exclusive of racIones, or weekly rations of four almuds or two English bushels of corn, a quarter of a bushels of frigoles (beans), and two pounds of coarse or fine salt. Each man gets this as a weekly allowance."

"Under what conditions are contracts made for farming?"

"The contracts for the sowing of corn and beans are made by advancing to the farm-hands two or three monthly payments before the work commences, which are deducted afterward from their wages, according to agreement. This is done to secure the laborers. They are then watched very carefully. There are sufficient laborers to be had in the municipality where I live, but in other places men are scarce."

"What are the principal agricultural products in your municipality, and what is the annual product?"

"Corn, beans, and sugar-cane are the leading agricultural products. On the average, the municipality produces yearly 70,000 bushels of corn and 4,000 bushels of beans. The sugar-cane crop yields generally 375,000 pounds of sugar and 90,000 pounds of molasses in the shape of cake. There are planted also nearly 2,000,000 mescal magueys. The corn sells at $1 a bushel, the beans at $2.50 a bushel, sugar at $2.50 an arroba of 25 pounds, and the caked molasses at $8 per carga of 300 pounds."

"What are the retail prices of principal articles of consumption?"

"Beef is cheap compared with the City of Mexico. It sells from 6 to 8 cents a pound, and the meat is good, too. Corn retails at 5 and 6 cents an almud—twelfth of a bushel—and beans at 25 cents an almud."

"How does stock sell?"

"The average price of bulls and cows is $10 a head. Heifers sell generally at $14 a head and oxen at $18. Three-year-old colts cost from $10 to $15 each; mares $6 to $8, and horses that have been broken $20. Sheep are valued at $1 a head. Small, thin hogs cost $1.50 each, and fattened hogs at the rate of 10 cents a pound."

"Is it easy to acquire property?"

"No. It is difficult to purchase private property. Good land is sold at $100 a fanega (8½ acres). Second-class land sells for $60 a fanega, and uncultivated land at $25. That is, when the owners of property are willing to sell, which is not often."

"What industries could be established in your district?"

"That is a hard question to answer, because the land in my municipality is not yet developed sufficiently to know what would best flourish there. There are now large sugar refineries and tanneries in some parts of the district in which Coeula is situated. But the country is wild and unsettled yet."

A Submarine Boat.

The submarine boat of Jules Verne's story, directed by the mysterious Capt. Nemo, sinking a ship and sailing backwards and forwards through her rigging "like a needle through a piece of sailcloth," has not ceased to impress our imagination, and yet here is Mr. Nordenfeldt, with thirty-nine officers representing ever European Power, anxiously watching the performance of a vessel in which he fairly puts the novelist's imagination to shame. From the accounts which are published it seems that every objection has been met and overcome with wonderful ingenuity; if the engines which are sinking the boat break down she returns at once to the surface; she cannot sink too far, for an automatic arrangement closes the throttle-valve at any given depth; she has been driven sixteen miles at three knots an hour without returning to the surface, and she can run 150 miles without recoaling. Most important of all, a pendulum, working of course automatically, keeps two bow rudders in such respective positions that an "even keel" is absolutely assured. This last is the main point. What every one who steps inside will ask is, Will she turn over? Even the extraordinary moral and physical influence of such a boat in modern warfare will hardly receive due attention until this elementary matter is settled. Other doubts, as to her conduct, for instance, in a maelstrom or if hustled by a whale, are of no importance compared to the possibility of standing on one's head in the stoke-hole in ten fathoms of water. —Pall Mall Gazette.

An explanation is out of the alleged "snubbing" by Mary Anderson of the Prince of Wales. During the performance the Prince sent word to Miss Anderson that he would be glad to call on her between the acts. Miss Anderson replied that it was impossible for her to receive any one between the acts, but that she would be glad to see his Royal Highness at the close of the performance. So, when the play was finished, the Prince went behind the scenes and congratulated the American actress on her success. "I thought you were afraid of me," he said, as he shook her cordially by the hand. "O, no," she replied, "I wasn't afraid of you, but its wholly impossible for me to see any one between the acts." The Prince made a courteous reply and there the matter ended. There is every indication that Miss Anderson's advertising agent is capable of utilizing these little stories for all they are worth.

Hand-Seeder.

This new invention possesses many qualities peculiarly adapted to farmers of this vicinity.

TEN REASONS:

1. It sows the roughest or smoothest soils.
2. It sows evenly all kinds of grain and seeds, large and small. Wheat, barley, clover, timothy, ruta baga, etc.
3. It sows any desired quantity. One-fourth pound of ruta baga seed can be spread over an acre of ground with perfect ease and accuracy.
4. It sows rapidly. With wheat it covers 48 feet to the round. Clover 42; clover and timothy mixed 36. Ten acres of clover sowed in 2½ hours.
5. It is not affected by quite a strong wind.
6. It is quickly adjusted to different quantities of grain,
7. It cannot clog.
8. It is easily operated.
9. It is cheap.
10. It is durable.

President and Party.

The charge is made that the president fails as a party leader. The people who make it apparently mean that the president ought to establish the strength of the political organization of which he has been always a loyal member by turning over to members of congress the federal patronage of their several districts. Mr. Cleveland evidently takes a different view of his duty. He holds that the best way to strengthen his party is to administer his trust for the best interest of the country. He also believes that democratic congressmen will do their party the best service by attending to their legislative duties and by using their utmost efforts to embody democratic principles in the federal statutes.

The principal value of the existing civil service law lies in its probable effect on the character of congress. For a good many years important legislation has been the task of a very few leaders. The men who are at the head of the present democratic majority of the house of representatives devote themselves to the work which they were chosen to do; but much the largest part of both sides of the house have been educated to depend for their public places on their adroitness in securing patronage. When the republicans controlled the executive offices the democratic members of congress had not much to gain from the president, but the theory was pretty well established that the administration should help its party by giving to congress the distribution of the postmasterships, collectorships, judgeships, marshalships, and other offices of the general government. The result is that members of congress spend their time in looking after patronage, and their object is not to strengthen their party so much as to establish an efficient machine for securing their own nomination.

In establishing the merit system for the appointment of subordinate employees of the government, the civil service law accomplished two desirable ends. It relieved executive officers of a great pressure, and left them free to discharge their proper duties; it also took away the temptation which congressmen were under to neglect their legislative work in order that they might strengthen themseives at home.

The president makes his appointments for the public service. He enforces the civil service law because it is the law and because he believes in it, and he is especially desirous that democratic congressman should attend to their own duties in such a manner that they may make a gratifying contrast with their political opponents. The president will not bribe or coerce men who are sent to congress to make laws by the distribution of executive favors. They are in Washington to perform a most important duty, and a duty that has been neglected for years under republican administrations because they have devoted themselves to seeking patronage for selfish purposes. The kind of a party leader desired by Mr. Cleveland's critics is one who will build up certain individuals in the party. The kind of a leader Mr. Cleveland seeks to be is one who will make his party respected throughout the country by the efficiency of its administration and the soundness of its legislation. When congressmen are forced to attend to the work they are chosen to do, the constituencies will select their best material. If the president's attitude shall result in improved legislation, he will be the most successful party leader of this generation.—N. Y. Star.

Where Lies the Sin?

For several weeks the industrial system of a large portion of our country has been paralyzed. The present troubles in the southwest, resulting in the destruction of property and the murder of our fellow citizens, is all laid to that leader of monopolists, Jay Gould. While it is true that he is responsible to a great extent for the wrongs which caused this outbreak against law and order, still the ruling party that allowed this gigantic evil to be born; the party that fostered it with gifts, aiding it in its infancy and being led by it when it was grown, is the guilty one. Under the protection and care of the republican party has this combination of capital in the hands of a few, grown strong and trampled the rights of the laborer under its feet, saying: "D—m the people. What are you going to do about it?" U[illegible] the twenty-four years rule of [illegible] republican party has grown up a system of laws which exempts more than one tenth of the best paying property in the United States from taxation, and its owners reclining in luxury, contemptuously looks down on the laborer who is forced by law to pay a tax on his humble home out of his scanty earnings. Under the rule of the republican party this aggregation of stock gamblers and capital was impregnable. A false aristocracy raised on a throne of suddenly acquired wealth, made the laws, enforced the laws, and transgressed the laws as best suited their purpose. The laborer, the mechanic, the farmer, and every man not included in the select few who lead the republican party, was made to pay tribute. Even their own followers, blinded by their own prejudice, bowed down and worshiped, and were defrauded with the common herd.

Is it any wonder that the wage receivers combined to defeat this enemy?

A short time ago ten men, who control the anthracite coal product of these United States, decided on the amount of coal to be mined this summer. Creating an artificial scarcity that the price may be made higher. Not satisfied with that, they deliberately lower the wages of their miners to further enrich themselves. A farmer in Roberts county must sell twenty bushels of wheat to buy one ton of hard coal. The miner in the east must dig ten tons of coal to buy one hundred pounds of flour. Is that right? Where lies the sin? Go to the party that made that monopoly. We could multiply instances, but these suffice to convince any fair-minded man that the leaders of the republican party are responsible for this cruel condition of affairs. The honest followers of these degraded leaders should study facts and refuse to participate in such wickedness any longer.—Roberts Co. (Dak.) Record.

Cleveland and the Veterans.

WASHINGTON, April 24.—The president has received a telegram from H. Clay Hall, department commander, transmitting a copy of the following resolutions which were unanimously adopted by the encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic held a few days ago at New York City:

WHEREAS, It is proper that veterans, irrespective of party should recognize anything done by a public official which demonstrates his intentions to carry out the promise made to the men who dared death for his country, and,

WHEREAS, We have reasons to believe through declarations and actions that Hon. Grover Cleveland, president of the United States, means to carry out the principle that veterans when competent, are entitled to recognition because of service rendered the country in time of war; therefore be it

Resolved, That the department of New York, Grand Army of the Republic, representing an organized body of 35,000 veterans of the war, in annual session assembled in New York City, April 21, 1886, view his course in this respect with satisfaction, and hereby put itself on record as approving the conscientious discharge of this patriotic duty, believing it to be the wish of the president that the letter and spirit of all enactments in favor of the veteran shall be faithfully carried out by all those in subordinate authority having power of appointment, employment or retention in the service of the government under his administration. Be it further

Resolved, That these resolutions be telegraphed to the president in the name of the encampment and that a copy of the same duly authenticated by the department commander and adjutant-general be forwarded him by mail.

Objections to Small Bills.

The New York Evening Post calls attention to some objections, which arise from a sanitary point of view, to the bank bills and greenbacks of small denominations. "They pass," says our contemporary, "through every kind of hand, clean and dirty, healthy and diseased. They lie for days or weeks in all sorts of pockets and wallets, those of the rag-picker of the slums, who never washes body or clothes, as well as of the 'white cravat and daily bath man' of the clubs." This, of course, will be seized upon with eagerness by the advocates of the silver dollar as an argument in their favor. We look at it simply as a timely warning against putting over and over into circulation the filthy and torn notes and bills which we have now become so accustomed to handle. Medical authorities in the old country have long ago declared such paper money a danger to health and a recognized medium of contagion. Why cannot our treasury department adopt the course followed in England and elsewhere of re-issuing at frequent intervals fresh and clean notes and cancel and destroy those returned the first time to the department?

Concise Record of the Week.

EASTERN.

A Buffalo special to the Chicago Times says: "The statement of Rev. William Cleveland, brother of the President, that the latter will marry Miss Frances Folsom, leaves no doubt of the fact that the White House wedding will take place. The wedding, it is said, will be of the most quiet character possible, and it is to be solemnized in June. There will not be a dozen persons present, and, if it is possible, the time of its occurrence will be kept secret until after the ceremony. Miss Folsom is modest, retiring, and sensitive, and her wishes are that there shall be no display. In this it is understood the President concurs."

At Pittsburgh, in the foundry of Singer, Nimick & Co., one thousand pounds of molten steel was accidentally scattered among fifty or more persons, twenty of whom were burned more or less severely.

Barnum's new big elephant, Alice, the former companion of Jumbo, has been safely landed in New York.

It is now pretty certain that the schooner Charles H. Morse sunk the steamship Oregon. The schooner was a coaster of 535 tons, and was built at Bath in 1880. She was loaded in Baltimore with coal, and it was known that she was off Fire Island the night of the disaster, since which time she has not been heard of. There was a crew of nine men on board, every one of whom, it is presumed, went down with her.

The boycott was the subject of denunciatory resolutions adopted by the United Presbyterian Ministerial Association, of Philadelphia.

Defalcations amounting to $20,000, together with a number of heavy losses, caused the suspension of the City National Bank at Williamsport, Pennsylvania.

Charles R. Crocker, the California millionaire, was probably fatally injured in New York City by being thrown from his carriage.

The village of East Lee, Mass., was inundated by the giving away of a dam at Mountain Lake. Eleven persons were drowned, and several factories were wrecked, including two paper-mills.

A jury in New York, after being locked up all night, failed to agree as to the guilt of General Alexander Shaler, who was tried for accepting a bribe for his vote to purchase armory sites from Monmouth Wilson.

The explosion of a lamp caused a fire which destroyed the Merchant Mill, valued at $150,000, at Harrisburg, Pa. The insurance aggregates $40,000.

WESTERN.

The farmers throughout Clinton County, Indiana, have discovered millions of grasshoppers in a chrysalis state.

The latest spectacle of the Kiralfy Brothers, "The Rat-Catcher," is going through a successful two weeks' engagement at McVicker's Theater, Chicago. The story of the piece is an altered version of the "Pied Piper of Hamelin," and, with its elaborate ballets, georgeous stage effects, and other interesting features, affords a brilliant stage entertainment.

George Smith, a veteran Western journalist, one of the owners of the State Register at Springfield, Ill., died last week, aged 59 years.

Among the freaks of the late Minnesota cyclone was the carrying of a marble gravestone from a St. Cloud cemetery across the Mississippi River, three miles, and landing it in the heart of Sauk Rapids. A safe weighing 1,500 pounds was carried 400 feet.

By the burning of a farm house near Xenia, Ohio, John Douthett and wife lost their lives.

It is ascertained that seventy-seven people were killed and 213 injured by the recent Minnesota cyclone. The property loss was about $3,000,000.

The explosion of eight cars of giant powder at Clintonville, Wis., caused the death of three and the wounding of six persons.

Forty citizens of Anthony, Kansas, took the Sheriff prisoner, overpowered the brothers Weaver, imprisoned for the murder of Adel Shearer, and killed them with revolvers, for fear of being interrupted in the work of hanging. The affair was witnessed by the mother of the victims and the wife of one of them.

The flour mill of Peebles, Fould & Co., at Cincinnati, was burned. Loss, $50,000; fully insured.

General Potter will be placed in charge of the Department of the Missouri, vice General Miles, transferred to the Department of Arizona. General Ringer will take command of the Department of Dakota, vice General Terry, now in charge of the Division of the Missouri.

Gov. Oglesby was summoned to Chicago on the 20th inst., where he held a prolonged conference with Sheriff Hanchett, certain railway officials, and some representative business men in regard to the strike of Lake Shore switchmen, the result being a decision that the situation did not justify the calling out of militia. The Governor addressed the strikers, warning them not to place themselves in a position where the law would be compelled to pronounce against them.

SOUTHERN.

The extensive tobacco factory of Robert Hamilton, in Covington, Ky., was maged to the amount of $60,000 by fire.

A colored man named Charles Robinson was hanged at New Castle, Del., for a l assault on a white woman.

At the instance of one of the creditors a receiver has been appointed for the North, Central, and South American Exposition at New Orleans.

Robert Smith, aged 19, was hanged at Nicholasville, Ky., for the killing of his stepfather.

A physician in Laurens County, South Carolina, reports that one of his patients is a lad of 12 years, whose backbone is prolonged into a wagging tail, covered with a thick growth of hair.

A band of Mexicans attacked the Americans at Murphyville, Texas, but were driven off, and the Americans uniting, cleared the surrounding country of Mexicans. It is known that one of the latter was killed, and two mortally wounded, but it is believed a number of others were killed or injured.

Near Axton, Va., a negro named Kellis Moorman, by a forged note induced Mike Mahone, a white man, to go to a neighboring house to play a game of cards. Mahone took a small sum of money with him, and on the way Moorman knocked Mahone down and robbed him. Mahone was badly stunned, but recovered sufficiently to tell what had happened. A party of men soon captured Moorman and lynched him. Mahone's injuries are thought to be fatal.

Bessemer steel was last week made at Chattanooga for the first time from North Carolina ore. The plant has a capacity of eighty-five tons per day.

WASHINGTON.

The Senate Committee on Public Lands has agreed to report in favor of the bill creating two additional land districts in Dakota, and defining the boundaries of the Deadwood district.

The Treasury Department is informed that the Canadian Government has fixed an additional duty of 7½ per cent. on sugars imported into Canada through the United States.

Secretary Manning has issued a call for $10,000,000 three per cent. bonds.

The House Committee on Foreign Affairs has instructed its chairman to report favorably a resolution appropriating $147,748 to indemnify Chinamen for losses sustained by violence at Rock Springs, Wyoming.

The special committee appointed by the House of Representatives to investigate the labor difficulties in the Southwest commenced operations at Washington with the testimony of T. V. Powderly. He stated certain abuses along the Missouri Pacific Road in the way of exactions for a hospital fund; declared that nothing of a violent nature was ever counseled by the Knights of Labor, and thought he should soon be able to suggest legislative remedies for existing evils. Mr. Powderly said that the discharge of Hall was not the sole cause of the strike under investigation, and in proof of his statement he read the declaration of grievances published by the St. Louis Knights. Continuing, Mr. Powderly said:

While I was in the West I heard from the men of little abuses which I do not think the manager of the Missouri Pacific Railroad knows anything about. Along the Iron Mountain Railroad they have a system of taking 25 cents a month from the wages of a man who receives $1 a day, and 50 cents from the wages of a man who receives $2 a day, and so on in proportion, for what they call a hospital fund. Then the men claim that as soon as they are taken sick they are discharged, and are denied the right of entering the hospital. Then there are instances, which can be proved, where men have made contracts to buy land from the company on regular monthly installments, and where, having paid all but the last installments, they were discharged from the employment of the company. In that section of the country it is different from the East.

Witness said that the men had asked in vain for redress, the General Superintendent of the Missouri Pacific Railway refusing to agree to a conference. Continuing, he said:

I am told, also, that along the Iron Mountain Railway, and along the other roads in parts of Texas, the superintendents and foremen are interested in company stores, and tent the men are compelled to deal in these stores. The employes are not told, in so many words, that they must deal there, but they are reminded that it is to their interest to do so. If a murmur of complaint is to reach the ear of the President of the Company it must go through the Superintendent, and a man will be discharged as soon as he utters a word of complaint. The men whose money is invested in the railroad know nothing about this. In many places double prices are charged in these stores.

Mr. Powderly said that the committee would find proofs of all these things. The men complain, also, he said, that convicts are brought from the penitentiaries in Texas to work on the railroads, and that striped suits may be seen side by side with honest men engaged in track repairing.

William O. McDowell, a prominent member of the Knights of Labor, appeared as a witness before the Congressional Labor Committee at Washington, and explained the objects of the organization. These are, to use the witness' own words:

To elevate the members by helping them to educate themselves, by helping them to save that which the average workman has wasted through bad habits; to lift him from the condition into which he has fallen through such habits, and make him thereafter an employer instead of an employe; to so educate him by comparison of ideas and by discussing questions that help to educate that he is able to deal with and grasp the subjects which affect not only himself but his employer; that he will become a better workman, command better wages, and by co-operating with his employer help him to such profits that he will be able to pay better wages.

Mr. McDowell, being asked what was the original cause of the Southwestern strike, made a long statement, involving the difference between the principles of day work and piece work, and quoted Gould as saying that by making a change of that sort in the Western Union Telegraph Company he had effected a saving of 80 per cent. He added that the general cause of this strike and of recent strikes all over the country had been the successful strike on the horse-car lines in New York last February. That had commanded such universal public sympathy that workmen, whenever they had a grievance or wrong, joined together and made applications to form assemblies of Knights of Labor. This was so general that the order had increased more in the month of February last than it had in the prior eight years. As an additional reason he alleged the universal system of watering railroad stock, which made it necessary for railroad managers to screw down the rates of labor as much as possible.

Mr. D. Humphreys, of the Globe Telephone Company of New York, testified before the Pan-Electric investigation committee at Washington that he called in September on Mr. Garland to induce him to bring suit against the Bell Company, but the Attorney General refused to hear him or to refer him to anybody else. Witness finally presented his petition to Mr. Goode, and it was referred to the Interior Department. Witness left Mr. Garland's presence with the conviction that he was incorruptible.

The Commissioner of the General Land Office has demanded from the St. Joseph and Denver Railway Company the reconveyance to the Government of 12,000 acres of land lying between Hastings and Kearney, Neb.

General Miles, in a letter to the War Department portraying the unprotected condition of the Mexican border from El Paso to the Colorado River, urges the appropriation by Congress of $200,000 to strengthen the present forts or establish additional ones.

POLITICAL.

There is a rumor that Gen. W. F. Rogers of Buffalo, a member of the last Congress, is to be appointed Public Printer in place of Mr. Rounds. Gen. Rogers is a practical printer and a successful man of business.

The majority report of the Payne Investigating Committee, recommending that the evidence adduced be certified to the President of the United States Senate, was adopted by the Ohio House by a strict party vote—61 to 23.

Both houses of the New York Legislature have passed a bill repealing the charter of the Broadway Surface Road.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Switchmen employed by the Lake Shore Road in Chicago and vicinity, to the number of seventy-four, struck because the company refused to yield to their demands.

There were 159 failures in the United States reported to Bradstreet's during the week, against 141 in the preceding week, and 196, 155, 160, and 111 in the corresponding weeks of 1885, 1884, 1883, and 1882, respectively. About 73 per cent. were those of small traders whose capital was less than $5,000.

To strengthen the hands of Messrs. Gladstone and Parnell, the Executive of the Irish National League of America calls upon the various branches to organize citizens' meetings, secure the presence of representative men, and procure the passage of resolutions commending the home rule and land purchase schemes. They also ask the organization to close up its ranks, and permit nothing at this time to cause discord or divide its strength.

In response to the demands of the Knights of Labor, who compose most of the employes of eight big mills in Augusta, Ga., for an increase of fifteen per cent. in wages and the submission of charges to the District Board before any Knight was dismissed, the Presidents issued a circular ignoring the Knights and calling for communications from the employes as such. About seventy-five furniture manufacturers of Chicago, employing four thousand men, met and organized to resist demands by workmen. A resolution was passed that no skilled mechanic be employed by any member without a letter of recommendation from the firm for which he last worked. The strikers in St. Louis having received $12,000 from New York, have adopted the policy of buying off those who have applied for their places. Strikers ditched a freight train near Fort Worth, Texas.

The Town Hall and Jail at Cornwall, Ont., was destroyed by fire, two prisoners perishing in the flames.

FOREIGN.

M. de Lesseps stated in an interview at Paris that the statements to the New York Chamber of Commerce in reference to the Panama Canal were absurd, and that he would positively guarantee the opening of the canal in 1889, and that it would have a depth of twenty-one feet nine inches.

Owing to family pressure, Ludwig King of Bavaria has stopped the building of palaces and is retrenching in every way. He will pay his debts in yearly installments of £550,000.

At the cathedral at Madrid, while the bishop was ascending the steps, he was shot three times by a priest, whose motive was revenge for being dismissed. The bishop was taken to a private chamber, where the last sacraments were administered. The assassin was only saved from lynching by vigorous efforts of the gendarmes, who conveyed him to prison in a carriage.

The General commanding the Greek troops on Scarlas Heights, which command the plain of Larissa, was summoned by the Turkish General to withdraw from that stronghold. The Greek General refused. The Turkish force, consisting of 7,000 men and several batteries, thereupon advanced to the foot of the heights. Greek troops are being pushed to the front as rapidly as possible.

The Bishop of Madrid, who was shot by a priest, has died of his injuries.

A syndicate in Berlin has offered £200,000 for the transfer of the concession to build a railroad at Delago Bay.

Sixty-eight charred bodies have been taken from the ruins of Stry, Austria, and there have been many deaths in the field from exposure. The condition of affairs at Stry among the people who lost their homes by the great fire is most pitable. Most of the victims are without food or means and are rendered desperate by the thought of starvation. The farmers in the vicinity have been visited by mobs of men who first demanded food, and, if refused, stole it. Owners of farms are now compelled to barricade their houses as the only way to guard them from being plundered of food by the mob, which, on account of hunger, is becoming uncontrollable. Struggles for food, resulting in bloodshed, have taken place.

Burmese rebels captured the Meegandet police station, and massacred twenty-three persons.

Workmen excavating in Dublin beneath Christ Church Cathedral discovered a chapter house, which was buried in the ruins of the great fire in the thirteenth century. It contains carved effigies, coins, and tiles.

LATER NEWS ITEMS.

Jay Gould, in his testimony before the Congressional labor inquiry, at Washington, stated that the Missouri Pacific Road has at this time no differences with its men. He said that after the strike last March the Knights of Labor took forcible possession of the railway, and of eight cities on the line. He declared that he had always been in favor of arbitration, and had given no secret instructions to Vice President Hoxie. Gould recited his interview with Mr. Powderly and the committee prior to his West Indian cruise, during which he said the Knights declared that the Missouri Pacific had lived up to its agreement, and that they agreed not to strike again, but to come to him, "man-fashion," and settle any future grievances they might have. Then the strike came, after his departure; "yet," said Mr. Gould, "our men told Mr. Hoxie they had no grievances, and were told to strike." "What followed the strike?" asked Mr. Gould, showing signs of deep feeling. "They seized St. Louis, Kansas City, Sedalia, Texarkana, and our terminal facilities; they took possession and said: 'No man shall run a train over that road.' That is what they said," exclaimed Mr. Gould, in a voice exhibiting traces of strong agitation. "Our loyal employes could not run a train and were deprived of the power to earn their wages. That was what followed the strike—forcible possession; I can't call it anything else—something the Czar of Russia would hesitate to do with his millions of soldiers behind him." The chairman inquired why Hall had been discharged. He would like to know what the man had done. In reply Mr. Gould requested Gen. Swayne to read Receiver Brown's statement to the effect that Hall had been guilty of absenting himself from duty without leave. Gould expressed himself in love with arbitration, but said he would not arbitrate with the Knights of Labor. Mr. Hopkins, Vice President of the Missouri Pacific, then took the stand. He favored compulsory arbitration, and said that he thought that a strike on a railroad should be made a criminal offense.

The Turkish advanced posts attempted to surprise the Greeks, who had been erecting earthworks within the neutral line. They were repulsed by the Greeks, who pursued the Turks and captured two guns. The Greeks then occupied three positions within Turkish territory, which the Greek Government ordered them to evacuate. It is semi-officially stated that France will refuse to join the other Powers in the plan proposed by England to coerce Greece into disarming.

A BILL appropriating $15,000 in aid of a national monument at Plymouth, Mass., passed the Senate April 22. The bill taxing railroad lands was discussed without action. The Senate confirmed, among other nominations, those of W. S. Rosecrans, Register of the Treasury, and E. Gross, Governor of New Mexico. The nomination of A. B. Keith, Postmaster at Denison, Iowa, was rejected. The Senate removed the injunction of secrecy from the report in the case of George Wise, nominated to be Postmaster at Hamburg, Iowa. Wise brought charges of partisanship and inefficiency against Coolbaugh, the incumbent, and the latter was removed. The committee's report submits evidence furnished by Coolbaugh, which, it says, completely disproves Wise's charges. The committee advises the rejection of Wise's nomination. The House of Representatives, in committee of the whole on the river and harbor bill, adopted a clause appropriating $121,200 for the improvement of the Monongahela River. The House passed the Adams bill relating to the oaths of ship-masters, owners, or factors on making entries or reports. President Cleveland sent to both houses a special message urging the creation of a commission of labor, charged with the consideration and settlement of controversies between capital and labor, to be engrafted upon the Bureau of Labor.

CONGRESSIONAL.

The Work of the Senate and House of Representatives.

SENATOR DOLPH (Oregon) made a speech in the Senate on the 16th inst. on his Indian depredations bill and a bill appropriating $5,000,000 to compensate citizens for losses suffered by them through such depredations. Senator Wilson reported from the Judiciary Committee the House bill closing up the business and paying the expenses of the Alabama Claims Court, with an amendment providing for increasing the principal sum of the Geneva award by the amount of all the interest received thereon by the United States, although that interest was received on bonds of the United States. Senator Call (Fla.) offered a resolution providing for the restoration to the roll of Senate employes of R. A. Finelle, a Democrat, removed by the Sergeant-at-arms to make a place for a Republican; and also providing that the Democratic minority be allowed the same number of employes, with the same proportion of salaries, as were allowed by the Democratic majority to the Republican minority in 1879. Senator Voorhees (Ind.) made a speech in opposition to the Weil-Labra treaty in the executive session of the Senate. Senator George (Miss.) was appointed a member of the Judiciary Committee to succeed Senator Jackson (Tenn.), resigned. President Cleveland nominated John C. Riley for Postmaster at Cincinnati, and Mrs. Virginia C. Thompson for a similar position at Louisville. He also named as Government directors of the Union Pacific Road Franklin MacVeagh, of Chicago, and James W. Savage, of Omaha. The House of Representatives passed the Senate bill empowering the Secretary of the Treasury to sell the Chicago Bridewell property, after its appraisal by three commissioners, to the Great Western Railway Company, and with the proceeds purchase a site and erect a building for the Appraiser of Customs. The House adopted the Dingley resolution calling on the President for information concerning the alleged exclusion of American ships from Canadian ports.

THE House of Representatives, at its session on the 17th inst., passed a bill to authorize the establishment of export tobacco manufactories and to allow them drawbacks on imported materials. There was a spirited exchange of sentiment on the bill to appropriate $150,000 for the relief of sufferers by the overflow of rivers in Alabama, but no action was taken thereon. The Senate held no session.

MR. CULLOM, of Illinois, offered a bill in the Senate on the 19th inst. to increase the pension for total disability to $72 per month. A favorable report was made on a measure for the erection of a fire-proof hall of records in Washington. An adverse report was submitted on the bill to grant full pay for life to all Federal judges who may become seventy years of age or resign after thirty years' service. The House of Representatives, under the leadership of Messrs. Browne and Hatch, refused to fix a date for the consideration of the Hennepin canal bill. On motion of Mr. McRae, of Arkansas, from the Committee on Public Lands, the rules were suspended and a bill was passed providing for the sale of the Cherokee Reservation in the State of Kansas. Mr. Henley, of California, introduced a resolution for an inquiry by a select committee on the relations of the Union Pacific Railroad Company to the United States. Mr. Carey introduced a bill to authorize the Union Pacific Railway Company to make running or traffic arrangements with or to become the lessee of any railroad which connects with its lines of railway.

MR. BUTLER introduced a bill in the Senate on the 20th inst. authorizing the President to retire certain army officers. The Senate, in executive session, rejected the proposed treaty to reopen the Weil and L'Abra claims against Mexico. Among the Senate confirmations were a number of Western men for various offices. Included in the same was Zach Montgomery to be Assistant Attorney General of the Interior Department. The majority of the Ways and Means Committee reported to the House of Representatives a joint resolution to give notice of the termination of the Hawaiian treaty. The minority only expressed its dissent. Mr. O'Donnell, of Michigan, from the Committee on Education, reported a Senate bill to provide for the study of the nature of alcoholic drinks and narcotics and their effects upon the human system in the Military and Naval Academies, and in the Indian and public schools of the Territories and of the District of Columbia. A bill to give honorably discharged soldiers the preference in public appointments was introduced in the House. A favorable report was made on Mr. Anderson's bill for the adjustment of Kansas land grants.

SENATOR MORGAN, of Alabama, introduced in the Senate, on April 21, his bill of last December directing the Attorney General to bring suit in equity against Benjamin Weil in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia to determine whether the award made by the United States and Mexican Mixed Commission, or any part of it, was secured by fraud, and to recover the money which may have been paid to Weil; also a similar bill with respect to the awards made to the L'Abra Silver Mining Company. By a vote of 45 to 15 the Senate confirmed the nomination of William C. West, of Kentucky, for Governor of Utah. In the House of Representatives a bill was reported to pension Union soldiers who were prisoners during the late war. The Library Committee reported to the House a bill for the erection of a monument over the grave of Gen. Daniel Morgan. The House adopted a resolution calling on the Commissioner of Agriculture for information as to the amount of wheat and corn on hand in this country, where it is located, the number of acres of winter and spring wheat now in the ground, the amount likely to be required for exportation, and other information on the subject.

British Races.

Dr. John Beddoe has published the results of thirty years' study of the races which make up the population of Britain. He takes county by county from the Shetlands to Cornwall and examines all available statistics after personal acquaintance with the inhabitants, measuring heads and noting the color of skin, hair, and eyes. He places great reliance on the latter, thinking that "the color of the hair is so nearly permanent in races of men as to be fairly trustworthy evidence in matters of ethnical descent; and that nearly as much may be said for the color of the eyes." Artists will find a curious conclusion in his volume—namely: that the darker-skinned portion of the population of Britain is gaining on the blonde. He holds that the Gaelic and Iberian races of the West, mostly dark-haired, are tending to swamp the Teutonic of England by a reflex emigration. This may account for the wide difference found by the tourist between the average Briton whom he sees and the typical Briton of the pictures.

The Children Could Walk.

Mr. Israel Switzheimer, a South Clark street pawn-broker, was awakened by the smell of smoke. He and his wife and three children sleep in the rear of his store. In an instant he was out of bed, dragging his wife after him.

"Der house is burning oop, Rachel!" he shouted.

"Der schildren! der schildren! Pring der schildren oudt quick!" screamed Mrs. Switzheimer.

"Der schildren!" yelled Switzheimer, aghast. "Der schildren can valk. Get quick der vaches oudt of der showcases, Rachel."—Chicago News.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

An Alabama cotton gin manufacturer has just shipped ten of the most improved machines to Russia. They are consigned to Moscow, and it is thought that the Russian Government wants them to experiment in cotton culture in the Black Sea provinces.

A Georgia farmer, many of whose chickens went to feed owls and hawks, trimmed a tree so that little remained but a tall stump, and on top of this placed a well-baited steel trap. Before a big hawk broke the fastenings of the trap and flew away with it the farmer had caught six owls, two hawks, and a buzzard.

The President is credited with many good things. Here is a recent one: There is a busy little man named Pope Hodnett, who poses as the head of a mythical labor organization. He was at the White House, and a remark was made to Mr. Cleveland. "Yes, I suppose there is a Hodnett organization," remarked the President, "but I have concluded he carries it about with him."

A writer in the Atlanta Constitution says he once heard Mr. Jefferson Davis reprimand a second in a duel who boasted that he had brought his principal out with flying colors, to the utter confusion of his antagonist, by a little piece of generalship. He explained that the seconds were supposed to be arbitrators, each representing both parties, and that it was the duty of the seconds to see perfect fairness, both in arranging terms of settlement and on the field.

The Rev. Dr. Maclaren, of the Central Presbyterian Church in St. Paul, awoke and saw a burglar creeping into the room with a revolver in his hand. The Doctor reached over the side of his bed, picked up a small stick, and, pointing it directly at the intruder, said: "Now, if you don't get out of here I'll shoot you dead. I would hate to shoot you on Sunday, and disturb the quiet of the day, but if you don't start you are a dead man." The burglar turned on his heels, ran through the house, and escaped.

Her Majesty Queen Victoria is not partial to journalists as a class. But her determination to exclude anything in the shape of a newspaper representative from the recent circus performance at Windsor Castle was frustrated by one enterprising journalist, who dressed himself up as a groom, and held up paper hoops for the equestriennes to jump through. This dauntless individual had a narrow escape, for his very literary-looking spectacles did not favor the impression that he was a circus groom and were the subject of royal suspicion and remark.

Dr. John Brooks, who died recently in Paonos, Mo., left the following directions concerning his burial: "Place me in a square oak box, dressed plain inside and out, without staining, varnish, or cover; no lining; make a pallet of my blankets in the bottom of my box; no pillow; lay me on my right side, with one hand under the side of my face, the other hand folded on my breast, with my knees drawn up, as if I were sleeping. Dress me in a plain white robe, socks, but no shoes; cover me with a white sheet folded back from my shoulders just as I would fold it in a natural sleep; my grave to be walled with brick and bricked over the top to keep out the rain."

The Yuma Sentinel tells of a natural telephone in the wonderful Pacific coast country. It says that a train of cars is plainly heard on the line of the Atlantic & Pacific Railroad at The Needles for a distance of seventy-eight miles to a place called Cottonwood Island. The discharge of the sunrise gun at Fort Mohave can be plainly heard at Colorado Canon, a distance of 100 miles. Sounds can be understood in the narrows of the Grand Canon of the Colorado for a distance of eighteen miles. The whistle of a Colorado steamer can be heard from El Dorado Canon to Weaverville, the head of navigation, a distance of seventy-eight miles, and by tumbling a rock over the precipice at Lee's Ferry you can plainly hear the echo down the river at Weaverville, a distance of thirty-six miles.

A Washington physician recently said: "It would pay the country well to fit up a gymnasium in the White House and to employ a professional gymnast to go there and spend two hours a day exercising the President. He should make Cleveland strip to the waist, put on the gloves, and do ten minutes of sparring. Then give him the Indian clubs and make him go through a set of motions which would thoroughly exercise every muscle of his arms and chest. The pulley-weights should also be used, and the gymnast should see to it carefully that every part of the President's big frame was brought into vigorous action. Resting spells of five minutes could be taken at the close of each half-hour, and at the end of the two hours a dash with the shower-bath and a good rubbing down would put new life into the man of the White House. This course would reduce his weight, clear his brain, and oil up his joints. He would be a new man, and the country could well afford to pay $10,000 a year to the gymnast for the improvement they would receive in the work done by the President."

The history of lake marine furnishes an incident in singular accord with the ingenious theory of the cause of the Oregon disaster. In 1862, on Lake Superior during a dense fog, the steamboat Illinois ran into the schooner Oriole while both were moving in the same direction. The Oriole, which was deeply laden with iron ore, was struck on the port quarter, close to the stern, and sunk so suddenly that every soul on board, save one, was lost. The cook was in some way hurled overboard by the shock of the collision, and, instinctively throwing out his hands, caught hold of a floating object, which proved to be the schooner's yawl, with the davits hanging to her. All that was seen of the schooner from the steamer was her mainboom, which swung over when she was struck. In this instance the captain of the steamer, apprehending that she was seriously injured, headed her for shore, but, upon ascertaining that the damage done was comparatively trivial put about in search of the schooner, not a trace of which could be found. When the fog lifted the cook was rescued by a passing vessel, and his story served to clear up what might have remained another of the unsolved mysteries of the deep.

A Washington letter says: "An intimate friend of Manning tells me that the Secretney has all his life had a dread of dying suddenly. In consequence of this fear he has always imagined himself sicker than he ever really was. It has been a habit of his to carry constantly about his clothes a supply of bottles, and vials, and boxes containing all sorts of nostrums and cure-alls. These remedies he would take whenever an opportunity offered itself to do so without being observed. 'I never saw a man,' said my informant, 'so addicted to medicines in my life. It would not surprise me to hear that the Secretary's present trouble arises in part from the doses of medicine which his system has absorbed. But the chief trouble, no doubt, is the disinclination to take exercise that he has always shown. When he came to Washington from Albany he became, if anything, worse in this respect. He rarely would walk from the Treasury over to the White House, a distance of only a few hundred feet. He would always use his carriage. It was even difficult to get him to go out riding. He would prefer to work in his office or take what he had to attend to to his home. In this way his blood became sluggish, his skin assumed a chalky hue, and his eyes showed at times that glassy stare which so alarmed his friends.'"

An Omnivorous Animal.

Professor Germain See, the eminent French physiologist, declares that man is omnivorous, and is destined to live on the elements furnished by the three kingdoms of nature. He cannot maintain robust health on meat alone as food, nor can he live on vegetables alone. The practice of pure vegetarianism is simply impossible, and the so-called vegetarians are compelled to make up the deficiency in their food by consuming a quantity of such animal substances as milk, eggs, and butter. From the mineral kingdom must be had pure water, which can be replaced by no other fluid.

The Cause of a Terrible Mortality.

Fond Boston mother (to daughter)—Jennie, did you kiss young Gaskins again to night?

Daughter—Yes, mamma, he's just lost an uncle in San Francisco, and I was so sorry for him.

Fond Boston mother—Well, Jennie, let this be the last. I'm afraid if you keep on encouraging him with your sympathy he won't have a relative left in the wide, wide world.

"I would take a trip round the world," said Mr. Shoddy, "if it wasn't for the expense returning home again."

DEATH-SMITTEN TOWNS.

Awful Work of the Cyclone at Sauk Rapids and St. Cloud, Minn.

The Groom, Minister, and Eleven Others of a Wedding Party Instantly Killed.

Terrible Scenes at the Devastated Towns —Deadly Storms in Iowa and Other States.

[St. Cloud (Minn.) special.]

So far from being exaggerated, it is certain that the first reports of the horrible work of the cyclone did not reach the full measure of the calamity. It is now known that fifty-eight people have been killed, viz., thirteen at St. Cloud, thirty-three at Sauk Rapids, and twelve on the road to Rice's. At least one hundred more are still on the list of injured, and some, it is certain, will only be removed from that list to be added to the roll of the dead. St. Cloud which has suffered most terribly. Here the death of thirteen people is bad enough; but the tale that Sauk Rapids has to tell is immeasurably sadder. Perhaps that of Rice's is saddest of all. Here the outskirts of the city only were struck. The very core and heart of Sauk Rapids was torn out.

All of that portion of the village of St. Cloud northwest of the bridge presents a scene of almost total obliteration. Where yesterday were the scenes of active business, to-day horror and total destruction reign supreme. The fine passenger and freight depot of the Northern Pacific Railroad lies piled up, a huge mass of ground-up lumber. The schoolhouse was rent into the finest pieces imaginable by the destroyer, and, like all buildings in the line of the storm, is far beyond repair. Fortunately school had been adjourned for vacation last Friday, and no one was in the building at the time. The Court House is a conglomeration of building material fully ten feet deep, which is being rapidly cleared away by the workmen. Nearly all the records are saved intact in the vaults, except a few that were lying loose in the building and in use at the time the cyclone passed through. It was here that the County Auditor and Register of Deeds were killed while working at their post of duty. Judge of Probate Henyon received a wound upon his skull in the fall of this building, but he will probably live.

Sauk Rapids is a sickening sight. The dwelling houses are strewn in extreme confusion, and their owners are unable to distinguish the material that yesterday made up their peaceful homes.

The pen is powerless to paint a picture that would give the reader a perfect idea of the condition of affairs. Men are here who have lost every dollar's worth of property that they owned, and, added to this affliction, many of them have to bear the load of grief caused by the calamitous death of dear friends or relatives.

The rumor of the destruction of a wedding party near Rice Station, on the Northern Pacific Road, proves too true. The party was assembled at the residence of John Shmiz, a farmer, to celebrate the wedding of his daughter Minnie, and the ceremony was performed about 1 o'clock by Rev. Gustavus Smith. The afternoon was spent in social enjoyment, and at 4 o'clock the party, only a few guests having departed, gathered about the wedding feast. It was a happy party of nearly forty people celebrating the bridal festivities of the favorite daughter of the house. The cyclone came, and in the space of five minutes the house was converted into kindling-wood, and scattered all over the farm. The nuptial viands were distributed over several acres, and of the happy party of a few minutes before ten were corpses and many others injured, several of whom will die. There was not a building left in which the few survivors could not care for those not past help. The bridegroom was killed outright, but the bride was only injured. The neighbors who had escaped the fury of the cyclone came to the rescue, and the bodies of the dead were taken to the school house at Rice Station. Was there ever a more miserable, more appalling, picture of the sudden approach of death in the midst of life and happiness? Farmers from the northwest part of the county tell almost incredible stories of finding remnants of buildings on their property twenty miles distant from the city, and portions of organs and pianos have been picked up fifteen miles from the city and brought in as curiosities. The prairie for miles northwest of the track of the cyclone is full of pieces of plank driven a foot or more into the ground, which gives a limited idea of the terrible force with which they must have been driven by the wind. The freakish disposition of the tornado is evident in cases where small articles were taken from the body of the house and carried hundreds of feet without disturbing the main structure in the least. Dogs were found with the scalps torn from their skulls as neatly as could have been done by the scalpel, and small houses are now standing with the chimneys torn off, while larger buildings but a few rods away were so badly rent and shattered that only the cellar remains to show where it stood. The sides of many of the buildings are pierced with heavy splinters that tore a hole through the thick wall only large enough to protrude like huge pegs. In the walls of the other buildings holes are noticeable that seem to have been made by cannon balls. Panels have been torn from the doors, and, with this exception, the buildings seem to have been untouched.

In other houses window-panes have been blown out and the sash untouched. The walls of many of the buildings have a blackened appearance as though they had been fired and badly smoked. It is estimated that forty families are homeless and in destitute circumstances, and relief is badly needed.

The sign "Sauk Rapids," on the Manitoba Depot, and a casket full of books were found in Rice Station, fifteen miles distant. This shows the terrible power of the storm.

A box-car was picked up from the track and blown three blocks and dropped into a ravine.

The storm extended from Jamestown, Dak., through Minnesota and into Wisconsin, though its most disastrous effects are to be found in the three places first named.

A corps of men were busily engaged during the day washing the blood from the mutilated faces, and composing as well as possible the distorted features. During the forenoon the interior of the engine-house presented an appearance that would cause the stoutest man to shudder. Fifteen coffins were ranged along the sides of the room, some of them containing the lifeless remains, the others waiting for their ghastly tenants.

The Storm in Iowa.

[Omaha special.]

Dispatches from towns in Western Iowa state that the recent cyclone was of terrific force, going at the rate of nearly ninety miles an hour. About fifty dwellings were destroyed between Griswold and Audubon. Nine persons were seriously wounded, one fatally wounded, and one killed. Several school children were seriously hurt at the school-house at Audubon. The loss of property between Griswold and Audubon is estimated at, $175,000. Fences, barns, dwellings, and everything were laid low in the path of the cyclone. The small loss of life is accounted for by the fact that the cyclone occurred in the daytime, and nearly everyone saw the cloud approaching, and ran to their cyclone cellars, which nearly every farm in that part of Iowa is provided with.

Later reports show that the storm ranged from Taylor County north to Pocahontas County. Four persons are reported killed, and about twenty-five seriously injured. From fifty to seventy-five dwellings are demolished, and large damage done to barns, stock, and trees.

At Wheeler Grove the Mormon Church and several other buildings were wrecked. In the vicinity of Redford a number of buildings were demolished, one woman was killed, and several persons injured. A boy and a girl were taken up by the wind and carried a distance of several hundred yards. Both were seriously injured. A black, funnel-shaped cloud swooped down upon the village of Knox. The postoffice, and five other buildings which happened to be in the path of the monster, were swept away like chaff. Had it not been for the caves prepared for just such occasions, the loss of life would have been heavy.

Other Blows.

A cyclone in the region of Aurora, Texas, blew down every house in its path and injured a dozen or more people, two of them fatally.

A tornado wrecked several farm houses near Wetmore, Kansas. The inmates escaped by fleeing to the cellar.

At Schubert, Neb., a hurricane killed one boy and injured two women, one man and a boy.

WATERS LET LOOSE.

The Bursting of a Dam Near East Lee, Mass., Results in a Terrible Calamity.

Twelve or Thirteen Persons Drowned and Property Worth $250,000 Utterly Ruined.

[Springfield (Mass.) telegram.]

An awful calamity, the result of carelessness, took place this morning at the village of East Lee, in Berkshire County. The dam at Mud Pond Reservoir gave away, causing the death of eight people, and wrecking property valued at $150,000 or $200,000. The dam, which was situated two and one-half miles from the village, had shown signs of weakness for some time. The persons responsible or owning the privilege of its water supply had been notified, but nothing was done. The pond covered many acres of swamp, and was increased from its original limited size by extensive dams built by a club of manufacturers as a storage place for water. The torrent where the dam burst gushed forth in a resistless stream and rushed down the valley, gullying out a channel from fifty to two hundred feet in width. The villagers got their first news of the accident by seeing the flood pouring down the street, the water being from four to five feet deep, and hearing with it trees, parts of houses and barns, fences, wagons, and every form of movable property. The people fled to the slopes of the valley, along which the torrent was pouring, and saw the houses moved and toppled about like chips on the river.

There was not much of life or many buildings to be lost till the village was reached. Here it wrenched Edwin Sturgis' barn, swept away a bridge spanning the brook, which is but small as it runs naturally from a small pond, and then rushed down the channel of the stream on which the dwellings and manufactories are located. Couch & Oakley's millwright shops, John Dowd's manufactory of paper machinery, and A. N. White's carriage shops were all destroyed.

Mr. White's family consisted of himself and wife, 48 and 45 years old, respectively, their daughter Ida, and baby son. They were in bed when the flood struck their house, and were all killed by the crash of the building and also sunk in the waters.

Theodore King and wife and Mrs. Chas. King rushed from their house to escape, and were carried off by the flood and drowned. The house was not destroyed. Simon Dowd, 60 years old, was drowned. Further down the stream John McLaughlin's machine shops, Harrison Garfield's "Forest," and Farmer Decker Sabin's place were ruined. The boilers and all basement machinery were taken out by the flood, and, though weighing tons, were carried like corks. John Veran's paper mill was also gutted in the basement.

The flood passed East Lee and went on down the road, destroying lawns, gardens, fences, and moving smaller buildings, but had not power to utterly wreck a large house, though the damage done amounts to many thousands of dollars. Probably the total loss will exceed $170,000.

A great many hands are thrown out of employment. There is much excitement and grief.

IRELAND FOR THE IRISH.

The Main Features of Mr. Gladstone's Land Bill.

Following is a summary of Mr. Gladstone's speech in the House of Commons, explanatory of his land bill:

The land act was intended to go into effect on the same day on which the home-rule bill would become operative. It could not go on without the operation of the other, which would provide a legislature in Ireland to appoint statutory authority to deal with the landed estate, and act between vendor and purchaser. The purchases would be made through the issue of £180,000,000 of three per cent. stock issued at par. These new Irish consols might, with the consent of the Treasury, be commuted for stock of a lower denomination. If the stock could be issued forthwith, scrip of equal value would be issued for the same purpose. The act was to give the landlords the option to sell out under its terms. Its actions were confined to agricultural holdings, and did not include mansions having demesne and woods. The state authorities, acting between the peasant and land-owner, would purchase the land from the latter and put the peasant in possession as absolute proprietor, subject to an annual rent charge, until the total payments equaled the purchase money. The state would not force the small occupiers to become proprietors. In districts where the population was congested the state would have the power to decide whether expropriation of the too crowded land should be compulsory. Nobody except the immediate landlords would have the option to sell to the incumbrancer, and then he must sell by foreclosure, and not at an option for himself.

Applications to sell would have to be made by all the tenants on an estate, and all these applications and sales would be registered.

Applicants would be required to give security for costs in certain cases. The land commission would be empowered to refuse applications. The basis of prices would depend upon the rental for a fixed period. The judicial rental of 1845 would be the standard in all cases wherein the rent of the land to be sold was then fixed. In all other cases the land commission would have the power to arrive at a price by comparing the other judicial rentals with Griffith's valuation. The land commission would also be allowed to examine the state of books concerning estates for ten years back.

Twenty years' rental would be a nominal purchase; in exceptional cases twenty-one years rental would make a purchase. Applications for sale would not be received after March 1, 1890. Ten millions of pounds of the stock would be issued during 1887, £20,000,000 in 1888, and £21,000,000 in 1889.

When the proposals were first placed before the speaker's colleagues, he proposed to raise £30,000,000 immediately. Mr. Chamberlain and Mr. Trevelyan both objected to this as a wholesale issue which would depreciate values. The speaker therefore thanked both gentlemen for having given him occasion to reconsider that original proposition. He now thought it was an error to ask forthwith for anything like the outside estimate, and believed that by appointing a receiver for the general rents, armed with sufficient authority to collect them, but without coming into contact with the new proprietary, the repayment of the purchase money would be amply secured. The charge upon the Irish exchequer would be £2,0 0,000 per annum, to meet which it would be able to levy for rents amounting to £2,5 0,000 per annum, and this sum would be the first charge on the rents and taxes raised by the Irish Government. Adding to this the imperial contribution, the sum paid to England by Ireland would be £6,212,000 per annum, secured on a revenue amounting to £10,850,000, no portion of which would be applied to any purpose until £5,000,000 was paid into the English exchequer.

The present contribution of the Irish taxpayers to England was £3,380,000, of which England paid back in the Irish civil service and in the service of collections £1,848,000. The residue, which seemed to represent an imperial contribution for army, navy, national debt, and imperial civil charges, was £2,087,000. What did England do with it? As an instance, she sent an army of 25,000 men to Ireland and kept them there at an annual cost of £3,000,000, £915,000 more than the balance mentioned. That was a specimen of the economy of the system the speaker wanted to root up.

MICHIGAN AFFAIRS.

—Diphtheria has been raging at Negaunee.

—Lansing printers have organized a union, with thirty-two members.

—Missaukee County has decided to build a $5,000 brick jail at Lake City this season.

—St. Louis has a $10,000 Episcopal church edifice and but two male communicants in the society.

—The superintendents and engineers of the Sault Ste. Marie Canal are to appear in uniforms this season.

—An effort is to be made to change the location of the county seat of Arenac County from Omer to Standish or Sterling.

—A. C. King died at Adrian recently of pneumonia. He came to the State in 1834, became a leading iron foundryman, and held many public positions.

—Mrs. S. Tisdale, of Sterling, has just fallen heir to $38,000 in cash by the death of a relative in an Eastern State. She is unmarried and about 50 years of age.

—Robert Young, who went to Georgia to inspect the gold fields in the interest of St. Johns capitalists, says there is gold there, but, in his opinion, it will cost $1.25 to get a dollar out of it.

—The elegant residence of Judge McCurdy, at Corunna, has been destroyed by fire, at a loss of $20,000, together with a valuable library, the collection of a lifetime, including many valuable Masonic manuscripts.

—A schoolteacher named Arthur Pretty, teaching in Tuscola County, was arrested on a charge of beating one of his scholars named Isaac Taylor in the face with his fist, breaking the bones of his nose, and causing them to protrude through the skin. Pretty says the boys had arranged a plot to throw him out of doors.

—Eugene Lamphire, sentenced 1877 from Lenawee County to twelve years for assault with intent to kill, and to three years additional for larceny, has about completed his first sentence (that is, deducting "good time" he has made), and his attorney thinks he ought to be liberated until the expiration of the actual twelve years before entering upon his second sentence.

—The Public Library, which was opened at Jackson about Feb. 1, has proved a success from the start. The Reading Room Committee have reported in favor of opening the reading room Sundays from 2 to 6 o'clock p. m. The matter of opening the reading rooms Sundays has been agitated for some time, but no action has been taken before.

—It is thought that the fire which almost entirely destroyed the hardware store of O. H. McConnell, at Jackson, recently, originated from some one lighting a pipe or cigar and dropping the fire on the floor, which was soaked with oil. Insurance, $4,000 on the building and $6,000 on the stock. Mr. McConnell had no gasoline permit with the insurance policy, which causes speculation as to whether he can collect the insurance. The delivery wagon, standing in the rear of the building loaded with cans filled with gasoline, caught fire, nearly destroying the wagon, and scorching the horse considerably.

—In a lecture before the Political Science Association of the Michigan University, Judge Thomas M. Cooley gave particular attention to the labor question. He opposes despotic remedies, and believes that strikes, having evil consequences, stand in the way of progress. Each party should respect the object of employment, thus making it mutually beneficial. Law suits are to be avoided, as breaking the spirit of confidence which should exist. He considers arbitration the oldest and best remedy, although it is most successful in foreign governments, and does not always please the democratic independence of the American. He advocated a permanent board of control, such as is in vogue in England, to be made up equally from both classes.

—At the annual meeting of the Michigan State Merino Sheep Breeders and shearing festival, held on the fair grounds at Ann Arbor, the main hall was used for the exhibit and shearing, and was filled with improvised pine tables for the shearers and sheep pens. The object of the society is to raise the grade of Merino sheep by a public competition, held annually, of the different sheep breeders of the State. The shearing process is done in public, the fleeces being baled and weighed by the Secretary of the society. The sheep are sheared by those who own them. A record is made of the weight of the sheep before and after shearing, and the wool, after being thoroughly secured at a woolen factory agreed upon, is put on record as to its relative weight and quality, and certificates issued to the exhibitors accordingly. Between one hundred and one hundred and fifty sheep have been entered at this meeting from the southern section of Michigan. No graded sheep are allowed to be entered, the entries being allowed to only registered and thoroughbred Merino animals. The heaviest fleece taken from any ram during this meeting weighed thirty and one-half pounds, from a flock owned by C. M. Thornton, of Northville. A ewe owned by A. A. Wood, of Saline, sheared twenty-two and one-half pounds, being the heaviest ewe fleece of the meeting. The sheep exhibited there were estimated to be worth $10,000. An Ohio speculator was present, negotiating for a heavy purchase of sheep to be sent to South America.

Notes and News.

The Manistee Sentinel, a strong republican paper, also hears the rumbling of the tornado which is to strike the ninth district next fall. Read its forebodings and predictions: Hon. L. G. Mason, of Muskegon, who has been talked of as the democratic nominee for congress in the next election, was on Monday last elected mayor of Muskegon, on a union ticket by over 900 majority. If Mr. Mason has any idea of allowing his name to enter the race for congress, he will prove a very hard man to beat in the nomination, and a still harder man to beat in election. At the last election Cutcheon carried Muskegon by about 600 votes, and if that vote should be changed into a vote of 900 for the other fellow, it would make a big hole in the 2,700 plurality of Cutcheon's vote two years ago, and effectually wipe out his 1,000 majority in the district. The prohibition vote will also be very much stronger next fall than it was two years ago. Under these circumstances republicans can very readily see that there must be a very solid and perfect harmony in their party on the subject of Cutcheon's fitness for the place, in order to prevent their candidate from getting unmercifully slaughtered in a district which under good, healthy conditions and a wise policy ought to give 3,000 republican majority. With Manistee giving from 300 to 600 against him, (and many think it will be more) a fusion victory at Big Rapids on Monday together with the big majority for Mason in Muskegon, we confess it does begin to very squally for our present representative, even if he does reside in a district which is, under favorable conditions, republican by 3,000 majority.

The primary purposes of the Knights of Labor organization seek the promotion of wise, beneficent and humane principles. Every movement of whatever kind or nature, which has for its object the betterment, elevation and amelioration of those who "eat their bread in the sweat of their face" will naturally and rightly invoke the sympathy and support of all broad-minded people. The Knights of Labor, therefore, in their struggle with greedy monopoly and soulless corporations, should feel assured that public sentiment will instinctively array itself on their side in all their lawful and proper undertakings. But the Knights should remember that Rome was not built in a day; neither can all their grievances be righted in a month or a year. The two virtues which they should cultivate above all others are carefulness and moderation. It will not do to have strikes and boycotts become so frequent as to invite the ridicule and contempt of those even against whom they are ordered, and be regarded as nuisances by the general public. There is imminent danger that this unfortunate condition of affairs may come about in the very near future unless wiser counsels are followed. Powderly is a safer leader than Irons. As much preferable as is intelligence and principle to error and anarchy. Strikes should be avoided except to redress serious grievances and after arbitration has failed. Boycotting should be boycotted.—Charlotte Republican.

The following are the legislative acts relative to fishing with spears, seines, nets, etc., in Michigan: "That it shall not be lawful hereafter at any time to kill or destroy, or attempt to kill or destroy, any fish in any of the waters of the state of Michigan by the use of dynamite, herculean or giant powder, or any other explosive substance or combination of substances, or by the use of India cockle, or any other substance or device which has a tendency to stupefy the fish; nor shall any person kill or attempt to kill, or injure by shooting or spearing, any fish during the months of March, April, May, June, July, August, and September, in any waters of this state, except Lakes Michigan, Superior, Huron, St. Clair, the Detroit and St. Clair rivers, the Lake Erie, and the harbors connected with said nor shall any person catch or take any fish with seines, pound nets, trap nets, in any species of continuous nets, in any of the waters of the state, except Lakes Michigan, Superior, Huron, St. Clair, and the Detroit and St. Clair rivers, and Lake Erie, and the harbors connected with said lakes: Provided, nothing in this act shall be construed as prohibiting sole owners of fish ponds from fishing therein as they may think proper; or as prohibiting any person from catching mullet, suckers, redsides, or sturgeons during the months of March, April and May, by spearing or dip nets; and providing further, that this act shall not apply to spearing fish in the upper peninsula during the months of April and May."

An exchange says: "After you ... on your ear and make up your ... to 'stop' your paper to make ... or feel humiliated, just poke your finger in water and then look for the hole. Then you will know how sadly you are missed. The man who thinks a paper cannot survive without his support ought to go off and stay a while. When he comes back he will find that half his friends didn't know he was gone. The other half didn't care a cent, and the world at large hadn't kept an account of his movements whatever. You will find things you cannot endorse in every paper. Even the Bible is rather plain and hits some hard licks. If you were to get mad and burn your Bible, the hundreds of presses would still go on printing them, and if you were to stop your paper and call the editor all sorts of ugly names, the paper will still be published. And what is more, you will sneak around and borrow a copy of it every week from your neighbor. It would be much better to keep your vest pulled down and your subscription paid a year in advance."

Capt. E. P. Allen, of Ypsilanti, upon a recent business trip in Canada, was surprised at the almost universal sentiment in favor of annexation to the United States. Among farmers, mechanics, lawyers and business men of all classes he found almost without exception the impression that their interests would prosper better if Ontario were a state of this Union.

Editor Forsyth, of the Cheboygan Democrat, was arrested Thursday day morning for alleged libel. The complainant is John McCuaig, who wants $5,000 damages for alleged defamation of character. Forsyth gave bonds.—Detroit Free Press.

Pittsburgh steel rail manufacturers report a better demand and more increases for steel rails from projected roads, mostly in the west. Prices are quoted at $36 and $36.50 at the mill. An advance to $38 is looked for before many days.

Solomon L. Withey, judge of the United States district court for the western district of Michigan, died at San Diego, Cal., on Tuesday, aged 66 years.

The late greenback convention in Lansing expressed sympathy with the Knights of Labor, and invited them to join the party.

Lawlessness and Business.

If the anthracite coal miners in Pennsylvania were on a strike, and they should hold meetings at which they would announce that no more coal should be mined until they had received an advance in wages, there would be considerable talk about lawlessness, and it is probable that the state militia would be sent to the scene.

The managers of the railroads which run in this region, and over which the entire anthracite product must be transported, meet and say that no coal shall be sent to market beyond a certain amount, and not any unless they receive an increase in the price. This is called business, and nobody suggests that the militia be sent to the mines to raise the blockade and set traffic in motion.

These railway managers do not own and control all of the mines, but their action with reference to those that they do control is final to all, because the men who own coal lands cannot market their product without the consent of the individuals who operate the roads. As to them, therefore, the embargo of the managers is as arbitrary and lawless as would be the action of a mob of miners in blockadeing the tracks or disabling machinery in the shafts.

Not until we reach a better understanding as to what is business and what is lawlessness will it be possible for government to interfere much in labor disputes without injustice to somebody. The conspiracy of the anthracite coal ring is a more lawless one than any of which Mr. Gould has complained in the southwest.—Chicago Herald.

Cure for Piles.

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he has some affection of the kidneys or neighboring organs. At times, symptoms of indigestion are present, dullness, uneasiness of the stomach, etc. A moisture, like perspiration, producing a very disagreeable itching, after getting warm, is a common attendant. Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Bosanko's Pile Remedy, which acts directly upon the parts affected, absorbing the Tumors, allaying the intense itching, and effecting a permanent cure. A Famous Treaty.

But speaking of names and titles, you ought to read "A Treaty of Peace, Friendship, and Commerce," which was concluded at Antananarivo, on the 13th of May (17th of Alakaosy), 1881, between the United States of America and the Kingdom of Madagascar. Her Majesty Ranavalomanjaka, Queen of Madagascar, was represented by Ravoninahitriniarivo, who signs his Malagasy title thus: "15 Voninahitra, Off. D. P. Lehiben ny Mpanao Raharaha amy ny Vahiny" (which means, I suppose, "15th Honor, Officer of the Palace, Chief Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs"), and by a man of the name of Rainimiraka, whose title I forget. The titles are modest, but the Madagascar notable make up for the deficiency in the length of their names! —From "Among the Law-Makers," by Edmund Alton, in St. Nicholas for October.

Barnard.

Mr. Burns returned from Lansing Tuesday with a fine span of ponies.

THE TOILER.

BY PERTINAX.

The hum of toiling millions
Has become an angry roar,
The reverberating echoes
Have reached from shore to shore.
It is the cry of countless thousands
That are clamorous for bread,
Telling for a scanty sustenance,
Half wishing they were dead.

Hear the weeping wives and daughters
That are wailing in this land,
See the helpless sons and fathers,
How dejectedly they stand.
See the brawny sons of labor,
How defiant is their gaze,
As they pray like ancient Sagas
For the hoped-for better days.

Better days are always coming
To the honest men who toil,
While they're waiting, honest faces
Grow as furrowed as the soil.
Their eyes are dimmed, their shoulders bowed
Beneath privation's rod,
They have grown to hate their fellow man,
And to distrust their God.

Let us espouse the sufferer's cause,
It is the cause of right;
Help from despair the laboring man,
Raise him to the light.
Tell him their rights will conquer,
And, though the skies are overcast,
That truth is like the noon-day sun,
And will shine forth at last.

There's a better time a coming,
All the people understand,
When the man that turns the furrow
Shall be owner of the land.
When the man that wields the hammer
In the works shall have a stake,
And the sailor shall share the profits
With the owner on the lake.

Organize co-operation,
It is the only thing to do;
It will save the honest toiler
And the capitalist, too.
It will bring us all together
In the happy days to come,
When we all will have an interest
In the toilers' busy hum.

"QUEEN OF ONE HEART."

BY NO. 6520.

And he was So tall and straight and strong, so young and hearty, so full of vigorous and graceful action, so manly in his treatment of men, so gentle and courteous with women, always so quick-witted and sunny-hearted, and so free from snobbishness, the waiter at his restaurant table, the barber who shaved him, the bootblack who retorted to his gay sallies, his landlady and my lady in her chamber of state, business men with whom his shrewd, sharp notions, manly bearing and "snap," won instant favor. Old and young, rich and poor, all joined in the unanimous verdict that he was a "splendid young fellow," the "ifs" and "if onlys" which frequently followed being swallowed up in the admiration akin to love with which he was regarded by all with whom he had to do. Once in a while a placid, far-seeing woman—a thoroughly good wife and mother—added: "And a dangerous young fellow;" but she was an old "sober-sides" any way, and, indeed, the scrupulous respect which she unfailingly received from him allayed, if it did not quite dispel, the instinct within herself. And so, by right of blood and brains and youth, he reigned, as he deserved, a king among men—"a splendid young fellow."

* * * * *

"So, then, Gratia, you positively refuse! Will your answer be this always? Is there no hope that it may be different when I return from this trip?"

A quick catching of the breath, a convulsive tightening of the arms about his neck, and he had to bend low to catch the whispered word "none" which fell from among the sobs that shook the tiny form within his arms.

"You have not the right love in your heart for me, then, or you would not answer thus," were the cruel words he forced himself to utter, while he gently, but very firmly, unlocked the clasped fingers and disengaged himself from their hold, closely watching all the while the white face almost whollid hidden upon his breast; then slowly rising and putting her quite from him, he began to make preparations for his departure, when, with a sharp cry, the girl flung herself at his feet, in a perfect passion of agonized entreaty that he should believe her great love for him, imploring him to love her still, even if they should never meet again, to let her memory at least remain with him wherever he might go.

Deepest pity stirred the soul of the man as he looked down upon her and noted the havoc which a six months' separation, with the last three days of fateful struggle, had made with the bright, laughing beauty who had won his heart, and sincerely he wished they had never met. But the pride of worldly distinction, the influence of an ambitious mother, the promptings of a selfishness not his own, led him on to the final conflict.

"We may as well end this here and now, Gratia," he said, very gently. "Indeed, it is quite necessary that we should, for"—very slowly, dreading the effect of his words—"for—I—am—going—to—be—married. My mother has prevailed upon me to quit the road, and has secured for me an interest in a large manufacturing business, which my uncle controls, in the Northwest. She has already moved there, and there I am expected to join them in a few days. Through them I met the lady who is to be my wife. An heiress, rich, good-looking, gentle, who will no doubt make an excellent helpmeet for 'yours truly.' You will bid me happiness, Gratia, won't you? Surely we may part as friends."

He need not have feared an outbreak. Neither sound nor motion indicated that the form cowering at his feet heard one word of the message—naught save the pitiful shudder which passed through her frame. Death, indeed, but with this difference: the soul, too suddenly stricken to escape, died within, and remained—the corpse of a heart—within a living body.

Lifting her in his arms, tenderly as a sister might a daughter he saw suffer, he laid her on the poor little hard lounge, and pushing back the masses of beautiful auburn hair—such rare beautiful hair!—he kissed her reverently many times, as one might the face of the loved dead, and bidding her good-by, once more he slowly left the room—longingly, as if hopeful of a recall to the last moment. A gentle but sure click of the latch—a light step on the stair—a slam of the outer door—a retreating tread on the pavement below—and Fate had done her worst.

* * * * *

It is a provincial town, but one of those bustling, wide-awake, welcoming sort of places, where, on arriving, one tarries, and tarrying, loves to stay. Of large manufacturing interests, it has grown quickly prosperous, and its people, proud and happy thereat, let the overflow of their pride and happiness fall upon the stranger within their gates, who thus happily wooed, quickly becomes, and forever remains, its friend.

In a large handsomely furnished parlor, bright with rich furniture and tasteful hangings, the glow of the firelight coloring the whole as a painting, a tall, strapping fellow with fair, sunny countenance is reclining in careless grace on a low divan on one side of the cheerful fire; a dark, handsome lady, not long past middle age—a proud, well-bred, well-kept-looking lady—is seated by a small table on the other. So like, yet so unlike, this mother and son!

Some unpleasant subject is evidently under discussion. A shade of disturbance over the features of the mother, the nervous folding and unfolding of the shapely hands in her lap, the tapping of the foot on the soft rug, and the too quick rise and fall of the flowers which the young fellow has just kissed into place on her bosom, show the presence of an emotion not happy.

"You cannot fail to note, mother, that Mabel and I were never cut out for each other. She bores me terribly, and nothing I can say or do seems to give her any pleasure. I honestly believe myself the girl is devoid of the sense of pleasure. I vow I never——"

"Silence, my son! Remember you speak of your promised wife. Your engagement alone should curb even such thoughts as these!"

He has risen, and is standing respectfully by her side.

"You must not be angry with me, mother—indeed, you will not—when I tell you that Mabel and I have already broken our engagement, and she, to-night, is free as I am from bonds we should never have worn. Hugh Cameron will please her every bit as well as I, and he, I assure you, is quite charmed with her—indeed, for this I introduced them. I have arranged to relieve us all of embarrassment," he continued, his voice deepening with the manful earnestness of his resolution, "by accepting a very fine position with a San Francisco house, for whom I shall travel till I show myself worthy of something better. Within ten days I hope to start for there."

Surprise, anger, mortification, grief, quickly chase one another over the pale face of the lady. Whatever feelings he may have of the truth of her son's argument, or admiration for his startling independence of character, is wholly concealed by the haughty dignity of her manner and the icy tone of the reproaches that fall upon his ear, as, for the first time in her life, she withdraws from the touch of her idolized son.

"There is no other course left to me, mother," he said. "I trust you will see later that it is the wisest. It is what you yourself would have me do. Mother, you know me and you know her. Can you blame me?"

He gently strokes the shining black braids with the soft, magnetic touch which has conquered every woman who ever felt it—save one—and drawing her face toward him raises it and kisses her on the lips. "Dear mother, let your blessing go with me as I leave you."

Her heart is melted, and like every other woman—save one—regardless alike of pride, ambition, consequences, present or future, she turns her eyes to his, and with all the mother in the cry, "O, my darling son!" she throws her arms around him and sobs out her grief on his breast.

* * * * *

It is chilly, for San Francisco, and in an elegant room of one of the best hotels a splendid young fellow is smoking in front of a huge fire, one arm thrown over his head, the other steering the fine havana back and forth through its accustomed path. He is less boyish-looking, a shade heavier, perhaps, but with the same bonnie debonnair grace of person and manner as when, over a year ago, he started out for the San Francisco house.

He has since traveled over most of the Western country, giving the very best of his splendid talents to the success of his business concerns, till the firm, not slow to discover the enterprise and ability of the "young drummer from Illinois," called him off the road into the house, where he speedily rose, till now he is the junior partner of one of the richest mercantile houses in the country.

But, all through his travels and successes, there ever lived with him the sad memory of a shabby little room with its scanty furnishing, and the sad, stricken figure on the poor little hard lounge, with all her great wealth of beauty and love for him; for with all his varied experience with women of all kinds, classes, and degrees, never does he find such wealth of love, such passionate worship, such unselfish devotion as that which fell at his feet with its piteous appeal of word and look that bitter night over a year ago; and as the memory of it grows and brightens, so enormous does the selfish cruelty of his conduct become in his eyes, that many a time he wishes to be somebody else, that he may soundly horsewhip himself for shame of it. Daily stronger grows the desire to know what has become of her. Dead perhaps, perhaps married—a sharp sting follows the thought—and to-night in the firelight, a resolution shapes itself in his heart and brain—the rich successful man of the world—to go and see.

But his reverie is interrupted by the breaking in upon him of three bright, dashing fellows who have come, as usual, to the fountain head to decide what disposition to make of the evening. The party is undecided whether to remain at home and enjoy a quiet game of "draw," or go to the theater, till a sudden, "Heads we go, tails we stay!" relieves them of responsibility, and a gay "Heads it is!" settles the question, and to the thoughtful smoker is left the casting vote as to where it shall be.

"Queen of One Heart," the title of a new opera just then having a successful run at the California, strikes his fancy, and a half hour later finds the interesting quartette comfortably ensconced, "within long range" to be sure, but in good view of the stage.

Too well accustomed to his partiality for female beauty on or off the stage, his companions do not notice the sudden change in expression, the marked earnestness of manner, and the prolonged use of the opera glass by their friend, as the "favorite" advances slowly to the footlights.

Favorite, indeed! and small wonder!

Such rare, peculiar beauty! A small, graceful form, a mass of wonderful auburn hair, and dark, sad eyes—restless, and glowing like coals of fire as they roam fitfully over the house—down stairs, over the galleries, through the boxes, and wearily back to the lights at her feet.

She sees nothing, however, but the glimmer of light, the flesh-tinted sea, and the shadows thrown around like a cloak.

It is the last night of a long and successful engagement, and a feeling akin to love for the great mass of human beings who have petted, praised, and made her their idol, stirs within her at the well-known hum of admiration which welcomes her presence. She owes it to them to show how the "Queen of One Heart" can rule.

And never was part so played before. The fervid glow of genius, excited to white heat, melted and bent and shaped the scenes through which she passed, entrancing the ears, startling the hearts, and maddening the senses of the spell-bound throng. More than one close observer noted the unwonted excitement, the unusual blaze of the luminous eyes, the spot of flame on each cheek, and the passionate vibration of the exquisite tones, and one young fellow, in a seat far back, dropped his glass and sank back in his seat with a sigh—perhaps of relief. "It is impossible! It cannot be! She had a dear little voice, to be sure, with which she sung her quaint little ballads for him—but this! Oh no, it is quite impossible!"

Once, twice, thrice, she is recalled. For the fourth time the thrilling tones rise above the peals of applause. The beautiful arms are outstretched, the wonderful face illuminated by a strange light, the whole frame in a tremble of passionate excitement; when suddenly, and without a second's warning, a break in the voice—a swaying of the slight figure, a few gasping sounds—a shiver—and a senseless line of glittering costume, a white face distorted by pain, two little hands clutching the left side, meet the gaze of the grief-stricken crowd.

Expressions of pity, shame, and remorse at their thoughtless greediness pass from lip to lip as the people lingeringly disperse, and foremost in the small crowd of the more venturesome who press behind the scenes is a tall, elegant form, with an unaccustomed look of anxiety in the bold, bright eyes, as he passes his few courteous regrets to the manager who received them.

But "Madamoiselle is too ill to see any one. Only a trifling indisposition, to be sure: a slight attack of the heart to which she is subject; still the doctor insists on absolute quiet, or serious results may follow."

"I will see her in the morning," he thinks, as he comes away. "I must know for certain." And Fate meets him at his hotel with a telegram—business of the utmost importance demanding his presence immediately with the Eastern branch of the house—and six hours later, with a small grip in his hand, and a great disturbance in his heart, he is on his way toward the rocky fence between him and—WHAT?

* * * * *

It is Christmas Day in Chicago, and the boulevards of the gay young metropolis resound with the jingle of many bells and the voices and gay laughter of the merry riders.

The reflected light of the snowy world streams into a long, low room—the same little room whose poor shabbiness witnessed the pitiful parting within its four walls just one year and a half ago.

But it is no longer the poor little room, with scanty furnishing, but a dainty boudoir, in which everything that refined taste could devise or wealth furnish is to be found.

Only two familiar objects remain—a large, brown arm-chair and a tiny shell! The big chair stands in a corner, looking sullen and lonesome, and—empty. The shell is mounted in a gold frame, and ingeniously covered with glass. Its contents—the ashes of two cigars!

A girl, frail and slender, but very beautiful, is lying on a soft couch of creamy satin. Rich auburn hair falls over the cushion. The eyes are closed, the little hands crossed over a bosom whose quick rise and fall show that the attitude of weariness belongs not to the rest of sleep. The breath comes fitfully through the sweet parted lips, and all the tears have not quite left their beautiful homes.

A large bouquet of flowers is on a table near by, and beside it an open letter, both messages from the manager of the opera of which she is now the acknowledged and idolized star—the dear, kind gentleman, who has been her brother, friend, and counselor ever since the day she first appeared before him a miserable, beautiful girl, and begged him for God's sake to save her from the dark lake by letting her go with his company. He never sought to know her trouble, only to share it, to help her bear it; and now, to save her the excitement of all future public living, he offers to make her his wife.

And she has wept all her faint strength away, for grief that one more must suffer; for—strive as she will, it is all in vain—the heart has died within her, and wakes but to one call.

Hark! A vigorous ring of the door-bell. Voices in the hall. A light step on the stair, a low knock. It cannot be! It cannot be!

Straight into his open arms. Two soft arms back to their accustomed place. It cannot be! His eyes, his voice, his touch again! Madly she clings to him, pressing kiss upon kiss on lips, and eyes, and hair, calling him by every endearing name in a low, cooing voice, more like a young mother with her babe, till suddenly, memory returns, and, with a cry, she starts back, and seeks in bitter humiliation to tear herself apart. But the strong arms are there, and are not now willing to give up what once they lost so blindly.

"I have come back to ask your pardon, Gratia, for the great wrong I once did you. To ask you to forget the past. To ask you to be my true wedded wife! Do you hear, dear? my own true wife."

"But the lady—the lady that——"

"God would not let such a cruel happening separate two such loving souls as ours, dear. He saved me for you."

And he tells her, little by little, of his break with Mabel, the parting with his mother, his travels, successes, fine prospects, his sudden recall.

"But you do not answer me, dear. Surely you can forgive——"

He stoops to raise the beautiful head from its hiding place—but no voice, no move, no response. One little hand, pitifully upturned, falls over his arm. The other—the tell-tale clutch of the left side!

And long may he call without an answer, and often may he press the sweet lips for reply. For the poor little heart so long dead, in coming to life at his call escaped, and poor little Gratia had Christmas in heaven!

Another Contribution.

Mr. George Sabberly, of Dry Fork, Ark., recently sent a batch of news notes to the North American Review, but as that journal refused to print them, Mr. Subberly has decided to become a contributor of the Century magazine:

DRY FORK, January, 1886.

MISTER EDITOR—I did think that I would do some writing for the North American Review, but as that there pamphlet refused to pay me I turn my attention to your popular pamphet. I understand that you pay putty well and as I haven't got much to do at this time of the year, wife she 'lowed that I'd better try you a few falls, so, as the feller said when he tilted the jug:

Ef I'd never seed yer I'd never toch yer.

You'd better put that in your funny department, and I want to say right here that humor is my holt. Wife 'lows that I'd make a hog laugh. Here's the items. You can select the funny ones from the others.

Circumstances Alter Cases.

"Strange thing about people," said the talkative passenger to a glum-looking man; "just before I got on the cars there was a runaway, and a bad one. The driver wasn't hurt at all, but the horse ran about half a mile, and then collided with a telegraph pole and was killed. You ought to have seen the people run to that telegraph pole. They went in droves. It seemed to be human to desire to be in at the death. Haven't you noticed that in your experience?"

"Can't say that I have," replied the glum-looking passenger; "at least it's not so in my business."

"What business are you in?"

"Theatrical. Last night we had a new play killed at our theater, and there wasn't ten dollars in the house. People didn't seem to want to be in at the death worth a cuss."—Chicago Herald.

In No Hurry to Hear It.

"So you say that Wagner's music is the music of the future?" said a Brooklyn man to a professor of music.

"Yes, sir."

"Well, I'm glad of it."

"Why so?"

"Because I shall have to die before being compelled to listen to it."—New York Journal.

HUMOR.

IF American ladies have no temper, we don't see how they can lose it so often.

WOMEN seldom complain of their mothers-in-law. They know how it is themselves.

NEVER borrow trouble. The interest you have to pay for the accommodation is excessive.

AT the Fanciers' Show: "Have you seen Fitzsimpkins' dawg?" "Naw. Has Fitzsimpkins got a dawg?" "Yaas. A big, hairy dawg." "What does he want with a dawg?" "Why, what does any fellow want with a dawg?" "I'm shuah I don't knaw. Do you?" "Naw." The question is tabled.—New York Town Topics.

A SCOTCH minister was once preaching to quite a small congregation, when he observed they were all asleep but one man, and he was a partial idiot. The minister remarked: "It is too bad that all of my congregation are asleep, except a poor sinner like you, Sammy." "Yes," said Sammy, "and I would be asleep, too, if I was not a fool."

NEVER do anything hastily. A man in Atlanta, Ga., after the prohibition triumph in that city, sent clear to Newark, N. J., and paid $50 for a mad dog before learning that whisky is not used as an antidote in hydrophobia. He might have sent to Texas and got a snake for ten cents that would have been of some account to him.—Brooklyn Eagle.

ANDREW HARMON was a well-known Maine soldier. He fought as well as he could and came out of the service broken down, and is now a pensioner. He came to the postoffice one day with an ordinary letter covered with six or eight postage-stamps. "Why, Andrew!" exclaimed the Postmaster, "you don't need all these stamps. One is enough." "You mind your business," said Andrew. "The Government has used me well and I'm going to use the Government well."—Lewiston Journal.

ONCE upon a time a certain man got mad at the editor and stopped his paper. The next week he sold his corn four cents below market price. Then his property was sold for taxes because he did not read the Sheriff's sales. He was arrested and fined $8 for going hunting Sunday. He then paid a big Irishman to kick him all the way to the newspaper office, where he paid for four years' subscription in advance, and made the editor sign an agreement to knock him down and rob him if he ever ordered his paper stopped again. Such is life without a newspaper.—Abilene (Tex.) Reporter.

EPITAPHS.

[On a pugilist.]

In his last round this noted pugilist
Received a blow that quickly stopped his breath;
No wonder, for his grim antagonist
Was Death.

[On a dyer.]

A very worthy man lies here,
His cares and troubles past,
He dyed for others many a year
And died himself at last.

[On an angler.]

He's gone the way of small and great,
And rests secure here from life's storms;
He often dug up worms for bait,
Now he is bait for worms.

[On a horse-car conductor.]

Of misery he had his share,
His life was one of worry;
Death came along, took up his fare,
And passed him on to glory.

[On a tormagant.]

Of bitter tongue and countenance severe,
No other woman earth so well could spare;
If, where she's gone, she talks as she did here
She'll surely make things mighty lively there.

[On a tromboneplayer.]

The last is heaped upon his breast,
He's ceased his labors;
He plays no longer, he's at rest,
So are the neighbors.

THERE is nothing so rare as to find humor in an official dispatch; and when found, as Captain Cuttle says, we should make a note of it. A high official has lately died in one of our colonies; and his deputy, inexperienced, as I suppose, in the literature of his calling, has forwarded to the home Government an account of the funeral of the deceased. "He was beloved by all; all classes vied in doing honor to his memory; and I am sure, under happier circumstances, nothing would have given him more pleasure than to behold such universal regret." Where does this gentleman imagine his former superior to be?—James Payn, in Independent.

Instantly Relieved.

Mrs. Ann Lacour, of New Orleans, La., writes: "I have a son who has been sick for two years; he has been attended by our leading physicians, but all to no purpose. This morning he had his usual spell of coughing, and was so greatly prostrated in consequence that death seemed imminent. We had in the house a bottle of DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS, purchased by my husband, who noticed your advertisement yesterday. We administered it, and he was instantly relieved."

American Bald Heads.

It has been estimated that one-half the adult men of American birth living in our cities are bald-headed. The estimate is not exaggerated, if it is applied to persons above the age of thirty, and it may be rather under the mark. If, now, it be conceded that one-half of our American business and professional men are bald at the present time, it would be interesting to speculate as to the condition of the heads of their descendants some hundreds of years from now. The probabilities point toward a race of hairless Americans, for baldness is extremely liable to be propagated in the male line, and to appear a little earlier in each generation. The American nation is threatened with the catastrophe of a universal alopecia.

The answer had almost always been that it is due to the excessive strain and ceaseless mental and physical activity to which American methods of business and modes of living conduce. From the visitors' gallery of the Stock Exchange, for example, one views a mob of shining pates belonging, as a rule, to rather young men.

The sons of prematurely bald fathers should bear in mind that if they wish to save their hair it will only be through industrious attention to their scalp. This much neglected surface should be thoroughly cleansed at certain intervals. It should be carefully and regularly examined, and if it be unhealthy, dry and scurvy, the proper applications should be made to it. The wearing of unventilated hats is one of the greatest sources of failure of nutrition of the hair, and these must be avoided. The beard never falls out, because it gets plenty of sunlight and air. These are what the hair of the scalp needs, also. Women are less bald than men, because, for one reason, their scalps are better ventilated. In fine, civilization has made the hair-producing organs of the scalp delicate and feeble. They have to be nursed and cared for, or they become atrophied and disappear. Young Americans who do not wish to lose their hair before they are forty, must begin to look at their scalps before they are twenty.—Medical Record.

The Stomach as a Gasometer.

In the dyspeptic stomach impure gases are generated, after meals, that distend and distress it, as well as the bowels. The best carminative for cramps, colicky pains, and heartburn or bilious eructations, is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. Carbonate of soda and effervescing aperients are far inferior to it in efficacy, and, as physicians now understand, impair the tone of the stomach. Copious libations of any sort are injurious to the stomach, and to dilute its juices is certainly not the way to increase their digestive usefulness. Aided by the Bitters, the digestive organs, when enfeebled and disordered, regain their lost tone and regularity, not, of course, immediately, but with a degree of rapidity highly inditive of the excellence of the remedy. It has the further effect of regulating the bowels and liver, protecting the system against malaria, relieving rheumatism and neuralgia, and increasing constitutional vigor.

Reform in Dinner Habits.

Philadelphia is making a determined effort to dissipate the dullness of conventional entertainments. At one feast it is said "the guests did not sit at the table at all, but sat in the parlor, and, while indulging in conversation, were served with the choice repast in courses." At a Clover Club dinner the waiters, "dressed in different costumes to serve particular dishes, brought variety to the feast. Meat was served by waiters dressed as butchers, black waiters dressed in white brought terrapin, and white waiters dressed in black served French dishes. A 'progressive luncheon' is another novel introduction. Four people sat at each table, and at the end of each course changed positions in the manner of progressive euchre." The last-named innovation would be very welcome at some of the three-hour dinners—particularly if one's table companion did not happen to be wholly agreeable.—Boston Herald.

Don't Eat Too Much.

According to a hygienic article just published in the London Lancet, the appetite is a misleading sensation, only remotely related to the actual demands of the organism. If we only ate more deliberately we should find half our accustomed quantity of food sufficient to satisfy the most eager cravings of hunger, and hence save ourselves from dyspepsia.

The Great German Physician.

The remarkable phase in the practice of Dr. Peter W. Schmidt (frequently called Dr. Pete) is, he never asked one to describe their disease but tells each one their trouble without asking a question. His success is phenomenal. His practice enormous. He is sought after by hundreds wherever he goes, because he cures when every other physician and remedy have failed. He has allowed his great medicines, Golden Seal Bitters and Lung Food for Consumption, to be offered to the suffering, and we assert without fear of successful contradiction that there is no disease they will not cure. Thousands of bottles have been sold. Thousands of broken-down and discouraged invalids saved. Send to Golden Seal Bitters Company, Holland City, Mich., for Facts for the Million! Free.

A Bruised Foot—A True Story.

M. A. L.

"Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging; Whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise."

Mr. B. was helping raise a building. A log rolled upon his foot and bruised it. There was no bone broken, no joint dislocated, no sprain. He was sure he was not hurt much. He was advised to go home, and do something for his foot, but did not think it necessary. In a few days it became inflamed and sore. After trying some remedies, it was better. He was restless and impatient, and used it too much, and it was again worse. For some time it was better and worse alternately. At length it was so much worse that he consulted a physician. The doctor told him he thought he could cure him in a short time. But just as soon as he was a little better, he dismissed the doctor. He was soon taken worse. All this time he was drinking whiskey freely. When called again, the doctor told him that he could not be cured unless he abstained from strong drink and kept still. He gave heed to the doctor's charge for a little while, but when his foot was better, he again drank liquor, and his foot became so painful, and so badly inflamed that he was obliged to take his bed. Then the doctor told him that unless he entirely abstained from drink, he would lose his foot. It would be necessary to cut it off to save his life. But if he would not drink at all, he was sure he could save his foot. He stopped drinking for a few days and was improving. Then he thought he would run the risk of gratifying his appetite. Soon his foot was so bad that amputation was necessary. Liquor was kept from him. The operation was performed successfully. So long as he was kept from drinking whiskey, he seemed to do well. But he had a terrible thirst for it. He threatened his wife and children with fearful punishment if they did not bring it to him to drink in bed. If they kept out of his reach, they escaped unhurt. One day he ordered his little girl to bring him a dipper of boiling water. She did so. Then crazed with his burning appetite, he threatened to dash it on his wife if she did not bring him whiskey. She was so much afraid of him, she yielded. There was now no hope for him. They no longer succeeded in keeping it from him. Sometimes, when he thought he was likely to die he would confess some of his faults, and talk of reform. When he felt more comfortable, he was as bad as ever. He was a terror in his family, and very disagreeable to his neighbors. But he could not live very long in this way. Death came. The whiskey killed him, as his physicians had said. He had drank too much; his blood was affected badly. He gave himself up to his appetite, until he had no power, no desire to resist it. He may have drank many times, before he acquired this strong appetite. But it became so strong, that he was conquered, before he was aware of it. Where will this man's portion be in the world to come? What kind of a world was he fitted for?

Little Phil as a Speculator.

John Mackey has gone to Washington to lobby through a claim of $250,000 which, he holds, the government owes the Bank of Nevada on account of moneys advanced to land speculators and surveyors and sharks. It is not exactly known where General Sheridan is now, but it is to be hoped he is not in Washington. If Sheridan should ever meet Mackay at close taw, there is no knowing what the result might be. Sheridan is short. Mackey is tall, but the one is a fighter and the other isn't. Mackey once got Sheridan to make an investment of over $12,000 in the Sierra Grande Mine down in New Mexico. This was the famous George Roberts steal, and most of those who got jammed never whimpered. Sheridan would not perhaps have squealed had he not heard that Mackey claimed to have nothing whatever to do with the thing; that he had no money in it, and was merely backing George Roberts, an old coaster, in the latter's scheme. When Little Phil got on to the scheme he never squeaked, but he had for John Mackey. He made a journey from Chicago to New York expressly. He saw the husband of Mrs. Mackey and the "Arc de Triompne," and the man with the pick under ground gave way to the man on the black horse. History will perhaps never contain the record of that interview, but the story is that the cavalryman raided the miner and got at his sluice boxes. He got his $12,000 back.—Chicago Herald.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Whereas default has been made in the payment of the money secured by a mortgage dated the 12th day of November, in the year A. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-one, executed by Mary A. Thomas to John Frenz, which mortgage was recorded in the office of the register of deeds, of the county of Charlevoix, in the state of Michigan, in liber 8 of mortgages at page 494, on the 29th day of November, in the year A. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-one, at two o'clock in the afternoon of said day. And whereas, the said mortgage has been duly assigned by the said John Frenz, to Daniel Head, by instrument of assignment bearing date the 10th day of May, in the year A. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-two, and recorded in the office of the register of deeds of said county of Charlevoix, on the 14th day of July in the year A. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-three, at two o'clock in the afternoon of said day, in liber 9 of mortgages, at page 101, and the same is now owned by the said Daniel Head. And whereas the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice, is the sum of Thirteen Hundred and seventy two dollars and seven y cents ($1,372.70), principal and interest, and a further sum of thirty dollars ($30), provided by law as an attorney fee in the foreclosure of said mortgage which is the whole amount claimed to be due and unpaid on said mortgage, and no suit or proceeding at law or in chancery having been instituted to recover the debt now remaining secured by the said mortgage, or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described at public auction to the highest bidder, at the front door of the Town Hall, in the township of South Arm, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, which is the place of holding the circuit court for said county, on Wednesday, the 19th day of May, 1886, at twelve o'clock meridian, which premises are described in the said mortgage as follows, to wit: Lot three (3), and the south one-half (½) of the south-west one-quarter (¼) of section seventeen (17), in township thirty-three (33) north, range seven (7) west, in the county of Charlevoix and state of Michigan, and containing in all one hundred and forty-five and twenty-five one-hundredths acres of land, according to the United States survey thereof, excepting, however, the north one-half (¼) of the south-west one-quarter (¼) of the south-west one-quarter (¼) of said section seventeen (17), and also excepting lots number two (2), three (3), four (4), five (5), six (6), seven (7), eight (8), and fifteen (15), in Scholfen's addition to the village of Ironton, according to the recorded plat thereof, which have been released from said mortgage by the assignee thereof.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the condition of a certain mortgage, made by Mary Blackbird to John A. Bacot, dated October 3d, A. D. 1884, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, for the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, on the 3d day of October, A. D. 1884, in liber 8 of mortgages, on page 522, which said mortgage was on the 22d day of December, 1884, assigned by said John A. Bacot to Frederick W. Mayne, said assignment being on record in the Registers office for Charlevoix county, in liber 10 of mortgages on page 610, and on the 14th day of December 1885, was assigned by said Frederick W. Mayne to Hugh Miller, said assignment being recorded in the Registers office for Charlevoix county, in liber 13 of mortgages, on page 146, on which mortgage there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of Two hundred dollars, and sixty-five cents, as principal and interest, and no suit or proceedings at law having been instituted to recover the moneys secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof. Now, therefore, by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and the statute in such case made and provided, notice is hereby given that on Saturday, the 19th day of June A. D. 1886, at one o'clock in the afternoon, I shall sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door of the town hall in the village of East Jordan, (that being the place where the Circuit Court for Charlevoix County is holden,) the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the amount due on said mortgage, with ten per cent interest, and all legal costs, together with an attorney's fee of fifteen dollars, covenanted for therein, the premises being described in said mortgage as all that parcel of land, situate in the township of Hayes, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, and known and described as follows: The south west quarter (¼) of the south west quarter (¼) of section thirty-six (36) township thirty four (34) north of range seven (7) west, containing forty acres according to the United States survey.

Dated Charlevoix, Mich., March 15, 1886.

TEN YEARS AGO, on December 26th, 1875, The CHICAGO DAILY NEWS was founded. It was the pioneer of low-priced journalism in the west. From the first the controlling conviction of its managers has been that a "cheap paper" should be cheap only in price; that its news should be as fresh and complete, its editorial discussion as able, and its general tone and character as pure and healthful as its best and highest-priced contemporary. This has been its ideal. How well it has succeeded in the actual attainment of so high a standard is best evidenced in the fact that it now regularly prints and sells over 150,000 papers a day,—a larger circulation than that of all other Chicago dailies combined.

The CHICAGO DAILY NEWS is an INDEPENDENT newspaper. It is not partisan. Neither is it a neutral. It is a paper of positive opinion, expressed without fear or favor. It seeks the patronage of people who love country more than party.

The CHICAGO DAILY NEWS is the only 2 cent paper in the west that is a member of the Associated Press. It prints ALL THE NEWS.

Sold by all news dealers at two cents per copy. Mailed to any address, postage prepaid, for six dollars per year, or for a shorter term at rate of fifty cents per month. Address Victor F. Lawson, Publisher The DAILY NEWS, 123 Fifth Ave., CHICAGO, ILL.

The CHICAGO WEEKLY NEWS—8 pages, 64 columns—is the largest dollar weekly in America.

This new invention possesses many qualities peculiarly adapted to farmers of this vicinity.

TEN REASONS:

1. It sows the roughest or smoothest soils.
2. It sows evenly all kinds of grain and seeds, large and small. Wheat, barley, clover, timothy, ruta baga, etc.
3. It sows any desired quantity. One-fourth pound of ruta baga seed can be spread over an acre of ground with perfect ease and accuracy.
4. It sows rapidly. With wheat it covers 48 feet to the round. Clover 42; clover and timothy mixed 36. Ten acres of clover sowed in 2¼ hours.
5. It is not affected by quite a strong wind.
6. It is quickly adjusted to different quantities of grain.
7. It cannot clog.
8. It is easily operated.
9. It is cheap.
10. It is durable.

Resolutions on the Death of Mrs. E. H. Green.

To the Hon. E. H. Green, President Charlevoix Historical Society.

We, the members of the society and your neighbors and friends, desire to convey our heartfelt sympathy to yourself and family in this dark hour of sorrow and bereavement, and also to express the deep sense of the great loss we have sustained in the death of your beloved wife.

We are aware that many words from us could not express our sense of your bereavement nor our own personal loss; neither can weak words heal a sorrowing heart.

We therefore, as a slight token of our regard, have instructed the executive committee of the society to indefinitely postpone the entertainment, which was to have been given this evening as the closing exercises of the year, and hope that in this way you will be assured of the sincerity of our sorrow and sympathy.

In behalf of the select committee,
JOHN NICHOLLS, Chairman.

Adopted at a special meeting of the Society, April 23, 1886.
MAUDE LOVEDAY, Secretary.

To the Editors of the Journal:—Owing to necessary absence from home, I was unable to prepare a copy of the resolutions for last week's issue of the JOURNAL. I hope both you and the society will pardon the delay. Respectfully,
MAUD LOVEDAY.

A Sunday school was organized at Maple Grove school house a week ago last Sunday, with Mrs. Gibson as superintendent, Mr. Mineer assistant, Chauncey Howe, treasurer, and Miss Ollie Mineer as secretary.

Lyman Bennett received some pretty rough usuage while helping load ties at Oyster Bay. A pile of ties fell on him.

An "occasional" correspondent of the N. Y. Herald, who seems to have special facilities for discovering what the senate is doing in executive session, writes that Senator Wilson of Iowa has prepared a report upon the removal of the republican postmaster at Dennison, in his state. It is alleged that in this report Mr. Wilson will attack the president, and that the republicans will issue the paper as a campaign document. The peculiar meanness of this business is that the president's side cannot be made known except by a breach of the privileges of the senate, and that even then the statement will be unofficial. Small spitefulness like this will probably do the republican senators little good; but it is well for all who have the success of the cause of civil service reform at heart to remember that the chief effort of the republican party during the past winter has been directed to discrediting the efforts of the only executive officer who has honestly tried to administer the law in spirit and in letter.—N. Y. Star.

Evidences of democratic reform are making their appearance in a reduction of the expenses of the management of government affairs. Several officials of the treasury department have been before the appropriation committee of the house and voluntarily stated that they found the force of clerks in their departments unnecessarily large and recommended a reduction in number and expenses. In some of these departments the work, when the new official assumed their duties, was found months behind. This has all been brought up with the force that was on duty when the transfer was made a year ago, and the new officials find it practicable to reduce their force in a way that will prove a saving of many thousand dollars to the government in the way of salaries.—Big Rapids Herald.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 28.—The house passed to day Mr. Maybury's bill providing that hereafter no alien who has not declared his intentions to become a citizen of the United States shall be granted a license as pilot, engineer, mate, captain, or other officer on any steam vessel carrying the flag of the United States. It is believed that it will pass the senate.

How to "Kill" Engines.

"Tell me how St. Louis strikers 'kill' so many engines and render them useless for service, will you?" asked a reporter for the Denver Tribune of an engineer who was busy oiling the links of his engine in one of the local round house yards.

The runner looked over his questioner and asked: "Are you a reporter?"

"Yes, sir."

"Then I've nothing to say. Besides I am too busy now to talk anyhow. Catch on to some one else."

The questioner found some one else in the "barn" whom he knew, and who would talk.

"How they 'kill' engine, hey? Well, the quickest and surest way is to take this away," the runner replied, laying his hand on the throttle lever. "Shut the throttle by pushing in the lever pin, disconnect the fulcrum connections with the boiler head, stick the lever under your coat and march off with it and the engine is useless. Even if she is near the machine shop it will require a couple of days to replace the lever at a cost of $14, as it must be forged and turned, and the brass throttle ratchet must be cast, filed and polished. That is much better than to carry off connecting-rods, as I saw represented recently in an illustrated paper. It would take two men at least to cart away one connecting-rod, which you know connects the crank-pin of the forward driver with the cross-head, though that disables a locomotive of course."

"Several Vandalia trains were killed by the steam gauges being knocked off, so the dispatches said."

"If that is all the dispatches said they didn't cover all the ground, because the water glasses would be left, and the engineer can run without the one if he has the other. If the gauges are knocked out the holes can be readily plugged up, and new gauges only cost 75 cents each. But if gauges and the water-glass with its fittings are busted, the engine is no good.

"Any attempt to run will end in burning her flues and crown sheet. You see where these parts are covered everything is lovely, but with low water they burn out. I've seen a burnt crown sheet dropped down from its braces almost into the grate. An explosion occurs at such times which tears everything to pieces. But then the strikers on the Gould system have burned no engines, and any parts they have carried off will turn up all right after the strike."

"Are there other parts of the machinery that can be taken away to 'kill' a locomotive?"

"Oh, my, yes. Take down the eccentric links or take off the valve stems and your engine is dead. The favorite way, when an engine is on the road, is to put out the fire, open the blow-off cock, which you see standing out from the side of the fire-box, under the cab, and let out all the water. Then the engine must be hauled to the nearest tank and filled up before she can be fired up.

"As for killing engines in the roundhouses, the strikers remove such of the parts I have mentioned as will require the longest time to replace, and very likely at the same time let the water all out of the boilers."

Discourteous Friendship.

One of the most common and no less one of the most irritating peculiarities of the growth of friendship is the corresponding and consequent growth of discourtesy which attends it. People who as mere acquaintances were civil enough to each other, become, after a very short progress toward intimacy, rude to a degree hardly credible in people of any pretentions to good breeding. Of course we do not mean here simply the ordinary waiving of formalities, but a downright disregard of civilities, a wanton ignoring of personal tastes and peculiarities, and the indulgence in native rudeness and selfishness.

Of course to one punctilious from innate refinement and from genuine kindliness of feeling this breach of the decencies of friendship is not to be expected, but friendship with too many people means essentially a demand for the tolerance of foibles and of selfishness, the very existence of which is incompatible with any high ideal of friendship. Friendship and forgiveness are too often made synonymous terms, and there are few of us too noble not sometimes unconsciously to presume upon the patience of those whom we honor with our regard in a way which our mere acquaintances would inevitably resent with a vigor which would go far toward bringing us back to the ways of politeness.

The true friend is not he who makes of friendship an excuse for greater laxity in matters of gentleness and courtesy, but who finds it a call to more exquisite courtesy, more careful thoughtfulness, more absolute and minute self-denial; who does not fall into the stupid blunder of supposing that informality means the disregard of the principles which underly politeness; and who never commits the selfish error of assuming insolence and impropriety excusable toward those we love. Every one can make the application of the principle; if he is honest to him. If not certainly to his neighbors; and making the application he will do well if he adds thereto the resolution that by him at least the high name of friendship shall not be dishonored by making it a cover for discourtesy and selfishness.—Boston Courier.

Concise Record of the Week.

EASTERN.

The Grant monument fund in New York now aggregates $120,648.

Near Garland, Warren County, Pa., it is claimed that gold has been found in paying quantities.

The stove foundry of Sherman S. Rogers & Co., Buffalo, N. Y., employing 500 men, has shut down because of labor agitations.

By the burning of a railroad boarding-house near the famous Kinzua viaduct, in Pennsylvania, six Italian laborers lost their lives and two others were seriously scorched.

The suit of Janeway & Co., of New Brunswick, N. J., against the Pennsylvania Railroad for $200,000 damages resulted in a verdict for the plaintiff for $179,806 for loss of both property and trade. The suit was a result of the collision at New Brunswick of an oil and a freight train. The oil ignited and set fire to Janeway's paper factory, which was burned to the ground.

The rolling-mill of Oliver Brothers & Phillips, at Pittsburgh, was closed down, owing to a strike of 300 employes, who demanded an advance in wages.

Inspector Byrnes arrested thirty boycotters, at New York, for interfering with the business of Messrs. Cavanagh, Sandford & Co., manufacturing clothiers. The warrants on which the boycotters were arrested were issued by Recorder Smyth.

General Butler, a famous trotting horse, died at New York last week. He contested the race with Cooley in Chicago, Sept. 22, 1866, when Wm. McKeever, the driver of Butler, was killed by some person who had speculated largely in pools on Cooley's winning.

The Evening Republic, of Buffalo, N. Y., has made its last appearance. A boycott led to its suspension.

H. H. Richardson, the famous architect, died at Boston last week.

WESTERN.

C. E. McChesney, Indian Agent at Cheyenne River, has served upon all the residents of Fort Pierre, Dakota, notice to close at once their trading establishments on the Sioux reservation and depart within thirty days. The village has 800 inhabitants, and the enforcement of the order will entail a loss of $500,000. The square mile on which the squatters live was once sold by the Sioux chiefs to the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad Company, but Congress failed to ratify the sale.

The Union School building and contents at Manistee, Mich., were destroyed by fire. Loss, $45,000. Insurance on building, $21,336, and on the library, furniture, fixtures, etc., $8,450. The fire was the work of an incendiary.

At St. Louis last week United States Commissioner Edmund T. Allen sold under foreclosure of mortgage at public auction the Wabash, St. Louis and Pacific Railroad, the total price paid for the entire property being $625,001. The committee appointed by the stock and bond holders to look after their interests were the only bidders, and the whole system, excepting the St. Joseph and St. Louis Branch, was purchased by them. W. F. Nesbitt, its President, purchased the latter road for $1.

The coal operators of the St. Louis district have averted a strike of several thousand miners by granting an increase in wages to two and one-half cents per bushel. Thirty grinders employed in the Deere plow factory at Moline, Ill., walked out because the scale of 1884 was not restored.

George E. Graham, the wife murderer, was taken from the jail at Springfield, Mo., by a mob of 300 men, and strung up to a tree. When the mob unlocked Graham's cell he greeted them with the remark: "You can hang me, but by G—d you can't scare me." The whole affair was conducted very quietly.

A freight train on the Missouri Pacific Road was wrecked on a curve just outside of Kansas City, on account of the removal of spikes from the rails. The engineer was seriously injured, and the fireman and a brakeman were killed. Vice President Hoxie has offered a reward of $2,500 for the arrest of the wreckers.

It is stated that three Chicago railroads will within eighteen months expend $40,000,000 upon extensions.

The gross earnings of the Northern Pacific Company for the month of March were $858,116; the operating expenses $449,055, and the net earnings $409,061.

Many survivors of the steamer Sultana horror held a reunion at Toledo, Ohio, last week. Near Memphis, on the morning of the 27th of April, 1865, the boilers of the vessel exploded, and 2,131 persons perished.

An unparalleled crime is reported from Seward County, Kansas. The wife of a farmer named Jacob Freimuth was assaulted and murdered by Fritz Rupin, a half-witted German, who has been for some time enjoying the hospitality of the Freimuths, being homeless and without friends. During the absence of Mr. Freimuth Rupin assaulted his benefactor's wife, then bound her hand and foot, and cut her throat from ear to ear. He then secured an old rusty hoe, and while the woman was yet writhing in the death struggle he disemboweled her with the blunt instrument. Mrs. Freimuth was enceinte, and when discovered the unborn babe lay a few feet from the body of the mother, cut in two. When Mr. Freimuth returned and discovered the mutilated body of his wife he became a raving maniac. A neighbor in that sparsely settled region who happened to be passing by found him wild with frenzy, but dared not approach for fear of his personal safety. He rode rapidly to a settlement some eight miles distant and told the terrible tale. A party was at once organized, and they returned to the scene of the outrage and found Freimuth weltering in his own blood. He had killed himself with a shotgun. A grave was dug, and the remains of the unfortunate people were buried. The posse then scoured the country for the murderer, and found him in a small ravine several miles from the scene of his crime, near the Cimarron River. A fractious horse was secured and saddled. One end of a long lariat was fastened around his neck and the other extremity was attached to the pommel of the saddle. The horse was then started, and amid the shouting of the men and crack of revolvers and rifles the frightened animal tore madly away. After a run of nearly five miles the beast fell exhausted and the lifeless body of the murderer was loosened as soon as the men came up. His head was almost severed from his body. The body was left lying on the prairie, uncovered.

A dispatch from Pantano, Ari., reports that forty Indians attacked Richardson & Gormley's ranch, twenty miles southwest of that point, and killed eight persons.

A mad dog at Pullman, Ill., bit several people before it was killed. A subscription was raised and the victims were sent to Paris for treatment by Pasteur.

In a labor dispute at St. Louis John Gibbons, a striker, assaulted William E. Withers, a scab. The latter then drew his revolver and shot Gibbons dead.

The capital of Alabama was beautifully decorated on the 28th ult. in honor of Jefferson Davis, who delivered an address to a vast multitude in aid of the Confederate soldiers' monument about to be erected. From the dome of the Statehouse floated the national flag. The orator was escorted to the grounds by a procession half a mile in length, and greeted by military salutes.

WASHINGTON.

The Treasury Department has ordered the revenue steamer Bear to leave San Francisco for a cruise as far northward as possible, in search of the crew of the wrecked whaler Amethyst.

The Secretary of the Knights of Labor, Frederick S. Turner, appeared as a witness before the House select committee, at Washington, and testified that there were twenty-one District Assemblies of the Knights of Labor in the United States, with about 6,000 local assemblies. In these local assemblies there were from 10 to 3,000 members. The Knights of Labor had no political object, and did not seek to influence legislation. He had known of no such movement on their part. He knew nothing of the petitions to Congress for unlimited coinage purporting to come from Knights of Labor. He thought they could be traced to societies outside of and unconnected with the Knights of Labor. Mr. Turner described the interview which he and his colleague, Mr. Bailey, had had with Mr. Hoxie in St. Louis. He said that Hoxie's treatment of them was very discourteous; that he stated he would have no conversation with them as officers of the Knights of Labor, but that he would receive them as American citizens. They informed him that they did not desire to stand on their dignity, and were willing to talk with him as private citizens; that all they wanted was to have the trouble settled, peace restored, and the men set back to work. Mr. Turner said that the general organization had the right to approve or disapprove of strikes. The present strike had not been approved. Witness indorsed the arbitration plan suggested by the President in his message to Congress.

A sub-committee of the House Committee on Pacific Roads has decided to report a bill providing for the annual payment to the Government of $1,813,000 by the Union Pacific for seventy years.

The issue of standard silver dollars from the mints during the week ended April 21 was 323,052. The issue during the corresponding period of last year was 162,998. The shipments of fractional silver coin since April 1 amount to $239,738.

Prof. Bell and Gardner G. Hubbard testified in the Pan-Electric inquiry at Washington. It was brought out by their examination that the New York World article was prepared by Gen. Sypher for Prof. Bell, by Bell sent to Hubbard, and by Hubbard sent to President Forbes of the Bell Company. Prof. Bell furnished the committee with this note from Gen. Sypher to Bell, which covered the article:

DEAR SIR—I hand you herewith an authentic statement of facts compiled by my associate, Mr. E. N. Hill, which may interest you. The scheme to destroy your patents was tolerably well matured, and it remains to be seen whether this reform administration will lend itself to its consummation.

E. N. Hill is the Lawyer Hill who figured in the Warder-Stealey investigation. He is a Washington lobbyist.

The House Committee on Territories has ordered an adverse report on the Senate bill to admit the southern half of the Territory of Dakota into the Union of States. The report will not be made until action is taken on other bills regarding the admission of Dakota.

POLITICAL.

There is a rumor that Gen. W. F. Rogers of Buffalo, a member of the last Congress, is to be appointed Public Printer in place of Mr. Rounds. Gen. Rogers is a practical printer and a successful man of business.

The majority report of the Payne Investigating Committee, recommending that the evidence adduced be certified to the President of the United States Senate, was adopted by the Ohio House by a strict party vote—61 to 33.

Washington telegram: "President Cleveland's message on the labor question is quite generally regarded here from a party point of view. Republican Senators and Representatives affect to see in it chiefly a bid for support of the Democratic party by workingmen. Democratic members of Congress say that it is unjust to assert that it was written with any partisan purpose in view, while they admit that it may be made an effective campaign document. Neither Republicans nor Democrats are disposed to find fault with the general tenor of Mr. Cleveland's recommendations. Senator Beck heartily indorses the message, and says he would like to see a labor commission consisting of Messrs. Thurman, McDonald, and Conkling, which he says would command respect everywhere and settle the labor question. The representatives of the Knights of Labor who have been attending the meetings of the House special committee commend the message but do not think it goes far enough. Mr. Powderly wants a Department of Labor established and Mr. McDowell wants such a department, and to have it given jurisdiction over ocean and interstate commerce."

Prohibition met with an overwhelming defeat at Richmond, Va., the election resulting in a majority of 5,681 in favor of licensing the sale of liquors. The vote in Manchester, a suburb of Richmond, was anti-prohibition; majority, 626. The colored vote was almost unanimously anti-prohibition. The Anti-Prohibitionists carried Lynchburg by 1,138 majority.

The Republicans of Oregon, in convention at Portland, nominated Binger Hermann, the present incumbent, for Representative in Congress by a unanimous vote. John B. Waldo, of Portland, was nominated for Supreme Judge, Thomas B. Cornelius, of Washington County, for Governor, and George W. McBride, of Columbia County, for Secretary of State. The resolutions adopted condemn the economy of Postmaster General Vilas, through which Oregon has been deprived of the ordinary mail facilities; denounce the alleged civil-service reform of the party in power as a sham, and the secrecy in withholding the causes of removal of officers as infamous; condemn the appointment of unrepentant Confederates over the heads of ex-Union soldiers; and insist that the bill to pension soldiers of the Mexican war be passed.

LATER NEWS ITEMS.

Gen. Sypher, an ex-Congressman from New Orleans, testified in the Pan-Electric investigation, and confirmed Professor Bell's statements—that the New York World newspaper article was composed by E. N. Hill, a lawyer-lobbyist lately from Arkansas. Whitelaw Reid, of the New York Tribune, testified that the first article concerning Attorney General Garland's connection with the Pan-Electric Company had been prepared by Major Clark, one of the Tribune's Washington correspondents. The Tribune had not paid anything for the matter. T. C. Crawford, the Washington correspondent of the New York World, testified that he obtained the facts on which he based his letter, printed in the World and headed "Lond Call for Mr. Goode," from a United States Senator. He declined to tell the Senator's name without his consent. He had obtained the original history of the case from E. N. Hill.

The corner-stone of the monument to be erected in honor of Alabama's Confederate soldiers was laid at Montgomery, Ala., on the 29th ult. The central figure of the occasion was Jeff Davis, who delivered the oration. The unhappy old man took occasion, as is his custom whenever such opportunities present themselves, to reaffirm his old doctrines of State rights and secession. Said he: "That the South did not anticipate, much less desire, war is shown by the absence of preparation for it, as well as by the efforts made to secure a peaceful separation. The successful party always hold the defeated responsible for the war, but when passion shall have subsided and reason shall have resumed her dominion, it must be decided that the General Government had no constitutional right to coerce a State, and that a State had the right to repel invasion. It was a national and constitutional right."

The Senate Committee on Commerce has voted to make a favorable report on a new Atlantic & Pacific Ship Railway bill as a substitute for the original ship bill. Jas. B. Eads and such others as may be associated with him are created a body corporate with the title of the Atlantic & Pacific Ship Railway Company, with power to issue capital stock and bonds not to exceed in the aggregate $100,000,000. The United States will afford aid not to exceed the sum of $7,500,000, under certain conditions specified in the bill.

MR. BECK (Ky.) spoke for three hours and a half in the Senate on the 29th ult. in opposition to the subsidy clause of the post-office appropriation bill. Mr. Hale (Me.) addressed the Senate in favor of the subsidy amendment. The Senate passed the 4th of July claims bill, with an item of $67,000 for the heirs of Ayres P. Merrill, of Mississippi, for supplies furnished the Union army during the war. In the House the amendment of Mr. Hepburn, of Iowa, to the river and harbor bill, that the appropriation for the Missouri River shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War without the intervention of the Missouri River Commission, was defeated. A bill was reported to the House providing for the reception of trade dollars at their face value in all payments to the Government, or for exchange at the Sub-Treasury for standard dollars, to be transmitted to the mints as bullion. Mr. Hall (Iowa) gave notice that he would call up the Campbell-Weaver contested election case May 4. The Committee on Public Lands reported a bill to grant the right of way through the public lands to any canal or ditch company formed for the purpose of irrigation.

CONGRESSIONAL.

The Work of the Senate and House of Representatives.

THE President's message on the labor question came up in the House on the 23d, and was referred to the Committee on Labor, with instructions to report on or before May 15. Mr. Butterworth moved its reference to the committee of the whole, but the proposition was rejected by a vote of 147 to 77. The struggle over the reference of the bill gave rise to a lively debate. Mr. Butterworth attacked the President's message and charged the Democrats with fishing for votes among laboring men. Mr. Randall defended the President. He declared that there was not a word in the message that appealed in any particular to any party, or any set, or any class of men in the United States. On the contrary, it appealed to Congress as a body of American citizens wishing for the public welfare. Messrs. Weaver (Iowa), Gibson (W. Va.), O'Neill (Mo.), McCreary (Ky.), and Springer (Ill.) supported the motion to refer to the Committee on Labor, and Mr. Reed (Maine) opposed it. The House, at the instigation of Mr. Voorhees, delegate from Washington Territory, adopted a resolution for the appointment of a select committee to inquire whether any ex-member of the House having the privilege of the floor is agent or attorney for any corporation interested in any claim or bill now pending. The Senate was not in session.

BILLS to permit the Covington and Cincinnati Road to bridge the Ohio River, and to punish robbery and horse-stealing in Indian Territory, passed the House of Representatives April 21. This was the only work performed by the House on that day that is worth recording. The Senate did nothing, not being in session.

THE postoffice appropriation bill was reported to the Senate on the 25th of April. Washington C. Whitthorne (Tenn.), the successor of Judge Jackson, was sworn, and took his seat. Senator Van Wyck (Neb.) addressed the Senate in support of the interstate commerce bill. His speech consisted mainly of an arraignment of Jay Gould and C. P. Huntington, who had, he said, according to their own testimony, moved on State Legislatures, the courts and Congress, unblushingly purchasing judges and legislators. Senator Blair (N. H.) addressed the Senate in support of his proposed constitutional amendment prohibiting the manufacture or sale of alcoholic liquors as beverages. In the course of his speech he said that it was less possible for the Republican party to remain permanently three-fourths for prohibition and one-fourth against it than it once was for the nation to remain permanently one-half slave and one-half free. W. T. Dowdall was nominated to the Senate for Postmaster at Peoria, Illinois. In the House of Representatives, Mr. Springer introduced a bill to establish a department of labor, with a commissioner and two assistants, the expense not to exceed $10,000 per annum. The Committee on Pacific Railroads reported to the House the bill formulated by the sub-committee providing for an extension of seventy years of the bonded debt of the Pacific Railroads to the Government. The bill makes provision for the payments of the indebtedness of the Pacific Railroads to the Government after the following plan: To the present debt is added the interest that would accrue during the lifetime (eleven years) of the existing bonds, assuming that no further payments are made by the companies, and the total divided into 110 equal payments, which are represented by a series of bonds falling due semi-annually, the last bond maturing seventy years after issue. The average annual payments by the companies would reach nearly $4,000,000, which, it is estimated, would amount to a sum greater than the principal of the debt before the existing bonds would mature.

THE Chair laid before the Senate, on the 27th ult., a communication from the Clerk of the House of Representatives of the State of Ohio, transmitting a transcript of testimony taken by a committee of that House, and the report of the same committee on the subject of charges against the official integrity of certain members of that House in connection with the election of the Hon. Henry B. Payne as United States Senator. Mr. Payne at once rose in his seat in the Senate and entered a most emphatic denial of charges and invited the most exhaustive scrutiny of all his acts and of his private correspondence. The whole thing, he said, was an attempt to circulate baseless gossip and scandal, everything substantial in the way of charges having been discredited and disproved by the testimony. He was willing to leave the matter with the Committee on Privileges and elections of the Senate, to which committee it was referred. The Senate passed bills allotting lands in severalty to the Indians of the Round Valley Reservation, California; appropriating $300,000 for the extension of the White House, and authorizing the building of railroad bridges across the St. Croix River, between Prescott, Wis., and Stillwater, Minn., and across the Missouri River at or near Kansas City, Mo., at or near Council Bluffs, Iowa, on the line of railroad between either Clay or Jackson County, Missouri, and the county of Wyandotte, Kansas, near Atchison, Kansas, at or near Saline City, Mo., near St Charles, Mo., at or near St. Joseph, Mo., and near Chamberlain, D. T. The Senate has confirmed the nomination of C. W. Wests as Governor of Utah. In the House of Representatives Mr. Breckinridge introduced a bill to reduce the number of internal revenue officers and to amend the internal revenue laws. The House Judiciary Committee reported adversely a bill to prohibit aliens from acquiring title or owning lands within the United States.

THE postoffice appropriation bill was discussed in the Senate on the 28th ult., the bone of contention being the amendment appropriating $800,000 for carrying South and Central American, Chinese, and Australian mails and authorizing the Postmaster-General to make, after due advertisement, contracts for five years with American steamships. The House of Representatives debated the river and harbor bill, and passed the bill providing that hereafter no alien who has not declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States shall be granted a license as pilot, engineer, mate, captain, or other officer on any steam vessel carrying the flag of the United States.

Thought He Was an Episcopalian.

Secretary Chase was not originally a profane man. He learned how to swear after he went into Lincoln's Cabinet. One day, after he had delivered himself rather vigorously, Lincoln said to him:

"Mr. Chase, are you an Episcopalian?"

"Why do you ask?" was the somewhat surprised counter-question.

"Oh, just out of curiosity," replied Lincoln. "Seward is an Episcopalian, and I had noticed that you and he swore in much the same manner."—Washington Hatchet.

CHARLES READE once said this about squeaky voices: "I, Charles Reade, warn all my sex against any woman who puts on a niminy piminy voice in a high key. That woman is certainly an actress, probably a liar; likely enough a thief. If she lowers her voice in speaking to a man, not altering her natural key, that proves nothing either way. Nature inclines each sex to speak more gently to the other sex. Never take a servant-maid who speaks out of her true key—if she speaks to you in five sharps and you hear her in three flats—or the other way."

PROF. LANGLEY'S researches have led him to conclusions which imply that, in the absence of absorbing atmosphere, the earth would receive sufficient heat from the sun to melt an ice-shell about 180 feet deep over the globe's entire surface.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

A RIDGWAY (Mich.) woman has kept track of her baking for a year and finds the score to stand thus for a family of six: Cookies, 4,605; pies, 592; cakes, 263; fried cakes, 987; loaves of bread, 698; besides numberless johnnycakes, shortcakes, pancakes and puddings.

BARBARA ROBINSON, an uneducated nine-year-old negro girl, of West Point, Ga., bids fair to rival Blind Tom as a pianist. She plays with wonderful correctness any composition she has once heard. Like Tom, she seems oblivious of everything else when listening to music or playing the piano.

THE sale at Edinburgh of a copy of the Kilmarnock edition of Burns' poems for eighty guineas recalls the circumstance that the poet, at the time of getting out this edition, was so poor that he seriously thought of indenturing himself to work his passage on board ship from Scotland to Jamaica.

GUITEAU'S sister and her husband are both ruined by the division he brought about between them. Mrs. Scoville is living in poverty in Chicago upon the frugal alimony paid her by her former husband, while the latter is struggling unsuccessfully in his profession, and making barely enough to pay her this alimony and live himself.

THE number of telephones now in the United States is 325,574, while in Great Britain there are only 13,000. In other words, there are over twenty-five telephones in the United States for every one in England. There is no country which pretends to be in the front rank of civilization where telephonic facilities are so limited as in England and Scotland.

A CHICAGO Judge was surprised and chagrined, the other day, at being shown his own signature, and that of the prosecuting attorney, to a petition asking the appointment to a Federal office of a man then on trial for receiving stolen goods. It didn't make any difference, though, for the man was convicted and sentenced to $1,000 fine and two months' imprisonment.

PHILADELPHIA'S marble pile, the City Hall, is still unfinished. Between $11,000,000 and $12,000,000 have been expended upon it since the laying of the corner-stone in 1872. It is the largest building, finished or in course of completion, in the United States, and it is estimated to cover 2,800 more square feet than the Capitol at Washington. The tower on the north side will be surmounted by a statue of Penn, and its extremest height when completed will be 535 feet. It has now reached a height of 270 feet.

M. ALFRED ASSOLANT once tried to lecture on his experiences in this country. He hired a small room and got together a few friends. "Ladies and gentlemen," he began, "when one thinks of setting out for America, the most natural thing to do is to consult the sailing list of the steamship lines. To get to America you must have a steamship; you must, I say, have a steamship; a good steamship." Then timidity and embarrassment overcame him. He gave up the attempt at lecturing, and never tried again.

THERE is said to be a well-authenticated case of leprosy in Yadkin County, N. C., the patient being John Plewman, aged 40 years. Eighteen months ago he felt a curious numbness of the left arm. He could stand great heat near that arm without suffering pain, and later could pass his hand through the flame of a candle and be insensible to the heat. White blotches appeared on the arm, and large scabs formed. These blotches are now spreading to his body. Physicians, including three specialists, pronounce the case leprosy.

AN attempt was recently made in London to ascertain what were the popular favorites in hymns and tunes, ministers, lawyers, merchants, mechanics, and others, being requested to name six favorite hymns and tunes. One hundred persons sent replies, and 201 hymns were named, of which 112 had only one vote each. The six having the highest number of votes each were: "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," 36; "Rock of Ages," 27; "Nearer My God, to Thee," 25; "My Jesus, as Thou Wilt," 21; "Abide with Me," 20; "Just as I Am," 19. Of tunes, 144 were named, of which seventy-seven had only a single vote each. The six highest on the list were Refuge, 35; Lux Benigna, 16; Jewett, 15; Eventide, 12; Toplady, 12; Mercy, 11.

SIR CHARLES WARREN, who has succeeded Sir E. Henderson in the Chief Commissionership of the London police, is an experienced soldier. He was a commander in the Guika campaign, and in the Griqua war; he commanded the entire field force in Bechuanaland in 1878, and organized a volunteer force for the aid of Natal and the Transvaal. In 1882 he was sent to Egypt to punish the murderers of Professor Palmer and restore the Khedive's authority in the desert. Last year he was at the head of the important Bechuanaland expedition, and at the beginning of the present war he was put in command of the British force at Suakim.

THE real heroes and heroines of life seldom have honor done them, and it is a pleasant thing, when opportunity comes, to rescue the name of even one from entire oblivion. A woman named Sallie Hansford, living near Lexington, Ga., is a heroine. Her husband has been bedridden with rheumatism for nine years, and she has had a family of four children—two boys and two girls—to support. Last year she bought 107 acres of land, much of it original forest, and with the aid of her two boys, 14 and 15 years old, cleared five acres. She cut down the trees, rolled the logs together, split the rails, built the fence, and burnt the brush, with their help; and made last year nine bales of cotton, also corn and peas enough for her own use, paid 800 pounds of cotton for rent last year, paid her store account, and paid $40 on her land. She has bought her meat for this year and paid for it. In addition to this, she has done the cooking and gone to market with eggs and chickens. This woman has probably no great opinion of what she has accomplished. But how often are such courage, and perseverance, and practical ability shown uncomplainingly! The woman's story has got into print by some mere accident, but she deserves more recognition than hundreds more famous.

A WASHINGTON letter-writer has this bit of gossip about Fred Douglass and his white wife: "It goes without saying that Fred Douglass is interesting. His wife is also interesting, and the pair in private life are a study. I am stating facts, and have not the remotest intention of touching on the reasons or influences bringing about their marriage. That it is a happy union no one can doubt. There is no overdemonstration of affection, but it exists and is genuine. Mrs. Douglass' father has never been reconciled to her marriage, but her mother and sisters, who were deeply grieved at the time, have recently visited her. Her uncle's family, who have resided here for some years, have not forgiven her, and hold no intercourse with her in any way. It is said that when they go to Europe her father will come to Washington to visit his brother, but that while his daughter and her husband are here he will not come. Perhaps it is not strange that Douglass should have wished to marry this woman, somewhat his equal intellectually. She is an attractive woman. On the other hand, Mrs. Douglass is very much in love with her husband. That she admires and is proud of him is plain to be seen. She is not a woman of impulses, but one of strong, sustained character, and, so far from ever regretting the step which led her to marry Douglass, she is rather growing happier and more satisfied as she seems the more sure of her affection for him. Of course, she could never have doubted his love for her. To a looker-on Douglass' manner toward his wife has a tender deference that is a beautiful sentiment of unspoken devotion."

A Trick of Trade.

A Baltimore drummer succeeded in taking three or four Virginia customers away from a New York house, but when he went his rounds a few days ago he was coldly received, and no one would give him an order.

"I feel," he finally said, "that I have a right to demand an explanation. How have I forfeited your confidence?"

"Oh, you see, I have nothing against you or your house," replied the party addressed, "but the fact is, the other drummer is engaged to one of my daughters, and I feel it my duty to help him all I can."

The Baltimore man received the same explanation from all the others, and being a married man he abandoned the field.—Wall Street News.

CHARLES, dear," she murmured, as they strolled along the other evening and gazed upward at the bejeweled firmament, "which is Venus, and which is Adonis?"

AN AWFUL DEED.

A New Jersey Mother, While in a Religious Frenzy, Slays Four of Her Children.

She Says She Did It to Save Them from Pain and Sorrow—A Sickening Recital.

[Keyport (N. J.) special.]

Mrs. Fannie Smith, the wife of a farmer living about seven miles south of this place, became insane this morning, took a dose of poison, and crushed in the heads of four of her children with an ax. The youngest child died immediately and the others are not expected to live till morning. Mrs. Smith also is very low and will probably die.

The family consists of J. Monroe Smith, the father, about 55 years old; the mother, who is 43 years of age; and their six children—19, 18, 13, 11, 7 and 4 years old respectively.

Last night the family retired rather earlier than usual, so Mrs. Smith arose about 5 o'clock this morning and roused her husband at the same hour. Their breakfast had been prepared by a colored woman who had been in the family's service for years. After eating, Mrs. Smith left her husband in the kitchen and went out to the hen-house. Mr. Smith followed her, in a few moments, to a hot-house, which was about 100 yards away from the house. In the hen-house Mrs. Smith took out of her pocket a package of rat poison which she bought and concealed over three years ago. She swallowed a large dose of the poison, and threw the box away. On her way back to the house she picked up a large ax, which she concealed beneath her dress.

Entering the house she went first to the bed-chamber of the four-year-old daughter, Edna, who was quietly sleeping. She took the ax from under her dress and brought it down with terrible effect on the child's head. She did this three times, until she saw that the little curly head was split open. Then she left, and entered the bedroom of her son Rufus, thirteen years old. She struck him three or four blows on the head with the back of her ax, which laid the side of his head open. Next she turned her attention to her eleven-year-old daughter Bessie, whom she found on her knees praying. The child seemed to know that her turn had come, as she had witnessed the attack on the others. She lifted up her hands imploringly and begged her mother in a faltering voice to spare her, but this had no effect on the frenzied woman, for she let the ax come down on the poor child's head with as much force as at first, and a moment later her third victim was lying on the floor with her skull fractured. A moment later she had struck Alida, another of her children.

The sound of the child's voice had reached the ears of Bettie Beldo, the aged colored housekeeper, who ran to the child's assistance up-stairs. Mrs. Smith had just completed her bloody work, but she was still in a frenzy of excitement. She turned on the old woman and raised her ax with the intent of adding another victim to the list. Bettie turned and ran down stairs, pursued by the woman, who now began to show her insanity by howling at the top of her voice. Finding that she could not overtake the colored woman Mrs. Smith threw the blood-stained ax after her, but it struck the wall, and the colored woman ran out of the house screaming with terror.

The insane woman picked up her fearful weapon again, and retraced her steps up the stairs to the room where her eighteen-year-old daughter was. This girl had seen some of the tragedy, picked up the baby, two years old, and fled to the apartment for safety. She had not time to lock the door when her mother, with the ax raised above her head, was upon her. Then a fearful struggle began. The girl knew that her mother meant death, and all her energies were roused to keep the door fast till assistance would come. She threw her body against the door, while Mrs. Smith struggled to break it in. Finally the brave girl succeeded in turning the key. Then she laid down the baby, and hurried away to tell her father of what had occurred, while the mother was trying to batter down the door with the ax.

The girl met her father and Bettie Beldo hastening from the hot-house to the scene of the tragedy. The husband ran up the stairs. The insane woman turned with rage, and raised her weapon, but at sight of him she cowered and let it fall nervously to the floor. Then she fell down herself, and groveled at his feet. Tears sprang into the man's eyes, and trickled down his cheeks as he cried:

"Fannie, what made you kill my children?"

Without any apparent sorrow for her terrible work she answered calmly:

"Why, Monroe, I was told by God to do so, and I obeyed His commands."

Then getting upon her knees and looking up into her sorrowful husband's face, she said:

"I know I did wrong, but it was the only thing to be done to save them from hell."

Mr. Smith could say nothing. He was completely prostrated by the blow he received from his wife's actions. When spoken to by a reporter he begged to be left alone with his misery. He would repeatedly ask how his children were, and the doctors would give him very little encouragement. The neighbors vainly tried to arouse him, but he would not pay any attention to them. The oldest daughter, who so nobly fought for her life, was found at a neighbor's house, whither she was taken after the affray. When asked when she first had any idea of her mother's work she said she heard her little sister scream. She ran in to her, and when she saw the ax in her mother's hand and one of her sister's dead she ran for the other room where the baby was, starting to go down-stairs. She was met by her mother, who chased her to the door. By main effort she closed the door, and in this way escaped.

Little Edna never breathed after the ax struck her. The other three children are in a very low condition, and the four doctors who are in attendance fear that they will be dead before morning. At this writing, 10 p. m., they fear that both the mother and children will die during the night. The poison that Mrs. Smith took appears to have just taken effect upon her and she is sinking rapidly.

GRAHAM STRUNG UP.

A Mob Secures the Keys to the Prisoner's Cell and Drag Him Out by a Rope.

He Is Then Taken to the Molloy Farm and Hanged to an Oak Tree.

The clatter of horses' hoofs upon the streets leading to the Court House, a short time before daylight, says a Springfield (Mo.) dispatch, told the few who were at that hour awaiting developments that another chapter was to be enacted in the Graham tragedy. It was no false alarm, as the one hundred and fifty horsemen, with masks over their faces, with shotguns, rifles, and revolvers poised, and riding at full gallop, told. The accuracy of the movements of the men showed that they were thoroughly drilled and knew what was to be done.

The entrances to the streets leading to the jail were quickly guarded, and every pedestrian who made his appearance was halted and made to throw up his hands.

A spring-wagon was part of the outfit of the lynching party. The wagon was halted in front of the jail door, and a few men heavily armed, and carrying in their hands rope and sledge-hammers, knocked at the front door. The Sheriff was asleep and answered their call.

Upon opening the door he was seized by the men, who demanded the keys to Graham's cell. He attempted to equivocate, but a revolver thrust between his eyes told him resistance was folly, and he told them where to get the keys.

They then went to the cell and opened the door. Graham was in his bunk and was commanded to get up. He was at first infuriated and replied with oaths. "You can hang me, but by G—d you can't scare me," he exclaimed. He was silenced by the muzzle of a rifle thrust in his face. He dressed himself, and when the rope was placed around his neck, broke down and wept bitterly. The leader of the party informed him of their purpose, and demanded a true statement of the killing of Sarah Graham. He recovered his composure, and with something of his old audacity replied that when he got out he would give them a "straight talk."

He was led out of the jail at the end of the rope, placed in the wagon, and the grim procession moved in a northerly direction. About two miles north of the city the cavalcade halted by a small scrub oak tree. Graham was asked if he had anything further to say with regard to the killing of his wife. He reasserted his statement that neither Mrs. Molloy nor Cora Lee was implicated in the murder. A cloth was tied over his face, his hands were bound behind him, as the rope was thrown over a limb of the stunted tree. A dozen strong arms in a twinkling dangled the body of the wife-murderer in mid-air. He was literally strangled to death, and when the lynchers departed and the spectators on the outskirts ventured to the spot a pitiable sight met their gaze. Pinned to his back was a note explanatory of the act. It was well composed, and written in a legible hand. The closing paragraphs are as follows:

"We heartily welcome all strangers to citizenship who are pure of purpose and act in good faith, but we give this as a warning to ex-convicts and murderers who may hereafter invade our country to impose on our credulity. We also give warning that any person or persons, of any rank or station, who dare to discover the actors in this tragedy, will be surely and speedily dispatched to hell, where all things are revealed to the curious. In justice to the memory of Sarah Graham, a loving wife and dear mother, whose life was sacrificed at the altar of Lecate, we subscribe ourselves,

"CITIZENS OF GREENE COUNTY.

"N. B.—To Sheriff Donnell: Keep your mouth shut. If you recognize any of us you will die the death of a dog."

Graham and His Crime.

Graham, who was evidently a moral monstrosity, was accused of the murder of his wife, and the subsequent disposal of her body by throwing it into a well on the farm of Mrs. Emma Molloy, the noted temperance evangelist. Graham had lived at Fort Wayne, Ind., where he married the woman he killed. For some of his infractions of the statutes he was twice sentenced to the penitentiary at Michigan City. While there Mrs. Molloy became interested in the man, and when his last term expired made an effort to reform him. She gave him employment, and while thus engaged he became acquainted with Cora Lee, Mrs. Molloy's adopted daughter. He proposed marriage, assuring the two women that his first wife had secured a divorce while he was in prison. This she had done, but they were afterward remarried. Mrs. Molloy and Cora Lee were satisfied that Graham was free of matrimonial entanglements, and Cora was permitted to marry Graham. The first wife, who had been deserted in Fort Wayne, soon learned of Graham's last marriage, and a prosecution followed in Springfield for bigamy. Graham, to free himself of this trouble, induced his first wife to leave Fort Wayne and meet him in St. Louis, whence he was to take her to Springfield and endeavor to reach some solution of the trouble. After leaving St. Louis Mrs. Graham was never again seen alive by anyone who knew her. Graham killed her to free himself of the prosecution for bigamy. Her relatives agitated the matter after her disappearance until the Springfield authorities made search and found her body in the abandoned well on the Molloy farm. Graham and Cora Lee were at once arrested for the crime, and Mrs. Molloy was taken into custody as she stepped from the train at Springfield on her return from a professional tour in Illinois. The preliminary examination resulted in the holding of Graham as principal and the two women as accessories. Graham made several statements that implicated the two women, but his love of notoriety evidently induced him to write the letters published, and but little credence is given them, as the man was entirely unreliable and never told the truth if he could in any way avoid it.

FIENDS WRECK A TRAIN.

A Loaded Missouri Pacific Freight Train Precipitated Into the River Near Wyandotte, Kan.—Two Men Dashed to Death.

A most diabolical outrage was perpetrated near Wyandotte, Kansas, says a dispatch from that place. The spikes were drawn from two rails on the Missouri Pacific and a freight train was precipitated into the river, killing the fireman and head brakeman.

The accident occurred half a mile south of the Wyandotte depot at a point where the track comes around a lofty bluff that rises precipitously from the bank of the Kaw River. The train arrived on time and passed the station without stopping. Five minutes later it dashed round the fatal point, the rails spread, the engine lurched, and with a bound rolled over on its side. Two heartrending cries were heard above the crash of the collision, then the sound of escaping steam, and in another instant the wreck was in flames.

The conductor and rear brakeman, who came upon the scene as soon as they could, met the engineer, J. H. Fowler, wading out of the Kaw River, into which he had been thrown when the engine turned over. The Wyandotte fire department quenched the flames, and when the smoke had cleared away a shocking sight was presented. The fireman, Ben T. Horton, lay on his back, with his head toward the river. The lower part of his body was covered by the cab, while the blood gushed from his nose and mouth and formed in pools on the river bank. A few feet away, partly covered by the tender, lay the body of George Carlisle, the head brakeman, his face covered with blood. The lives of both were extinct, death having been caused almost instantaneously by the escaping steam and scalding water.

An examination confirmed the first impression that the wreck was the work of train wreckers. The spikes had been drawn the length of two rails on the side of the track nearest the river. The fish-plates had also been removed, leaving the rails absolutely without protection, so that when the engineer ran upon the first pair they spread. The wreckers had apparently done their work deliberately, and with the knowledge that loss of life would result. The fish-plates, together with the bolts which held them, and fifty-two drawn spikes, were lying beside the track.

Three men were seen lurking in the vicinity a short time before the train passed, and are supposed to be the guilty parties.

The Missouri Pacific officials offer a reward of $2,500 for information that will lead to the arrest and conviction of the parties, and $1,000 for information that will lead to the conviction of any one of them. The Knights of Labor also talk strongly of offering a reward.

Y., should be employed at a salary of $1,200 per year as trainer; that $1,000 be expended in new apparatus and $1,000 guaranteed for contingent expenses. Of the amount of money thus disposed of he agrees to donate such portion as the boys will be unable to raise.

THE JOURNAL.

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

Looks Like Fraud.

If one half of all the stories and reports are true, there is to be perpetrated at Boyne City to-day one of the most dastardly outrages on the people of this county that we have heard of since the notorious steal of the presidency in 1876.

On April 6th an unofficial announcement of the vote on the county seat question from every township in the county gave a majority against removal of about sixty. That result was conceded by both newspapers which had fought so fiercely for Boyne City, and by every man in the county. It was conceded by Supervisor Jersey, chairman of the election board, who is now in the west prospecting for a location for business, having repeatedly expressed his opinion that this was the last canvas, and that if not carried this time it was forever hopeless. The vote of Evangeline township as then announced was 489 for removal and 2 against, as has been stated to us personally by more than one Boyne City man who was present when the vote was announced. That was the vote of that township as announced by the supervisor on the night of election, as telephoned to all parts of the county, and as published in the Statesman. Now, we understand the official return to be made to-day will place the number about 100 higher,—589 for removal, and 2 against, thus giving in the totals a majority for removal of about forty.

We understand that those in the secret claim that the unofficial report was misrepresenteed for a purpose, but their actions and language have not been consistent with the claim. If the corrected return could have shown, the next day, a majority of even one vote for Boyne City, they would have announced it with cannon and bonfires, and the newspapers would have prefaced their double-leaded announcements with all the poultry cuts they had in the office. Every man of them would have been loud in his demands for justice and right, and would have insisted that every vote cast was legal and honest. Instead of this there has been a tacit admission of fraud and illegal voting in various ways. They have apparently hoped for something to transpire which would reverse the result. Through the boldness and daring of a few, their fondest hopes are likely to be realized.

They say that no court since the decision of the famous "8 to 7" will go behind the returns, and that if the returns show a majority in favor of Boyne City, that will settle the matter forever.

Dare they do it? Is it possible that any election board will deceive itself and the people by making a false report of the ballot? Or, if they did not make a false report on the night of election, will they perjure themselves and face the penitentiary by making a false return and swearing to it now?

Will the board of supervisors dare sanction such bare-faced fraud as this (if it be true) by affirming the return and ordering the removal of the records? If they do, we mistake the temper of the people if it is quietly submitted to.

There is a future for some of the chief actors in this matter, and they will find the past not so easily forgotten.

Notes and News.

In the course of a recent interview in New York, Mr. I. M. Weston, of Grand Rapids, Mich., discussed the republican opposition to O. W. Powers as follows: "If the republican senate committee on judiciary was so much in earnest in its opposition to polygamy as the president is, they would not have refused to report favorably on O. W. Powers for justice of the supreme court of Utah, for he has the courage and ability to make it warm for the twin relic, if he had been given the opportunity."

Canon Farrar's New Book.

A few weeks ago, when Canon Farrar was in this country, tens of thousands of people paid as much as one dollar to hear a single lecture delivered by him, and were well pleased with what they got for their money. Several of the most important of those lectures and addresses with other papers are now published by John B. Alden, of New York, and can now be had in a very handsome cloth-bound volume, for the price of 40 cents. Some of the lectures are also published separately in his Elzevir Library, in which form the lecture on Dante sells for 3 cents; on temperance, 2 cents; on ideals of nations, 2 cents; thoughts on America, 3 cents. The millions of intelligent people who admire Canon Farrar and who were not able to hear him lecture, will be delighted to find his brilliant, scholarly and eloquent thoughts placed in this handsome form within their reach. The publishers illustrated catalogue, 132 pages, is sent to any address on receipt of 4 cents; or condensed catalogue free. John B. Alden, publisher, 393 Pearl St., New York.

The Great German Doctor.

The remarkable phase in the practice of Dr. Peter W. Schmidt (frequently called Dr. Pete) is, he never asked one to describe their disease, his intuitive perceptions being so strong he can tell any one their trouble without asking a question. His success is phenomenal. His practice enormous. He is sought after by hundreds wherever he goes, because he cures when every physician and remedy has failed. The giving of his great medicine, Golden Seal Bitters, which has made his great success, to the world marks a new era in medicine. Blood, liver, kidney, and stomach disorders yield to this master of disease, and its wonderful cures are regarded as phenomenal, but the germ of faith ever says, "What has been may be again." We say to the sick and discouraged give Golden Seal Bitters a trial. It is all we ask. They will speak for themselves. Sold by Perry Weed and Dr. G W. Crouter.

Cure for Piles.

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he has some affection of the kidneys or neighboring organs. At times, symptoms of indigestion are present, flatulency, uneasiness of the stomach, etc. A moisture, like perspiration, producing a very disagreeable itching, after getting warm, is a common attendant. Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Bosanko's Pile Remedy, which acts directly upon the parts affected, absorbing the Tumors, allaying the intense itching, and effecting a permanent cure. Price 50 cents. Sold by Geo. W. Crouter. 152

W. H. Harris and family have gone to Manton to live. While in Charlevoix they made many friends who will regret to see them leave so soon. Mr. Harris desires us to express his regrets that he could not personally call on their many friends and thank them for the courtesies extended during their stay in Charlevoix.

The "Union Pacific Tourist" is one of the finest specimens of landscape printing we have seen in a long time. It is a pamphlet of 80 pages, filled with well-written descriptive matter and views of points along the line of the Union Pacific Railroad and branches. For a copy, address C. K. Wilber, 57 Clark street, Chicago.

A Hall sheathing lath machine has just been set up by the Charlevoix Mfg. Co., and is now in successful operation. This sheathing lath makes a house very warm, stiffens the walls, saves in the amount and cost of plastering, and adds in many other ways to the value of a house. Go and examine it before buying any other lath.

Mrs. Ella Smith brought from Chicago this week an extra fine line of the latest styles of millinery goods. Her new hats, trimmings, flowers, etc., were selected by herself from the best in Chicago, and with her knowledge of the wants of the ladies of Charlevoix, the stock cannot fail to please. Call and see them while the stock is complete.

Geo. W. Miller brought from Chicago a mammoth addition to his already large stock of clothing. He is determined to lead the trade of this region, and to do it he has provided a larger and better stock than he ever before carried. There is hardly an article of clothing that a man can ask for that George has not a full assortment of sizes, with a wide range of prices.

E. S. Hawkes, so well known to many of our citizens as a first-class cabinet-maker, has been secured by Heath & Francis to take charge of their shop. 'Lish will now be in his glory, and with their machines to work with he will certainly add to his already excellent reputation for fine work. And the firm are fortunate in securing so good a man to do their fine work.

The Metropolitan Comedy Co. are playing a week's engagement in Petoskey, and will appear at Bartholomew opera hall next Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday evenings, May 12th, 13th, and 14th, opening with the great society drama, "Divorce," Mr. Frank Tucker appearing as Mortimer Theophilus Muggs, a showman, supported by a first class company. Don't fail to see this superb entertainment. The company have been unusually successful throughout the state and are recommended by the press generally.

Yesterday morning a sailor engaged in scraping the fore-topmast of the schooner Saveland slipped from the board on which he was suspended and dropped into the water, a distance of 150 feet. The force of fall was to some extent arrested by his striking the yard arm, which rested against the mast in a slanting position. The position of the yard was the means of diverting his course downward so that he fell over the rail instead of on the hard deck. He came out of the water uninjured. His companions regarded his escape as little less than miraculous.—Free Press

A large amount of work is being done at the asylum in grading, stumping, clearing and in putting the grounds in shape for farming and gardening purposes and preparatory to ornamenting the plat in front of the buildings. A large amount of fencing will be done this summer, the present horse barn will be moved further in the rear of the grounds and enlarged and the main barns will be built. A large brick coal house will also be erected. The cleared land will be stumped as rapidly as possible, and many other important improvements will be made during the season.—Traverse Herald.

A REVERIE BY MOONLIGHT.

BY SQUIRE HOBBS.

The world is wrapped in calm repose,
And night puts on her sable gown,
The moon above the hills is rose,
And twinkling stars are shining down.

The air is laden with perfume,
And on the breeze sweet odors blow
Of flowers that on the hillsides bloom,
And in the woody dells below.

The cricket chirps within his coll,
The bull-frog lends his doleful croak,
The fire-fly lights his way to toil,
The night-owl screams from out the oak.

The sheep-bell tinkles in the fold,
The cows within the barnyard lie,
The watch-dog barks a warning bold
As some belated swain goes by.

The gentle zephyrs kiss my brow
And drive away all thoughts of care;
My life is free from trouble now,
And rest and peace instead reign there.

A holy silence round me clings
As the night does about me close;
Great joy and happiness it brings,
And fills my soul with sweet repose.

The hush of calm and silent rest
Envelops now the sleeping earth;
The sons of toil are sweetly blest
With happy dreams of joy and mirth.

Oh, what a blessing is the night
That steals upon us unawares;
It heals the wound of Hunger's bite,
And lulls to rest our weary cares.

In Dreamland's soothing, kind embrace
We sleep the peaceful hours away,
And visions bright and lovely trace
Till night becomes a golden day.

And when life's curfew sadly tolls,
And we no more see day's bright beams,
Ah! let us hope our ransomed souls
Will sleep the sleep of happy dreams.

Crawfordsville, Ind., Feb. 9, 1883.

BLIGHTED HOPES.

Mark saw the paragraph before I did. I wondered, to-day, looking back, if I could have controlled myself sufficiently to prepare him for the shock if I had read the newspaper first. I was passing Mark's cup of coffee to Jane, the servant, when I caught sight of his face. It was white and rigid, and his eyes were dilated in a stare horrible to see.

"Mark!" I cried, in terror. "What is it, dear? Are you ill?"

I was beside him as I spoke, and saw that his eyes were fixed on a certain place in the paper he had been reading. Then I, too, read the fatal paragraph, only a few lines, but full of horror for Mark.

"Do not blame her!" he said, in a whisper, shuddering as he spoke. "Oh, Bessie, Bessie, my heart is broken!"

I put my arms around him, and drew his head down upon my breast, where it had so often lain in childhood, when my orphaned brother came to sister Bessie to be comforted in boyish woes. He was my only brother, though I was sixteen years the eldest. Little graves in the cemetery marked the sorrows of my childhood, and one after another my brothers and sisters had drooped and died, until only Mark was left. And he was but four years old when our parents both died.

We were not poor, owning our own handsome home, and a comfortable income; so Mark had every advantage of education, studied the law, and had gradually won his way to a position in his profession. And I had married, lost my husband, and returned after an absence of only three short months, to resume my place as my brother's housekeeper.

It was just after Mark had finished his studies, and been admitted to the bar, that he met Alice Arnold. She had come to Claymont to visit her aunt, a near neighbor and an old friend of ours, and we called to welcome her among us. She was about eighteen years old then, and her beauty won its way to my heart as surely as it did to Mark's. She was the most timid, gentle creature I ever saw, her color flitting if you spoke to her, her shy blue eyes drooping, and her voice low and almost plaintive in its timidity. Miss Arnold, a strong, energetic old maid, seemed actually to terrify her by her short, brusque manner, but she clung to me from the first hour of our friendship.

Children generally like me, and she was little more than a child. Yet when she became more intimate, and came often to pass whole days with me, I found that below the frightened, timid manner there was a clear brain, an intellect that had been carefully cultivated, and a sweet womanly nature. She was an enthusiastic musician and a fine pianist, but could not sing. Nothing delighted her more than to play for Mark and myself, to sing duets, or, if I was tired or busy, to hear Mark sing, in his rich baritone voice, the music he loved.

I asked myself, after she had ended her summer visit, if she was a coquette, a cruel, heartless flirt, who would win a man's heart only to cast it aside. And, in my bitterness then, I thought she was. In later years I acquitted her of the crime. I believe she had no suspicion that Mark loved her. He was always grave and reserved, and, although he was but twenty-three at that time, had the air and bearing of a much older man. And I being really so much her senior, I think Alice looked upon us both as rather elderly people, and was far more free and confidential than she would have been if she looked upon Mark as a young man and a lover.

But Mark, who had never cared before for any of our girl friends, gave to Alice Arnold all the store of love his heart could ever offer. I knew it, for Mark had made me his confidential friend all his life, and seeing her shy pleasure in his presence, the interest she took in his pursuits, her gentle acceptance of his grave attentions, I thought his love was returned, and was happy in the expectation of a nearer, closer tie between the sweet, loving girl and myself.

But, just before she left Claymont, Mark, telling her his love, was answered by the tidings that she was engaged to be married. She was dreadfully distressed, coming to me to sob out her regret that Mark loved her, but loyally asserting her own love for her betrothed. After she had left us, Miss Arnold took me into confidence.

She told me that her niece was an heiress, and her mother was a fool. I am quoting Miss Arnold! She said that Henry Parker, the man who had won Alice's childish love, was a showy, handsome fellow of whom the family knew nothing, but who was distrusted by all of them excepting the mother, who should have been the girl's protector, but was completely fascinated by the lover's attentions to herself.

Mark said but little to me, but I knew that he suffered keenly. He made some inquiries in the city about Henry Parker, and was convinced that he was an adventurer. I think my brother could have borne his own burden better if Alice had chosen a man worthy of her love, but he feared for her future happiness, thinking her betrothed had dazzled her imagination, rather than won her heart.

When we received cards for the wedding I thought of refusing to attend, but Mark decided to go, and we sent our wedding gift, and went up to town to be at the ceremony in the church, and the wedding breakfast afterward. I could not wonder when I saw Henry Parker that he had won Alice's love. He was superbly handsome, and had the winning manner calculated to change her timidity into a trusting love.

And he took the love and the trust to betray both, to change the love to a shuddering horror, the confiding trust to a shrinking fear. Little by little the poor girl roused to the fact that her husband despised the very gentleness he had so often praised, and that the charm of a full purse was the one that had attracted him to his wife. Probably a father or a guardian would have protected Alice's fortune after marriage, but it was in her own control, her mother being her only guardian. And Henry Parker spent it freely; at first in a profuse style of living, in luxuries his wife could share, but later in gambling and low vice, traveling the downward path with fearful rapidity.

Six years after his marriage he deserted his wife, who returned to her mother, and a year later the newspapers gave her the account of his death in a continental gambling-room, where he was shot in a scuffle.

It was after a year of widowhood that Alice Parker came once more to Claymont, her sweet face pale and sad, and her blue eyes often dreamily mournful. She was but little changed, though older and graver than in her girlhood.

The long bright summer passed happily, and in September Alice was to return to her mother to prepare for a quiet wedding.

My brother was to be the happy man at last.

It was the evening before she was to leave us that Miss Arnold invited Mark and myself to tea. We were all in the sitting-room early in the evening, when a gentleman asked for Mrs. Parker, and Alice turned very white as she introduced Mr. George Parker.

"My husband's brother," she said, aside to me. "He was always very kind to me."

For a few moments after his introduction Mr. Parker sat in embarrassed silence. Then he said, very suddenly, "I do not know whether my news will be good news or bad news to you, Allie. I come to tell you, as soon as possible after hearing it myself, that Harry is not dead."

Alice did not faint or scream. White as death, she said, steadily, "Why did he conceal it from me?"

"He did not intentionally. He was left for dead, and afterward taken to a hospital, but as he got better in other ways, the doctors found his brain was weakened. He was sent to an insane asylum, and it was only two weeks ago that he recovered his sanity enough to send for me. I went to him at once, and brought him to my house. He is strong and well, and asks for you to go to him."

"Yes; I shall go to mother's to-morrow," Alice said. "Will you bring him to me?"

There seemed no question of her duty in her pure heart, but the hopeless misery of her fair face was heart-breaking to witness. Mr. Parker left in time for an early return train to London, and Miss Arnold took me to her own room to look at some lace.

"Let them be alone," she said to me. "It is for the last time. I know Alice. Under that shrinking, gentle manner there is a strong martyr spirit, and she will do her duty at any cost. Oh, the poor child! the poor child!

And we broke into bitter weeping together, for as deeply as she grieved for Alice did I grieve for my brother.

I did not see Alice again. Mark met me in the hall, and saying to Miss Arnold, "Go in to her—comfort her if you can," he drew my hand through his arm and led me out of the house.

That was just one week ago. To-day we read in the local paper this paragraph:

"Mrs. Henry Parker, residing at 232 —— street, S. W., was found dead in her room from the effects of an overdose of chloral. The dose was probably taken accidentally, as Mrs. Parker had been suffering from insomnia, and using chloral to produce sleep."

Mark is locked in his room, and even I dare not intrude upon him, or ask the question that haunts me. Was the overdose taken by accident, or in a moment of utter despair?

Overheard.

Two sons of Erin stood at the corner of Market and Montgomery streets.

"Pat."

"What is it, Moike?"

"Oi'm awful thirsty."

"So am Oi."

"Have ye got 10 cints, Pat?"

"That's jist phat Oi've got, Moike."

"Let's go an' get a dhrink."

"Bedad, Moike, 10 cints won't get a dhrink fur both av us."

"Indade it will, Pat. Give me the 10 cints. Oi'll go into the saloon an' inquoire fur whisky. Oi'll pour out a big glass, dhrink half av it, and say to the mon behind the bar; 'That's torrible whisky.' LIFE UNDER WATER.

An Old Engineer Relates Some of His Experiences.

"Life under water monotonous, eh? Well, I guess not. At least I don't find it so. I've been there fourteen years, off and on, and have always managed to find enough to occupy my time and attention." The speaker was an engineer on one of the great ocean steamers, and as he made that remark to a New York reporter, while standing on the pier before his vessel, he readjusted his loose blouse with an awkward jerk and gave his head a confident twitch.

"A fellow needn't let time lag on him anywhere if he only has his eyes open," he added. "Now, to some it would seem almost unbearable to watch the continuous throb of the machinery of a large steamer and hear nothing but the everlasting 'click, click,' of the piston rods and levers, but to me they sound like music. I've become partly dulled and insensible to them, but even now I often sit still and watch and listen to their never-varying beats with that sort of satisfaction which a musician feels when he runs his fingers mechanically yet skillfully over the keys of his instrument. His satisfaction arises from the fact that he has his instrument entirely under his control, and mine comes from a similar cause. With a touch of my finger I could propel thousands of tons at almost any speed through the water, or send a hundred lives into eternity. Indeed, I feel that I am the sole responsible party on board for the lives of the passengers, as it remains with me to keep my machinery in such perfect condition as to withstand any ordinary sea or rough storm.

"And again, I take pride in keeping everything around me shining like burnished gold. If a spot of grease or dirt gets on the rods or handles of any part of the machinery it cannot escape my notice long. I go over every part of the engine twice a day, and rub the brass and steel rods with as much pleasure as though I owned the steamer myself. I sometimes amuse myself in keeping a record of the number of miles we run an hour and comparing it with the records of previous trips. I have on a book in the engine-room a curious table of dates and figures, which shows to me the exact time for every mile made by different steamers I have engineered across the ocean for the last fourteen years. If anything more than usual occurs I jot it down opposite the date, and so make a sort of dairy of it. It speaks volumes to me, and recalls many interesting memories. For instance, I was looking through it the other day, and I found opposite Nov. 10, 1875, a reference to a visit from Chinamen. The incident was recalled to my mind in a moment, and I laughed heartily over it myself. This is what it meant: One day while lying in port we were visited by several Chinamen who were anxious to inspect the ship. They were an ignorant set, and had never seen any machinery worked by steam. The captain was a good-natured fellow, and allowed them to come below, although they experienced some doubts as to the advisability of so doing. They were very timid, and it took some time for me to convince them that the machinery was harmless. Finally I got two of them to come close to the heavy driving-rod, which you know on a large vessel is an enormous piece of iron. Suddenly, without warning, it gave a start forward, and, accompanied by a loud puff of steam, leaped fully ten feet above our heads. Angry at my assistant for letting on steam without my knowledge, I turned to speak to him when my attention was attracted toward the stairway. The last two Chinamen of the party were making frantic endeavors to jump up half a dozen steps at a time. The rest had disappeared, and before I could get on deck the whole crowd had got into their boat and started for the shore. No amount of persuation could ever get them to return to that ship, which they claimed was alive. It was a mean trick, but it has afforded me many a good laugh since."

The Agreeable Guest.

The Swedenborgian theory that each person has his "sphere," which is perceived as an effect of whose cause one is ignorant, is a theory quite borne out by experimental experience. Our likes and dislikes are very largely founded on matters as intangible as were the reasons of Dr. Fell. Nowhere is this truth so strongly felt as when receiving a guest in tete-a-tete in one's own apartment. The friend who is what the Italians call sim patica, a quality for which there is no English equivalent, is the rarest of blessings. One does not expect this of the average five hundred friends who may yet be very entertaining, and be each warmly regarded by the hostess. But there is a type of woman who is the most disagreeable of guests, and from whom one turns away instinctively without being able to give any very tangible reason why. Out of sight she may not be altogether out of mind, nor by any means outside the circle of one's friendly wishes for her best prosperity and enjoyment. But in personal presence she is an irritating and jarring force. It is the woman who is so crude and obtuse by nature that she does not even know she is crude; the woman to whom the fine art of conversation is as unknown as is the sculptor's power to the stone-mason; the woman who goes rough-shod over all your preferences and tendencies, and is so crude that she never dreams wherein her rudeness lies. Her conversation consists largely in a series of direct questions, and of the most inappropriate conclusions drawn from the answers she forces from you. Her presence is like a material weight in the atmosphere, and on her departure you are ready to ring the joy bells of relief. In delightful contrast is the agreeable guest, the woman whose cultivation is so fine that it invests her as with an atmosphere; whose conversation is that of subtle art, so suggestive, so stimulating, that it opens a vista of all high and delightful possibilities. Calling upon her you are entertained not with conventional remarks of wind, or weather, or social movements, but with some fine thought suggested at the moment. Perhaps you have had an experience of this kind you will never lose out of your life. You had called on a lady whose parlor was in the hands of the decorators, and whose paintings and brie-a-brac were, for the time, removed, with one exception. On the mantel rested a fine French photograph of Millet's picture of the earth—a stretch of level land, the sun sinking below the horizon, and in the far distance a shepherd with his flock. The picture is new to you, and in reply to a word of comment the hostess expresses her recognition of the subtle spiritual meaning portrayed in this work, and you go out from your call refreshed, uplifted. It was only a word, a glimpse, yet it opened to you new vistas. Such friends are a gift of the gods, and such experiences are among the endearing influences of life. —Western Traveler.

Punctiliousness.

If one were required to sum up in a single word the most infallible and invariable evidence of good-breeding, he could not do better than to say "punctiliousness;" and even should he be confronted with the sneer that to be punctilious is as characteristic of the martinet as of the gentleman, he need not therefore be shaken from his position. Exactitude is a thing which is learned only by inheritance, or at least by training from the cradle, and it is in a just appreciation of the comparative value of trifles that breeding, no less than genius, is manifest. It is the boor who insists that little things are beneath notice, and who disregards conventionalities with a scorn he miscalls manliness and breadth, but which is in reality uncouthness and ignorance.

It is astonishing how many people in what prides itself upon being the best society are lacking in punctiliousness. Of course everybody replies to invitations, acknowledges courtesies, sends a note in recognition of holiday gifts and flowers, because people who are ill-bred enough to neglect these observances are soon left without invitations, attentions, and gifts to acknowledge. Nobody nowadays who pretends to the most ordinary politeness thinks of failing to dispatch a letter to the host or hostess whose hospitality he has been enjoying, and nobody but a boor fails to offer excuses for being late to dinner, failing to appear at an appointment, and the like. It is not to these perfectly well understood and obvious observances which we allude; the well-bred person does all this, but so does many a one whose title to that adjective is at least extremely doubtful.

The punctiliousness which stamps a man as a thoroughbred—if the expressive, though somewhat slangy term may be forgiven—is an instinctive scrupulousness; a constant sense that noblesse oblige makes it impossible for him not to be exact and faithful in his discharge of the claims of others upon him, however slight; an estimate of the value of his obligations which makes a trival appointment a matter to be scrupulously fulfilled except for sufficient reason; a fidelity to his word which renders him incapable of breaking even promises which, to the underbred world, seem too slight to be even remembered. A martinet, as the term is commonly used, is a man who is unreasonably punctilious; a gentleman differs only in being strict.

Nor does the punctiliousness of the gentleman stop with social observances, conventional duties, and a fulfillment of the rules of etiquette. A man may be a gentleman, and, for reasons, disregard these things, although a well-bred man rarely finds himself in circumstances where this is necessary; but in the more vital matters of kindliness, respect, and a due regard for the rights of others, the law of punctiliousness admits of no suspension. There is no such thing as being too minutely careful of the feelings of others in our daily intercourse with our fellows; it is hardly possible to conceive of cases where in common situations one can be too punctilious in forbearance, generosity to the opinions or even the prejudices of others. It is not inconsistent with the highest and heartiest manliness, it is the flower of culture and of kindliness; and at once the stamp and vital principle of practical good-breeding is this chief of all the social virtues, punctiliousness.—Boston Courier.

A SPIDER, as shown by an estimate by means of actually weighing it and then confining in a cage, ate four times its weight for breakfast, nearly nine times its weight for dinner, thirteen times its weight for supper, finishing up with an ounce, and at 8 p. m., when he was released, ran off in search of food. At this rate a man weighing 160 pounds would require the whole of a fat steer for breakfast, the dose repeated with the addition of a half-dozen well-fatted sheep for dinner, and two bullocks, eight sheep and four hogs for supper, and then, as a lunch before going to his club banquet, he would indulge in about four barrels of fresh fish.

Railroad Tie Plantations.

Hon. R. W. Phipps, Forestry Commissioner of Ontario, in a letter from Southern Kansas to the Toronto Globe, writes:

"One railroad board here, knowing that the growing of wood, when set about in earnest, is neither a slow nor a difficult task, has established in Kansas the largest artificial plantation of forest trees in North America. These railway gentlemen themselves gave out the contract for planting over a square mile of land with young saplings of the catalpa and ailanthus, and their president, observing the success of their experiment, and impressed with its probable excellent financial results, has had planted at his own expense, as a speculation, as much more. These are situated near the little town of Farlington, Kan."

Tornado Points Located.

In a report to the French Academy of Sciences of the 172 tornadoes recorded in the United States in 1884, Mons. Faye considers it established that there is a definite portion of an area of low barometer most favorable to tornadoes. The Signal Service reporters are now endeavoring to determine this "dangerous octant" still more accurately. A memorable day in the history of tornadoes was February 19, 1884, when no less than forty-five were recorded in the Southeastern States, attended with a loss of 800 lives, 2,500 injured, 10,000 houses and buildings destroyed, and 15,000 people left homeless.

Curious Request.

Editors are constantly in receipt of curious letters. Here is one of them, sent to the editor of Harper's Magazine the other day. It was a lady who wrote that she was dying, and that her physicians told her she would be dead before the conclusion of Howells' story, "Indian Summer," then running in the Monthly. She was very much interested in it, and did not want to die until she knew how it was going to end, and she begged the editor to let her read the advance sheets, that she might die happy.

She Wanted to Save Time.

Little Alice had been very sick, and was taken by her mother, with her twin sister, to a seaside hotel for a change of air. Here she gained strength rapidly, and her appetite increased so that she was no sooner through one meal than she was looking longingly forward to the next. One day, hearing that her supper would be ready in a few minutes, she turned to her sister and said: "Let's ask a blessing now, Janie, so as not to have to wait when we get to the table."—New York Tribune.

What Locality Is Exempt

From malaria? In city and suburb, village and hamlet, in the mining districts of the West, the bottom lands of the South, in regions teeming with the fruits of husbandry, in trackless wastes inhabited by half-naked savages, it exists. But travelers, sojourners, old settlers, all who are liable to it, can uproot from the system the diseases to which it gives birth, or prevent them, with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. Chills and fever, bilious remittent, dumb ague and ague cake, are each and all overcome by this potent and searching specific. It is not less efficacious for liver complaint, dyspepsia and costiveness, ailments not unfrequently complicated with malarial attacks. Rheumatism, kidney and bladder troubles, and a want of vital strength, are also remediable by it persistent use. Appetite and sleep, always seriously impaired by the nervous disturbance and biliousness consequent upon fever and ague, are invariably restored by the Bitters.

A Gain in Weight

Is very often one of the speedy and gratifying effects resulting from the use of

Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

"Last winter, in consequence of overwork, my system became very much disordered. I suffered from debility, loss of appetite, and indigestion; was nervous, troubled with sleeplessness, lost flesh rapidly, and, before the winter was over, manifested every symptom of a decline. Early in May I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and seemed to improve from the first dose. I continued using this medicine, regularly, for nearly two months, at the end of which time my weight had increased over twenty pounds, and I was in perfect health."—William N. Bowker, Erie, Pa.

"Indigestion and Liver Complaint had so reduced my flesh, health, and strength, two years ago, that I was unable to work. I took six bottles of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and was cured. I am now in better health, and weigh more, than ever before."—J. R. Steele, Worcester, Mass.

For disorders of the Stomach, Liver, and Kidneys, take

Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

DROPSY

TREATED FREE.

DR. H. H. GREEN & SONS, Specialists for Thirteen Years Past, have treated Dropsy and its complications with the most wonderful success; use vegetable remedies, entirely harmless. Remove all symptoms of dropsy in eight to twenty days.

Cure patients pronounced hopeless by the best of physicians.

From the first dose the symptoms rapidly disappear, and in ten days at least two-thirds of all symptoms are removed.

Some may cry humbug without knowing anything about it. Remember, it does not cost you anything to realize the merits of our treatment for yourself. In ten days the difficulty of breathing is relieved, the pulse regular, the urinary organs made to discharge their full duty, sleep is restored, the swelling all or nearly gone, the strength increased, and appetite made good. We are constantly curing cases of long standing—cases that have been tapped a number of times, and the patient declared unable to live a week. Give full history of case. Name sex, how long afflicted, how badly swollen and where, are bowels costive, have legs bursted and dripped water. Send for free pamphlet, containing testimonials, questions, etc.

Ten days' treatment furnished free by mail.

Epilepsy (Fits) positively cured.

Gough's Tribute to Water.

A Wooster, O., correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial Gazette writes. Of all the powerful execrations on rum delivered by the late John B. Gough, the most powerful has never been published. I came across it today. It is in Gough's own hand writing and was delivered by him twenty-six years ago. After its delivery a young law student in the audience, Mr. T. S. Shepard, now a resident of this city, asked the lecturer for his words in writing. Mr. Gough consented on condition that the manuscript should never be published while he was on the lecture platform. The conditions were assented to, and Mr. Gough jotted down the following apostrophe on water and execration on rum as he had delivered them while holding a glass of water in his hand:

"There is no poison in that cup; no fiendish spirit dwells beneath those crystal drops to lure you and me and all of us to ruin; no spectral shadows play upon its waveless surface; no widow's groans or orphan's tears rise to God from those placeid fountains; misery, crime, wretchedness, woe, want, and rags come not within the hallowed precincts where cold water reigns supreme. Pure now as when it left its native heaven, giving vigor to our youth, strength to our manhood, and solace to our old age. Cold water is beautiful and bright and pure everywhere. In the moonlight fountains and the sunny rills; in the warbling brook and the giant river; in the deep, tangled wildwood and the cataract's spray; in the hand of beauty or on the lips of manhood—cold water is beautiful everywhere."

Now follows the execration on rum: "Rum! There is a poison in that cup. There is a serpent in that cup whose sting is madness and whose embrace is death. There dwells beneath that shining surface a fiendish spirit which for centuries has been wandering over the earth, carrying on a war of desolation and destruction against man and blighting and mildewing the noblest affections of the heart and corrupting with its foul breath the tide of human life and changing the glad, green earth into a lazar-house. Gaze on it! But shudder as you gaze! Those sparkling drops are murder in disguise; so quiet now, yet widows' groans and orphans tears and maniacs' yells are in that cup. The worm that dieth not and the fire that is not quenched are in that cup.

"Peace and hope and love and truth dwell not within that fiery circle where dwells that desolating monster whom men call rum. Corrupt now as when it left its native hell, giving fire to the eye, madness to the brain and ruin to soul. Rum is vile and deadly and accursed everywhere. The poet would liken it in its fiery glow to the flames that flicker around the abode of the damned. The theologian would point you to the drunkard's doom, while the historian would unfold the dark record of the past and point you to the fate of empires and kingdoms lured to ruin by the siren song of the tempter, and sleeping now in cold obscurity, the wrecks of what once were great, grand and glorious. Yes, rum is corrupt and vile and deadly accursed everywhere. Fit type and semblance of all earthly corruption!

"Base are thou yet as when the wise man warned us of thy power and bade us flee thy enchantment. Vile art thou yet as when thou first went on thy unholy mission—filling earth with desolation and madness, woe and anguish. Deadly art thou yet as when thy envenomed tooth first took fast hold on human hearts, and thy serpent tongue first drank up the warm life-blood of immortal souls. Accursed art thou yet as when the bones of thy first victim rotted in a damp grave, and its shriek echoed along the gloomy caverns of hell. Yes, thou infernal spirit of rum, through all past time hast thou been, as through all coming time thou shalt be, accursed everywhere

"In the fiery fountains of the still; in the seething bubbles of the caldron; in the kingly palace and the drunkard's hovel; in the rich man's cellar and the poor man's closet; in the pestilential vapor of foul dens, and in the blaze of gilded saloons; in the hand of beauty and on the lips of manhood—rum is vile and deadly and accursed everywhere.

"Rum, we yield not to thy unhallowed influence, and together we have met to plan thy destruction. And by what new name shall we call thee, and of what shall we call thee when we speak of thy attributes. Others may call thee the child of perdition, the base born progeny of sin and satan, the murderer of mankind and the destroyer of human souls; but I this night will give thee with a new name among men and crown thee with a new horror, and that new name shall be the sacramental cup of the rum powers, and I will say to all the sons and daughters of earth—Dash it down! And thou, rum, shall be my text in my pilgrimage among men, and not alone shall my tongue utter it, but the groans of orphans in their agony and the cries of widows in their desolation shall proclaim it the enemy of home the traducer of childhood, and the destroyer of mankind, and whose only antidote is the sacramental cup of temperance—cold water!"

She Won Her Suit.

CHARLOTTE, May 1.—The case of Peacock vs. John April was ended by the jury giving the plaintiff, Mrs. Peacock, $1,342 damages. She brought suit for $10,000 against John April, a saloon keeper in Eaton Rapids, alleging that he sold liquor to her husband from the effects of which he died.

Babyhood.

"Out of respect to the babies," Babyhood for May urges the abolition of tobacco from all parts of the house frequented by young children, and notes a striking instance of the occasional serious effects of tobacco smoke upon infants. In the same number is a contribution from Edward King, Paris, giving some very interesting facts regarding the Baby Show now in progress in that city. Dr. C. L. Dana writes on "Convulsions." Among the various shorter articles are: "An Experience in Home Instruction;" "The Sunday Closet;" "Emergency Drawer;" "The Influences of Motherhood;" "Apt Followers;" "Long Ears;" "Hilarity at Bed-time," etc., etc. Directions are given for various articles of Baby's wardrobe, illustrated. MORTGAGE SALE.

Whereas default has been made in the payment of the money secured by a mortgage dated the 12th day of November, in the year A. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-one, executed by Mary A. Thomas to John Frenz, which mortgage was recorded in the office of the register of deeds, of the county of Charlevoix, in the state of Michigan, in liber 6 of mortgages at page 494, on the 29th day of November, in the year A. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-one, at two o'clock in the afternoon of said day. And whereas, the said mortgage has been duly assigned by the said John Frenz, to Daniel Head, by instrument of assignment bearing date the 10th day of May, in the year A. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-two, and recorded in the office of the register of deeds of said county of Charlevoix, on the 14th day of July in the year A. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-three, at two o'clock in the afternoon of said day, in liber 9 of mortgages, at page 101, and the same is now owned by the said Daniel Head. And whereas the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice, is the sum of Thirteen Hundred and seventy two dollars and seven y cents ($1,372.70), principal and interest, and a further sum of th rty dollars ($30), provided by law as an attorney fee in the foreclosure of said mortgage which is the whole amount claimed to be due and unpaid on said mortgage, and no suit or proceeding at law or in chancery having been instituted to recover the debt now remaining secured by the said mortgage, or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described at public auction to the highest bidder, at the front door of the Town Hall, in the township of South Arm, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, which is the place of holding the circuit court for said county, on Wednesday, the 19th day of May, 1886, at twelve o'clock meridian, which premises are described in the said mortgage as follows, to wit: Lot three (3), and the south one-half (½) of the south west one-quarter (¼) of section seventeen (17), in town six thirty-three (33) north, range seven (7) west, in the county of Charlevoix and state of Michigan, and containing in all one hundred and forty-five and twenty-five one-hundredths acres of land, according to the United States survey thereof, excepting, however, the north one-half (½) of the southwest one-quarter (¼) of the southwest one-quarter (¼) of said section seventeen (17), and also excepting lots number two (2), three (3), four (4), five (5), six (6), seven (7), eight (8), and fifteen (15), in Scholfen's addition to the village of Ironton, according to the recorded plat thereof, which have been released from said mortgage by the assignee thereof.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Whereas, default has been made in the payment of the money secured by a mortgage, made and dated the 4th day of December, in the year A. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-four, by Nancy Hause to the Pine Lake Iron Company, a corporation created and existing under the laws of the state of Illinois, and doing business in the county of Charlevoix, in the state of Michigan, which mortgage was recorded in the office of the register of deeds of the said county of Charlevoix, in Book 9 of mortgages, at page 516, on the 1st day of January, in the year A. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-five, and the said mortgage is now owned by the said Pine Lake Iron Company. And whereas, the said Pine Lake Iron Company, as owner thereof, has exercised and doth now exercise the option to it given in and by said mortgage, and has declared and doth hereby declare the whole amount of principal secured by and mentioned in said mortgage, as well as the interest thereon to be now due and unpaid. And whereas, the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice is the sum of one hundred and fifty-three dollars and ninety cents, ($153.90) principal and int rest, and a further sum of fifteen dollars ($15.00) provided by law as an attorney's fee in the foreclosure of said mortgage, which is the whole amount claimed to be due thereon, and no suit or proceeding at law or in chancery having been instituted to recover the debt now remaining secured by the said mortgage or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained therein has become operative. Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained therein and in pursuance of the statute in such case provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described, at public auction to the highest bidder at the front door of the town hall in the township of South Arm, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, which is the place of holding the circuit court for said county, on Wednesday, the 4th day of August, A. D. 1886, at ten o'clock in the forenoon. which premises are described in said mortgage as lots twenty-six (26) and twenty-seven (27) in block eleven (11) in the Pine Lake Iron Company's plat of Ironton, situate in the township of Eveline, Charlevoix county, Michigan.

Dated May 4th, A. D. 1886.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the condition of a certain mortgage, made by Mary Blackbird to John A. Bacot, dated October 3d, A. D. 1884, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, for the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, on the 3d day of October, A. D. 1884, in liber 8 of mortgages, on page 522, which said mortgage was on the 22d day of December, 1884, assigned by said John A. Bacot to Frederick W. Mayne, said assignment being on record in the Registers office for Charlevoix county, in liber 10 of mortgages on page 616, and on the 14th day of December 1885, was assigned by said Frederick W. Mayne to Hugh Miller said assignment being recorded in the Registers office for Charlevoix county, in liber 13 of mortgages, on page 146, on which mortgage there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of Two hundred dollars, and sixty-five cents, as principal and interest, and no suit or proceedings at law having been instituted to recover the moneys secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof. Now, therefore, by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and the statute in such case made and provided, notice is hereby given that on Saturday, the 19th day of June A. D. 1886, at one o'clock in the afternoon, I shall sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door of the town hall in the village of East Jordan, (that being the place where the Circuit Court for Charlevoix County is holden,) the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the amount due on said mortgage, with ten per cent interest, and all legal costs, together with an attorney's fee of fifteen dollars, covenanted for therein, the premises being described in said mortgage as all that parcel of land, situate in the township of Hayes, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, and known and described as follows: The south west quarter (¼) of the south west quarter (¼) of section thirty-six (36) township thirty four (34) north of range seven (7) west, containing forty acres according to the United States survey.

Lillie, the Child of My Heart.

I took to my bosom a fair little maiden,
My heart with affection for her richly laden;
I thought she'd make earth-like a garden of Eden,
And cheer me, and charm with her innocent wit.
I thought with pure love she would fill my glad hours,
And strew all my pathway with brightness of flowers,
And we could resist the cold world's cruel powers—
'Twas Lillie, dear Lillie, the child of my heart.

The days vanished quickly; not e'en did we borrow
A shadow of trouble, of care, or of sorrow;
And when the day ended we longed for the morrow,
When, in sweet communion, new pleasures would blest,
Thus blest were my moments with youth's rosy morning,
A halo of glory my noonday adorning;
All harrowing grief I could throw off with scorning,
While fling-ring with Lillie, the child of my heart.

But clouds dark and heavy soon gathered around us—
Though earnest and holy the love that enwound us,
And strong were the fetters that steadfastly bound us,
They rudely, relentlessly tore us apart,
The storm-cloud torrent, the lightning's fierce flashes,
So livid and glare, and thunder's loud crashes,
In wild, fearful tempest, that plunges and dashes,
Assailed my dear Lillie, the child of my heart.

My days now are gloomy, my night lone and dreary,
And life passes slowly—I'm sick!—I am weary!
But this I know surely—no question—no query—
That heaven will kindly assuage the keen smart!
And though upon earth I shall never more meet her,
In yon fairer world I shall lovingly meet her,
And O, the bright prospect! Can joy be complete?—
O, Lillie, dear Lillie! sweet child of my heart!

OUR CHILDREN.

Boys and Girls of Two Hundred Years Ago and Those of To-day.

There is a story told of Professor Wilson, that one day, listening to a lecture on education by Dr. Whately, he grew manifestly impatient at the rules laid down, and finally slipped out of the room, exclaiming irately to a friend who followed him, "I always thought God Almighty made man, but he says it was the school-master."

In like manner many of us have wondered from time to time whether children are made of such ductile material, and can be as readily moulded to our wishes, as educators would have us believe. If it be true that nature counts for nothing and training for everything, then what a gap between the boys and girls of two hundred years ago and the boys and girls we know to-day! The rigid bands that once bound the young to decorum have dwindled to a silver thread that snaps under every restive movement. To have "perfectly natural" children seems to be the outspoken ambition of parents who have succeeded in retrograding their offspring from artificial civilization to that pure and wholesome savagery which is evidently their ideal. "It is assumed nowadays," declares an angry critic, "that children have come into the world to make a noise; and it is the part of every good parent to put up with it, and to make all household arrangements with a view to their sole pleasure and convenience."

That the children brought up under this relaxed discipline acquire certain merits and charms of their own is an easily acknowledged fact. We are not now alluding to those spoiled and over-indulged little people who are the recognized scourges of humanity, but merely to the boys and girls who have been allowed from infancy that large degree of freedom which is deemed expedient for enlightened nurseries, and who regulate their own conduct on the vast majority of occasions. They are as a rule lighthearted, truthful, affectionate, and occasionally amusing; but it cannot be denied that they lack that nicety of breeding which was at one time the distinguished mark of children of the upper classes, and which was in a great measure born of the restraints that surrounded them. The faculty of sitting still without fidgeting, of walking without rushing, and of speaking without screaming can be acquired only under tuition; but it is worth some little trouble to attain. When Sydney Smith remarked that the children of rank were generally so much better bred than the children of the middle classes, he recognized the greater need of self-restraint that entered into their lives. They may have been less natural, perhaps, but they were infinitely more pleasing to his fastidious eyes; and the unconscious grace which he admired was merely the reflection of the universal courtesy that surrounded them. Nor is this all. "The necessity of self-repression," says a recent writer in Blackwood, "makes room for thought, which those children miss who have no formality to observe, no customs to respect, who blurt out every irrelevance, who interpose at will with question and opinion as it enters the brain. Children don't learn to talk by chattering to one another, and saying what comes uppermost. Mere listening with intelligence involves an exercise of mental speech, and observant silence opens the pores of the mind as impatient demands for explanations never do."

This is true, inasmuch as it is not the child who is encouraged to talk continually who in the end learns how to arrange and express his ideas. Nor does the fretful desire to be told at once what everything means imply the active mind which parents so fondly suppose; but rather a languid percipience, unable to decipher the simplest causes for itself. Yet where shall we turn to look for the "observant silence," so highly recommended? The young people who observed and were silent have passed away,—little John Ruskin being assuredly the last of the species,—and their places are filled by those to whom observation and silence are alike unknown. This is the children's age, and all things are subservient to their wishes. Masses of juvenile literature are published annually for their amusement; conversation is reduced steadily to their level while they are present; meals are arranged to suit their hours, and the dishes thereof to suit their palates; studies are made simpler and toys more elaborate with each succeeding year. The hardships they once suffered are now happily ended, the decorum once exacted is fading rapidly away. We accept the situation with philosophy, and only now and then, under the pressure of some new development, are startled into asking ourselves where it is likely to end.—Agnes Repplier in April Atlantic.

Japanese Homes.

It is getting to be very embarrassing, this civilization, especially to women. We are accumulating so much, our establishments are becoming so complicated, that daily life is an effort. There are too many "things." Our houses are getting to be museums. A house now is a library, an art gallery, a bric-a-brac shop, a furniture ware-house, a crockery store, combined. It is a great establishment run for the benefit of servants, plumbers, furnace-men, grocers, tinkers. Regarded in one light it is a very interesting place, and in another, it is an eleemosynary institution. We are accustomed to consider it a mark of high civilization; that is to say, the more complicated and over-loaded we make our domestic lives, the more civilized we regard ourselves. Now perhaps we are on the wrong track altogether. Perhaps the way to high civilization is toward simplicity and disentanglement, so that the human being will be less a slave to his surroundings and impedimenta, and have more leisure for his own cultivation and enjoyment. Perhaps life on much simpler terms than we now carry it on with would be on a really higher plane. We have been looking at some pictures of Japanese dwellings, interiors. How simple they are! how little furniture or adornment! how few "things" to care for and be anxious about! Now the Japanese are a very ancient people. They are people of high breeding, polish, refinement. They are in some respects like the Chinese, who have passed through ages and cycles of experience, worn out about all the philosophies and religions then on, and come out on the other side of everything. They have learned to take things rather easily, not to fret, and to get on without a great many encumbrances that we still wearily carry along. When we look at the Japanese houses and at their comparatively simple life, are we warranted in saying that they are behind us in civilization? May it not be true that they have lived through all our experience, and come down to an easy modus vivendi? They may have had their bric-a-brac period, their over-loaded establishment age, their various measles stages of civilization, before they reached a condition in which life is a comparatively simple affair. This thought must strike any one who sees the present Japanese craze in this country. For, instead of adopting the Japanese simplicity in our dwellings, we are adding the Japanese eccentricities to our other accumulations of odds and ends from all creation, and increasing the incongruity and the complication of our daily life. What a helpless being is the housewife in the midst of her treasures! The Drawer has had occasion to speak lately of the recent enthusiasm in this country for the "cultivation of the mind." It has become almost a fashion. Clubs are formed for this express purpose. But what chance is there for it in the increasing anxieties of our more and more involved and over-loaded domestic life? Suppose we have clubs—Japanese clubs they might be called—for the simplification of our dwellings and getting rid of much of our embarrassing menage!—Charles Dudley Warner in Harper's Magazine for April.

Latest Remedy for a Cold.

Here is the latest remedy for a cold. It may be good; it may be useless; but at all events, here it is: Eat no supper. On going to bed and on rising drink a tumblerful of water. For breakfast eat a piece of dry bread as large as your hand. Go out freely during the morning. For dinner eat the same as at breakfast. During the afternoon take a sharp walk, or engage in some exercise that will induce perspiration. Go without supper and retire early. The next morning, if the prescription works, you will be nearly well of the cold, but almost dead of starvation.—Ex.

A Princeton college professor (of political economy) is reported as having said in the course of one of his lectures this week: "It is disgraceful for a public who cannot, without a shudder, see a horse ill-treated, pass by for years and see car-drivers worked seventeen hours out of the twenty-four without registering a protest."

Concise Record of the Week.

EASTERN.

Three boot and shoe factories and an hotel at Natick, Mass., were destroyed by fire, the loss reaching $50,000.

A petition is in circulation in New York asking for the pardon of James D. Fish, ex-President of the Marine Bank. It is said to have been signed by over nine hundred business men.

The business section of Fairview, Pa., was swept away by fire, entailing heavy losses. Thirteen families lost all their household goods, and are homeless. The insurance amounts to $30,000.

Senator Stanford realized from his sale of trotters at New York $84,000, an average of $886.90 each. W. P. Balch, of Boston, paid $2,250 for the gray filly Almacia.

WESTERN.

One of the walls in the Brackett Block, at Minneapolis, Minn., collapsed, burying a number of workmen, four of whom were killed, and seven others dangerously injured.

The famous colt Rapido, of the Baldwin string of California racers, died of lung fever while being brought East by rail.

Engineers of the Central Missouri road are taking soundings for the piers of a Mississippi bridge at Albany, Illinois.

The Coroner's inquest at Chicago on the body of Policeman Degan, killed by the explosion of the Nihilist bomb, resulted in holding Angust and Chris Spies and Michael Schwab of the Arbeiter Zeitung, and Samuel Fielden for murder, and a recommendation was made that A. R. Parsons be arrested and held for trial on the same charge. The negro wife of the latter was captured and confined in the Central Station. The office of the Arbeiter Zeitung, the Nihilist organ, was closed by the police, the type of an incendiary proclamation confiscated, and twenty-five printers connected with the concern were committed for murder. The guns in two socialist armories were taken to police headquarters. The most serious disturbance of the day occurred at the corner of Eighteenth street and Center avenue, where a drug-store and saloon were wrecked by a mob of Bohemians, seven of whom were captured. Officers of the St. Paul and Fort Wayne Roads obtained warrants for the arrest of four men who delayed a mail train at the Madison street viaduct, and one of the number was put in irons by Marshal Marsh. The railway managers, at their daily conference, sent to Chief Ebersold a check for $10,750 for the relief of the wounded policemen, and an equal amount was subscribed by members of the Board of Trade. The chief strike of the day occurred at the Deering Harvester Factory, on the northern boundary line of the city, where 1,784 men quit work because an advance in wages was refused. There are under treatment at the Cook County Hospital twenty-seven police officers and nineteen men arrested as socialists. During the day Officer Michael Madden entered a saloon near the Desplaines street viaduct and attempted to arrest John Lattelhardt, who had just fired a pistol in the air. The prisoner on reaching the door shot Madden through the lungs, and the officer retaliated by sending a ball into the ruffian's head and another into his groin. Both were taken to the hospital mortally wounded. Mayor Harrison issued a proclamation warning people to stay at their homes or places of business, and ordering the dispersal of any large bodies of persons. The striking freight-handlers, at a public meeting, expressed their abhorrence of the murderous methods adopted by the Socialists.

A serious conflict between the militia and socialistic rioters occurred at Milwaukee on the morning of the 5th inst. A vast crowd of Polish Nihilists marched from St. Stanislaus' Church to fight the militia at Bay View. They refused to yield to orders to halt, and were given a volley of bullets. Four men were killed and four others dangerously wounded. The shooting had a terrible effect on the men. Seeing several of their number fall, wounded or killed, they threw themselves flat on the ground, and sought the shelter of the railroad embankment. The level of South Bay street and Lincoln avenue, being higher than the marsh, was also sought by the frantic men, who tumbled headlong into the water. There was every evidence of surrounding objects to show that the militia had fired low, and "with intent to kill" as one of them expressed it. Two thousand socialists congregated at Milwaukee Garden, and listened to harangues by the leaders in the afternoon. The State militia companies were sent to the scene several times, as the gatherings became too demonstrative. Paul Grottkau, the socialist leader and publisher of the Arbeiter Zeitung, was arrested.

SOUTHERN.

At Judsonia, Arkansas, many horses and cattle have been choked to death by inhaling buffalo gnats.

Memphis dispatches state that the floods in the South along the Mississippi showed signs of abatement, but reports showed that plantations on both sides of the river had been overflowed already, and the crops destroyed. The levees in the vicinity of Helena, Arkansas, were patrolled day and night to prevent the negroes cutting holes through them.

Gov. Larrabee of Iowa has issued a proclamation relative to the enforcement of the prohibition law. He calls earnestly upon all temperance societies and other bodies organized for kindred purposes to exercise new energy in assisting the enforcement of the law. Priests, ministers, teachers, and the press are especially urged to use their best efforts to enlist the moral forces of the State in the cause. He says: "Let the Judges, attorneys, and officers of the courts be painstaking and persistent in enforcing the law, both in letter and in spirit. Let the Sheriffs and peace officers be fearless and vigilant, and let the Mayors and all other municipal officers awaken to new zeal in their efforts to secure its observance. I exhort all citizens to lay aside partisan differences and by determined efforts banish the dramshops from Iowa."
